DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL,
Washington, June 28, 1922.

From: The Judge Advocate General of the Navy.

To: The Secretary of the Navy.

1. There is transmitted herewith a compilation of the laws relating to the Navy, Navy Department, and Marine Corps, annotated, which has been prepared by Mr. George Melling, attorney in this office, by authority of the Secretary of the Navy, pursuant to the following resolution of the United States Senate, adopted March 30, 1914:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to prepare and submit to the Senate at its next regular session, or as soon thereafter as practicable, a compilation, with complete index, of existing laws relating to the Navy, Navy Department, and Marine Corps, with annotations showing how such laws have been construed and applied by the Navy Department, the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Attorney General, or the courts, the cost of said compilation, not to exceed $3,000, to be covered by appropriations to be reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

2. It is recommended that this compilation be published for the information of the naval service, with the understanding that no inference of departmental construction is to be drawn from the arrangement of the laws and cross references embodied therein, or from the inclusion or omission of a particular enactment, and that no added weight is given to any decision or opinion by reason of its inclusion.

J. L. LATIMER.

PREFACE.

This compilation is divided into three parts, in addition to an introduction briefly explaining the sources of the law governing the Navy and certain elementary rules for the interpretation of statutes.

Part 1 contains the full text of the Constitution of the United States and all amendments thereto, with digested decisions and opinions of especial interest to the Navy, and an analytical index reproduced from official documents.

Part 2 consists of the sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the Navy, Navy Department, and Marine Corps, numerically arranged, as published in the second edition of the Revised Statutes¹ and subsequent amendments to and including March 4, 1921. The annotations to these sections contain references to related statutes, as well as digests of decisions and opinions on the same subject.

Part 3 embodies acts and resolutions of Congress in force March 4, 1921, which are not contained in the Revised Statutes, and which have been reprinted from the United States Statutes at Large.² Many of these laws are quoted or summarized in Part 2, in connection with sections of the Revised Statutes to which they relate; but they have nevertheless been placed in their chronological order in Part 3, except where they expressly amend or reenact particular sections of the Revised Statutes or subsequent enactments, in which case they have in general been reproduced in the place of the provision for which substituted, without needless duplication. In Part 3 the annotations consist principally of cross references to sections of the Revised Statutes and other enactments on the same subject which have been more fully annotated.

This arrangement of the compilation will make it possible for those using it most frequently to turn to a particular section of the Revised Statutes or to an act or resolution of a particular date, with which they are familiar, without the necessity of consulting the index on every occasion; while related statutes may also be readily located, from the cross references, without recourse to the index. Furthermore, the sections of the Revised Statutes are grouped, as in the official publication, under descriptive titles³ and chapter headings which will also facilitate the use of the compilation without constant reference to the index. At the same time, no effort has been spared to make the index as complete as possible.

It was naturally impracticable to annotate fully every provision of law contained in the compilation, as that would have produced a work so voluminous as to defeat its purpose. In this situation, certain sections have been annotated copiously, and others more briefly or not at all, to the end that the compilation might embody the material which, in the light of past experience, was believed to be of greatest value.

In not a few instances conflicting opinions have been rendered as to the interpretation of some statutory provision concerning which there has been no final adjudication. In such cases the various opinions expressed on the subject have been digested without regard to their effect, so that all precedents might be available for consideration should the question again arise.

In order that the compilation might be found useful by those not trained in the law or not having access to the decisions cited therein, the digests have been stripped of technical language wherever possible, and made as full as space would permit, even to the point, in some instances, of reproducing nearly the entire decision, contrary to the usual practice in works of this character. Other decisions which were not of general interest, or which were merely cumulative, have been cited without any digest of the particular case.

It has been found necessary to include in the compilation some few statutory provisions which were possibly not in force on March 4, 1921, but which had not been expressly repealed and as to the existence of which there was such doubt that their omission would have been unwarranted in the absence of a definite ruling on the subject. Other provisions which were expressly repealed or plainly superseded by later enactments have been omitted or, when of possible historical value, have been included with explanatory notes.

An incomplete advance copy of the compilation, which was issued in pamphlet form in 1915, has been revised and embodied in the finished work.

Certain abbreviations used in citations throughout the compilation are explained in the Introduction.⁴ Other citations which may require explanation are the following: "R. S." refers to the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition; "Stat." refers to the United States Statutes at Large; "Comp. Dec." refers to decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury; "Op. Atty. Gen." refers to opinions of the Attorneys General; "C. M. O." refers to court-martial orders published by the Navy Department; "S. and A. Memo." refers to memoranda published monthly by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy Department; "Naval Dig." refers to a digest published by the Navy Department in 1916; file numbers refer to papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Navy.

 - IV. DECISIONS OF COURTS, OPINIONS OF LAW OFFICERS OF THE GOVERNMENT, REGULATIONS, ETC.
 - V. CLASSIFICATION OF STATUTES.
 - VI. THE INTERPRETATION AND CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

The law governing the Navy is contained principally in the Constitution of the United States, the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the United States Statutes at Large. In addition there is a large mass of naval law to be found in the decisions of courts, opinions of law officers of the Government, regulations issued with the express or implied approval of the President, and customs and usages of the Navy.

I. THE CONSTITUTION.

The Constitution consists of seven original articles, drafted in 1787, and nineteen articles in amendment thereof which have since been adopted. It is provided by the original Constitution (Art. VI) that "this Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

Congress is authorized by the Constitution "to provide and maintain a Navy," and "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces" (Art. I, sec. 8). These clauses of the Constitution are the authority for most of the statutory enactments relating to the Navy, although other less explicit clauses of the Constitution impliedly authorize legislation either directly or indirectly governing the Navy.

II. THE REVISED STATUTES.

The Revised Statutes “embrace the statutes of the United States general and permanent in their nature, in force on the 1st day of December, 1873, as revised and consolidated by commissioners appointed under an act of Congress.”¹

The “Revised Statutes” is one act of Congress, over a thousand pages in length, entitled “An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, in force on the first day of December, anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three”; it commences with the usual clause, “Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,” contains 5,601 sections, bears the approval of the President dated June 22, 1874, and provides that it “shall be designated and cited, as The Revised Statutes of the United States.”¹

The main object of the revision was to incorporate all the existing statutes in a single volume, that all persons desiring to know the written law upon any subject might learn it by an examination of that volume without the necessity of referring to prior statutes upon the subject.² Accordingly it was provided by the Revised Statutes that “all acts of Congress passed prior to said first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, any portion of which is embraced in any section of said revision, are hereby repealed and the section applicable thereto shall be in force in lieu thereof; all parts of such acts not contained in such revision, having been repealed or superseded by subsequent acts, or not being general and permanent in their nature.”³ However, it is further provided by the Revised Statutes that “all acts of Congress passed prior to said last-named day [December 1, 1873] no part of which are embraced in said revision, shall not be affected or changed by its enactment”;³ and it is permissible, when necessary, to refer to the original statutes as an aid to the interpretation of sections of the Revised Statutes where the meaning of the latter is not plain.

The first edition of the Revised Statutes was published in 1874, pursuant to an act of Congress approved June 20th of that year;⁴ it is a transcript of the original Revised Statutes as enacted by Congress and approved by the President, and which is preserved in the Department of State.⁵ A great many errors and omissions were discovered in the Revised Statutes after the publication of the first edition, and several hundreds of such errors were corrected in subsequent acts of Congress.⁶

A second edition of the Revised Statutes was published in 1878, having been prepared by a commissioner appointed under authority of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1877.⁷ This second edition “is not in any proper sense a new revision of the statutes of the United States. The commissioner was not clothed with power to change the substance or to alter the language of the existing edition of the Revised Statutes, nor could he correct any errors or supply any omissions therein except as authorized by the several statutes of amendment. Of specific amendments there are, however, several hundred, which have been incorporated with the text. The portions of the statutes repealed are printed in italics and included in brackets, and the new matter introduced is printed in the ordinary roman letter and also included in brackets."¹ This form has been followed in the present compilation, which is based on the second edition of the Revised Statutes, being the edition now in general use. (See, for example, sec. 284 of the Revised Statutes, as printed herein.)

This second edition of the Revised Statutes is only a new publication; a compilation containing the original Revised Statutes with specific amendments afterwards made by Congress and incorporated therein according to the judgment of the editor.²

By direction of Congress there was published, as part of the second edition, the Articles of Confederation, the Declaration of Independence, the Ordinance of 1787 for the Government of the Northwestern Territory, the Constitution of the United States with footnotes referring to decisions of the Federal courts thereon, the "act to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States," approved June 27, 1866, the "act providing for publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States," approved June 20, 1874, and the "act to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved March 2, 1877. There is also published an act amending the act last cited, approved March 9, 1878.

"Titles" in the Revised Statutes.—The Revised Statutes is divided into 74 "titles," which titles when of sufficient length are subdivided into "chapters." Title I, which is in two chapters, contains "General Provisions," dealing with "definitions," and "form of statutes and effect of repeals"; continuing, the various titles cover "The Congress" (Title II); "The President" (Title III); the "Executive Departments," collectively and separately (Titles IV to XII); "The Judiciary" (Title XIII); "The Army" (Title XIV); "The Navy" (Title XV); "The Militia" (Title XVI); and so on to Title LXXIV, which contains "Repeal Provisions."

It is provided by the Revised Statutes that "the arrangement and classification of the several sections of the revision have been made for the purpose of a more convenient and orderly arrangement of the same, and therefore no inference or presumption of a legislative construction is to be drawn by reason of the Title under which any particular section is placed."³ Thus, for example, section 1428 of the Revised Statutes, which appears under Title XV, "The Navy," provides that "the officers of vessels of the United States shall in all cases be citizens of the United States." The law from which this section is taken did not relate to the Navy, and no inference of a "legislative construction" could be drawn by reason of this clause being placed in the revision under the title mentioned. That is to say, the mere fact that this section is placed under the title relating to the Navy is not to be taken to mean that Congress regarded this law as applicable to the Navy, and intended it to be so construed. However, upon other considerations this section has been held to require that officers of vessels of the Navy must be citizens of the United States the same as officers of private vessels of the United States.¹ (The same provision is repeated in section 4131, Revised Statutes, under the title, "Regulation of Commerce and Navigation.")

Marginal notes.²—The first edition of the Revised Statutes, by direction of Congress contained marginal notes referring to the statutes from which each section was compiled. Thus, under Title X, "The Department of the Navy," will be found section 415 which provides that "there shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department, to be known as the Department of the Navy, and a Secretary of the Navy, who shall be the head thereof." After this section appears the following note: "30 April, 1798, c. 35, s. 1, v. 1, p. 553." This note means that section 415 was based on the act of Congress approved April 30, 1798, chapter 35, section 1, which act is published in volume 1 of the Statutes at Large, page 553. By reference to the volume and page cited will be found the original law establishing the Department of the Navy.

Many sections of the Revised Statutes were compiled from several acts of Congress, in which cases the marginal notes are more copious; as, for example, section 161, concerning "Departmental regulations, property, and records," the notes to which section refer to nine acts of Congress, all of which must be examined if it is desired to trace the history of the section.

These marginal notes can not in all cases be accepted as correct, as in some instances erroneous references are given. Thus, the note to section 285 of the Revised Statutes cites volume 19, instead of volume 9, of the Statutes at Large for the original law upon which this section of the revision was based. Nor do the marginal notes in all cases furnish a complete history of the legislation, as for example, section 1422 of the Revised Statutes, which cites an act passed in 1862 as its earliest authority, whereas a similar statute was enacted March 2, 1837. (5 Stat., 153.)

In the second edition of the Revised Statutes the original marginal references are preserved, with additional notes incorporated pursuant to instructions given by Congress and referring to acts passed subsequent to the period covered by the revision, which either expressly amend same or which, in the opinion of the commissioner, "may in any manner affect or modify any of the provisions of the said Revised Statutes or any of the amendments thereto." References to statutes of this kind were expressly directed by Congress to be indicated in the marginal notes by a difference in type. Thus, referring again to section 161, the last act cited in the marginal notes thereto is "15 Aug., 1876, c. 287, s. 3, v. 18, p. 169," italics being used to distinguish this reference from those contained in the marginal notes which appeared in the first edition under the same section and which are repeated in the second edition in roman letters.

² In this compilation (pt. 2) the marginal notes are reprinted from the second edition of the Revised Statutes, but appear in parentheses immediately following the text, instead of in the margin.

The marginal notes are not only of historical value, but frequently are important in interpreting sections of the Revised Statutes, where it becomes necessary to refer to the original law in order to ascertain the meaning of ambiguous language occurring in the revision.¹

III. THE STATUTES AT LARGE.

The Statutes at Large consist at this writing of 41 volumes, extending from March 4, 1789, to March 4, 1921. The laws contained in the first 17 volumes are practically superseded by the Revised Statutes, and occasions for reference to said volumes will ordinarily be infrequent. The remaining volumes, however, commencing with December 1, 1873, must always be consulted in connection with the Revised Statutes in order to ascertain whether any particular section of the revision has been repealed, superseded, amended, or otherwise affected by subsequent enactments. More than a thousand sections of the revision have thus been modified by various later statutes, in addition to which a "Criminal Code" and a "Judicial Code" have been enacted, revising and superseding the sections of the Revised Statutes as well as subsequent laws on those subjects.

An "Index Analysis of the Federal Statutes," from 1789 to 1907, was published by authority of Congress in 1908, and this will be found invaluable in locating the sections of the Revised Statutes on any subject and amendatory acts contained in volumes 18 to 34 of the Statutes at Large. For later enactments reference must be had to the official index contained in each volume of the Statutes at Large, with the assistance where available of unofficial publications, such as the "United States Compiled Statutes," the "Federal Statutes Annotated," the "United States Statute Citer-Digest," etc., to which publications supplements are issued periodically, keeping the various works practically up to date.

IV. DECISIONS OF COURTS, OPINIONS OF LAW OFFICERS OF THE GOVERNMENT, REGULATIONS, ETC.

Authoritative decisions and opinions of the Federal courts and law officers expounding the law contained in the Revised Statutes and the Statutes at Large become, in effect, a part of the various laws which have been the subject of such decisions and must be carefully consulted if it is desired to know definitely what the law is on any given subject. Thus, let it be supposed that the question is, What law authorizes the retirement of warrant officers of the Navy for physical disability? An examination of the Revised Statutes and Statutes at Large will not disclose any law specifically covering the point at issue. Turning, then, to the decisions of the courts, we find that the question was considered by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Brown v. United States,² and that it was there held to be doubtful whether the retirement of warrant officers for physical disability was authorized by law, but that the court decided to adopt the decision of the Navy Department that warrant officers, the same as commissioned officers, should be retired under sections 1448 to 1455, Revised Statutes. The result of this decision is that the sections cited include warrant officers the same as if they had been specifically mentioned therein by Congress.

Decisions of the United States Supreme Court of course rank first among the Federal authorities, and these are published officially in what are known as the United States Reports, although the earlier volumes are known and commonly cited by the names of the official reporters, viz, Dallas, Cranch, Wheaton, Peters, Howard, Black, Wallace, and Otto. Thus, "1 Pet., 100," would mean volume 1 of Peters's reports of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, page 100. The official publications of later decisions of the Supreme Court are cited simply as "U. S." Thus "200 U. S., 100," would mean volume 200 of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, page 100.

Decisions of Inferior Federal courts come next, and these may be found in the Federal Cases, cited as "Fed. Cas.," and extending from 1789 to 1880; and the Federal Reporter, cited as "Fed. Rep." or "Fed.," and extending from 1880 to date; both of which reports, although unofficial publications, are generally consulted and cited by lawyers and courts, the official publications of the same decisions being of more limited circulation. These reports, however, do not include the decisions of the Court of Claims, which are published officially in what are known as the Court of Claims Reports, cited as "Ct. Cls." or "C. Cls.," and contain a particularly large number of decisions of importance to the Army and Navy.¹

The Attorney General being the chief law officer of the Government, his official opinions, which are published by authority of Congress, come next in order after decisions of the Federal courts in the interpretation of Federal statutes and the application of judicial decisions relating thereto. Other opinions and decisions are published by different departments of the Government, such as the Decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, Decisions of the Department of the Interior, Decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, etc.

Decisions of State courts also contain many cases relating to naval law, which, while not controlling upon the Federal Government, are usually regarded as instructive and accorded more or less weight, in the consideration of similar questions, where not in conflict with any Federal authority.

Short-cuts to these decisions are to be found in the digests and indexes published in connection therewith, and in legal encyclopedias, text-books, and unofficial indexes and digests. Among the latter the most important is the "American Digest," which contains in accessible form a complete digest of all reported decisions of American courts, commencing with the year 1658 and kept practically up to date by new editions and supplements. Of value in this connection are the unofficial reports of leading cases, published with notes, in which are collected important decisions bearing upon the points discussed, such as the "Lawyers Reports Annotated," cited as "L. R. A.," the "American and English Annotated Cases," cited as "Ann. Cas.," etc. Also should be mentioned what are known as "Shepard's Citations," which enable the lawyer to trace the decisions in which a particular case has been cited, affirmed, followed, distinguished, reversed, etc. Of these, "Shepard's United States Citations," and "Shepard's Federal Citations" are the ones to be consulted in connection with decisions of the Federal courts.

Regulations and customs and usages of the Navy, where approved by Congress, or not in conflict with any statutory enactment, have the force of law and are so regarded by the courts. For reference to the authorities relating to this subject, and bearing particularly upon the force and effect of Navy Regulations, Naval Instructions, usages of the Navy, etc., see notes to sections 161 and 1547 of the Revised Statutes, published in this compilation.

V. CLASSIFICATION OF STATUTES.

A great many classifications of statutes have been adopted and are of importance in connection with rules to be applied to their interpretation. Of the different classes the following may be mentioned and briefly explained:

A declaratory statute is one which merely declares or affirms what is already the existing law by established custom or by constitutional or statutory provision. Thus, by section 1458 of the Revised Statutes, under the title "The Navy," it was provided that "the next officer in rank shall be promoted to the place of a retired officer, according to the established rules of the service;" by various laws referring to different classes of officers of the Navy it is required that they pass prescribed examinations prior to promotion, although a general requirement to the same effect is contained in sections 1493 and 1496 of the Revised Statutes; by act of August 22, 1912,¹ it is provided that the President may mitigate or remit disabilities imposed by law upon convicted deserters from the Navy, a power which he already possessed and exercised under the Constitution; and by sections 177 to 182 of the Revised Statutes the President is empowered to make temporary designation of an officer to perform the duties of the head of a department or bureau in case of the death, resignation, absence or sickness of the incumbent, although prior to the enactment of the law now contained in those sections it had been held by the Attorney General that this power was possessed and properly exercised by the President under the Constitution. In that case, however, the Attorney General said that "a general provision of law is desirable to remove all doubt on the subject,"² and this is the principal value of all such declaratory statutes.

Public and private acts.—Of "public" and "private" statutes it has been said that "the former embrace the whole community; the latter only certain individuals or associations. The only important distinction is that courts take notice of the former without special reference, but not of the latter. It is usual, however, to do away with this distinction, by inserting in private statutes a special clause declaring that they shall be treated as public."³

Special or private acts are rather exceptions than rules; being those which operate only upon particular persons and private concerns, the judges are not bound to take notice unless they be formally shown and pleaded.⁴

Co.* (192 U. S., 524); Young v. Bark (4 Cranch, 384, 388); Gardner v. Collector (6 Wall., 499, 508).

⁴ 11 Enc. U. S. Rep., 71; Unity v. Burrage (103 U. S., 447, 454); People v. Wright (70 Ill., 388, 398).

"In this country the disposition has been, on the whole, to enlarge the limits of the class of public acts, and to bring within it all enactments of a general character, or which in any way affect the community at large."¹

Congress has provided that "the term 'private bill' shall be construed to mean all bills for the relief of private parties, bills granting pensions, bills removing political disabilities, and bills for the survey of rivers and harbors."²

A penal statute, as the name implies, is one which imposes a penalty. This class embraces all such statutes as provide for the punishment of offenses against the State and which are within the pardoning power of the Executive.³ In a broader sense the term includes acts which are penal in their nature, although not enforceable by a criminal prosecution.⁴ A statute providing that no officer or enlisted man of the Army shall receive pay for time absent from duty on account of misconduct is in the nature of a penal statute and must be construed strictly;⁵ but one requiring that officers of the Navy who are found unfit for promotion from causes arising from their own misconduct shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay, is not a penal statute,⁶ as it was not intended for the punishment of such officers, but primarily to promote the efficiency of the service.

A remedial statute is one which is beneficial in its nature, intended to redress some existing grievance, to introduce some new regulation or proceeding conducive to the public good, or to supply defects of the law arising from mistake, change of circumstances, etc.⁷ Thus a law providing for the reappointment and retirement of a former officer of the Navy is remedial,⁸ as are laws providing for the removal of the charge of desertion standing on the records of the Army or Navy against certain classes of persons who served in the Civil War,⁹ laws authorizing the issuance of discharge certificates in true name to persons who enlisted under assumed names, etc.; also a statute providing for extensions of enlistments by men in the Navy.¹⁰

A mandatory statute is one which absolutely requires strict compliance with its terms, so that official acts not done in the manner it prescribes are null and void.¹¹

A directory statute is one intended merely "for the guide of officers in the conduct of business devolved upon them, which" does "not limit their power or render its exercise in disregard of the [statutory] requisitions ineffectual. Such generally are [statutory] regulations designed to secure order, system, and dispatch in proceedings, and by a disregard of which the rights of parties interested can not be injuriously affected."¹²

A prospective statute is one which applies to future cases and conditions.

A retrospective statute is one which applies to and operates upon a past state of facts. A retrospective statute affecting and changing vested rights is very generally considered in this country as founded on unconstitutional principles and consequently inoperative and void.¹

A curative statute is a retrospective law ordinarily passed to validate irregularities in legal proceedings, or to give effect to contracts which might otherwise fall for failure to comply with technical legal requirements.² Curative acts may also be embraced in the remedial class.

"The power which can direct what proceedings shall be had can approve and make valid any proceedings which are actually taken. The power which can give authority to act can ratify any act that is taken, and generally legislative recognition of an act or a corporation validates the act or the corporation, although neither one nor the other may have had full prior legal authority."³

E. CONSTRUCTION OF PARTICULAR STATUTES.

A. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

A distinction has been drawn between the words "interpretation" and "construction," the former being held to mean the reading of a statute according to its letter, while the latter is defined to be the reading of a statute according to its spirit and intent;⁴ it being said that "the very essence of construction is the extension of the meaning of a statute beyond its letter."⁵ In practice, however, this distinction is not always observed, the terms frequently being used interchangeably.

"On the abstract principles which govern courts in construing legislative acts, no difference of opinion can exist. It is only in the application of those principles that the difference discovers itself."⁶ It has been said that "there are many rules of interpretation, but they are of little use; common sense is the best guide."⁷ It has also been said that "it is perfectly possible to make almost anything out of a tariff act by construction without violating rules for the interpretation of statutes,"⁸ and that "when justices of the United States Supreme Court (or of any other court) divide on a question of statutory construction, the minority rarely have difficulty in finding well-settled rules of interpretation to support their dissent."¹ However, the rules by which courts are guided in construing statutes are sanctioned by wisdom and experience,² of which they are the outgrowth; an examination of these rules will show that "common sense" is generally their foundation; and in cases where different rules, if applied, would lead to opposite results in construing a statute, ordinarily little difficulty will be experienced in determining which of the rules must yield in the particular case, resort being had under such circumstances to the many aids to interpretation sanctioned by precedent. In involved cases, where several statutes are passed at different times relating to the same subject, the provisions of which to the uninitiated may appear to be hopelessly at variance, application of established principles of construction will generally serve to evolve a systematic and harmonious legislative scheme from the whole.

However, regardless of individual opinions as to the value of rules of construction, it is certain that a knowledge of the fundamental principles and their application is necessary if it is desired to construe a law with reasonable assurance that the result reached will likely be sustained by a court, if later called upon judicially to construe the same statute; for if the construction placed upon a law can not be sustained by any established canon of statutory construction, it is apparent that such construction will have difficulty in prevailing against established rules if attacked in a court by which such rules will certainly be applied.

The principles stated in the following pages are well established. Generally, illustrative cases have been mentioned or cited, but the decisions in which the different rules of construction have been applied are so numerous and the circumstances so varied that to attempt more than a bare outline would be beyond the scope of this introduction.

B. THE LEGISLATIVE INTENT TO BE GIVEN EFFECT.

The first rule to be observed in construing statutes is that if possible an act is to be so construed as to effectuate the legislative intent. This has been called "the cardinal rule of construction."³

1. What is the legislative intent.—The "legislative intent" does not mean the intention of the person who drafted the law, nor the intention of the individual member who introduced it in the legislative body, but the intention of the legislature as a whole. The purpose of the majority who voted for the passage of the law may have been entirely different from that of the particular individuals who proposed it or who may have been interested in securing its enactment. Accordingly it is established by the authorities that the intention of the individual by whom a statute was framed can not be considered in determining the meaning of such statute.⁴

Gen., 472, in which it was stated: "It was unnecessary to quote a judicial decision for the purpose of proving that all written laws are to be construed according to the intention of the legislature, for that is a fundamental principle which nobody denies."

2. The courts always presume that the legislature acts advisedly and with full knowledge of the situation.¹ "We must assume that the members by whose vote the act became a law fully weighed its meaning and intended what it expressed."² Thus, in prohibiting heads of departments, other than the Attorney General, from employing attorneys or counsel at the expense of the United States, Congress is presumed to have contemplated, inasmuch as ships of war are constantly on the high seas and in foreign ports, that questions of law would arise in respect to them in the administration of the Navy Department, and accordingly intended to include the employment of counsel in foreign countries within the prohibition of the statute.³ And in construing a statute providing for the distribution of prize money and authorizing payment of a specified bounty where the enemy's vessel was "of equal or superior force," it was held that the court could not suppose that Congress overlooked the fact that an enemy's vessel might be supported by land batteries, mines, and torpedoes, and accordingly that "the enemy's vessel" did not mean the enemy's vessel and the land batteries, mines, and torpedoes by which it was supported.⁴

3. It is the intent of the legislature, as expressed in the law itself and apparent upon its face, that must govern its construction if that intent can reasonably be gathered from its terms.⁵

4. Where the language of the statute is plain and unambiguous, "the legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed," and there is no need to resort to rules of construction to get at the intent and meaning of the law.⁶ "Legislative enactments, where the language is unambiguous, can not be changed by construction, nor can the language be divested of its plain and obvious meaning."⁷

5. It is the province of courts to construe laws and not to make them; accordingly, considerations of injustice, inconvenience, and absurdity which may result from interpreting a statute according to its letter, where clear and unambiguous, must be addressed to the legislature.⁸ Where great inconvenience will result from a particular construction, that construction is to be avoided, unless the meaning of the legislature be plain; in which case it must be obeyed.⁹ It is only where the proper construction is otherwise doubtful that arguments based on the inconvenience, injustice, or prejudice to the public interests resulting from a proposed construction may be considered.¹⁰ "It is, however, an adamant rule of interpretation that the intention of the legislature is to be gathered from the words of the statute; and where the phraseology admits of no doubt, the definitely expressed meaning must be recognized, notwithstanding the statute as thus construed may be deemed irrational legislation."¹ The province of a court "is to declare what the law is, and not, under the guise of interpretation, or under the influence of what may be surmised to be the policy of the Government, so to depart from sound rules of construction as in effect to adjudge that to be law which Congress has not enacted as such."²

6. The spirit and purpose of the act are not to be lost sight of in a strict adherence to its letter;³ for "a thing which is within the intention of the makers of a statute is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter; and a thing which is within the letter of the statute is not within the statute unless it be within the intention of the makers."⁴ The classical precedent commonly cited by courts on this point is the case in which a statute prohibiting the drawing of blood in the streets of Bologna was held not to apply to a surgeon who drew blood in treating a patient suddenly taken ill in the street, although literally construed he was subject to its penalties. Similarly a statute providing that a prisoner who broke prison should be held guilty of a felony would not be applied by the court to a prisoner who broke out of prison when it was on fire; "for he is not to be hanged because he would not stay to be burnt." These cases were quoted by the Supreme Court of the United States in holding that a police officer who arrested a mail carrier upon a charge of murder, while the mail carrier was on duty, was not guilty of a crime in delaying the mails although he thereby violated the letter of a Federal statute.⁵

A leading case on this point is Holy Trinity Church v. United States.⁶ The statute prohibited the importation of aliens under a contract to perform labor in this country. Certain classes of persons, such as actors, artists, lecturers, etc., were expressly excepted from the prohibition of the statute, but ministers were not so excepted. It was nevertheless held by the court that the intent of the law was not to include ministers in its prohibition, and accordingly that the bringing of a minister to this country under contract was not prohibited by the statute, although within its letter. "The operation of such a statute must be restrained within narrower limits than its words import, if the court is satisfied that the literal meaning of its language would extend to cases which the legislature never intended to include in it."⁷

So also the meaning of the legislature may be extended beyond the precise words used in the law, from the reason or motive upon which the legislature proceeded, from the end in view, or the purpose which was designed; the limitation of the rule being that to extend the meaning to any case not included within the words, the case must be shown to come within the same reason upon which the lawmaker proceeded, and not merely a like reason.⁸ Thus the words "assistant surgeons," as used in the Navy personnel act of March 3,

1899, were construed to include passed assistant surgeons, in order to effectuate the intent of the law.¹

These principles must be cautiously applied, and can not be extended to the point where, under the guise of construction, the power of legislation is attempted to be exercised. The cases in which the letter of the statute is not deemed controlling "are few and exceptional, and only arise where there are cogent reasons for believing that the letter does not fully and accurately disclose the intent. No mere omission, no mere failure to provide for contingencies, which it may seem wise to have specifically provided for, justify any judicial addition to the language of the statute."² "It is not for the courts to tamper with the words of a statute, or by a strained construction of legislative enactments, the language of which is clear and explicit, to accomplish results not contemplated by Congress."³ Where a provision is omitted from a statute, either by design, mistake, or oversight of the legislature, the courts have no power to supply it where the language used is clear and unambiguous.⁴ "It is better to submit to a temporary inconvenience than to set the laws all afloat by laying down a canon of construction which leaves the plain words and seeks to spell out, or guess at, the supposed intent of the legislature, contrary or supplementary to that which is clearly embodied in the words it has used."⁵ The principle that a thing may be within the intent of the law, though without the letter, does not warrant including a thing which has been omitted by Congress, because of the conjecture that, had the case been foreseen, Congress would have embraced it within the intent.⁶ Accordingly, where the law empowered the Secretary of the Navy to remit or mitigate the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial, although the statute was plainly intended to confer upon the Secretary authority over all sentences imposed by courts-martial upon persons in the naval service under his jurisdiction, it was decided that he was without authority to remit or mitigate the sentence imposed by an Army court-martial upon an enlisted man of the Marine Corps while serving with the Army but restored to naval jurisdiction prior to execution of the sentence; and that action of the President in such case was necessary.⁷

With reference to criminal cases, it has been held that "it would be dangerous, indeed, to carry the principle that a case which is within the reason or mischief of a statute is within its provisions, so far as to punish a crime not enumerated in the statute because it is of equal atrocity or of kindred character with those which are enumerated."⁸

C. HOW LEGISLATIVE INTENT IS TO BE ASCERTAINED.

As already stated, the legislative intent is to be ascertained from the law itself, where the language is clear and unambiguous. In cases where the language used is ambiguous, and only in such cases, resort may be had to extrinsic aids to interpretation, which will be briefly considered below, under Section VI, D, "Aids to interpretation of ambiguous statutes." First as to the principles which govern in ascertaining the legislative intent from the law itself:

1. Law must be construed as a whole.—"In the exposition of statutes the established rule is that the intention of the lawmaker is to be deduced from a view of the whole statute, and every material part of the same."¹ "The whole statute must be examined. Single sentences and single provisions are not to be selected and construed by themselves, but the whole must be taken together."² "Every part of a statute must be construed in connection with the whole, so as to make all the parts harmonious if possible, and to give meaning to each."³ It may be necessary to consider every part of an act in its effect upon other parts in order to arrive at a construction that will be effective.⁴ In case of repugnancy between two provisions in a statute, the one general and the other specific, the latter will prevail, unless a contrary intent is plain.⁵

2. Effect to be given to every word.—Every word used in a statute is presumed to have a separate and independent meaning of its own.⁶ Congress is not to be presumed to have used words for no purpose.⁷ Accordingly words can not be construed as redundant and rejected as surplusage where it is possible to give them full effect,⁸ but may be rejected when they can not be given effect.⁹ And this rule requires that effect be given to every word of a penal statute.¹⁰ "It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that significance and effect shall if possible be accorded to every word."¹¹ But where, from excess of caution or in accordance with custom, several words of similar import have been used in the same connection in a statute, as is frequently the case, it is not required that some new meaning be given to the superfluous words, the general rule being inapplicable under such circumstances.¹² And it is not necessary to give every word its exact signification as an independent word, if that signification be inconsistent with other words and other parts of the statute, the first and controlling rule being to ascertain what the legislature intended, as indicated by all the provisions on the same subject matter, harmoniously construed as far as possible; and accordingly single words must sometimes yield their restricted meaning to a more general signification and greater comprehensiveness, if necessary to carry out the manifest will of the lawmaking power.¹³

3. Words presumed to have been used in their ordinary sense.—Where the language of a statute is free from ambiguity, words must be given their usually accepted meaning.¹⁴ "The popular or received import of words furnishes the general rule for the interpretation of public laws as well as of private and social transactions.”¹ When a statute uses a technical term which is known and its meaning clearly ascertained by the common or civil law, from whichever it is taken, it is proper to refer to that law for its meaning.² The term “beyond seas” in a statute must receive the legal interpretation usually given to it, unless there be an indication to the contrary;³ and the word “enlistment,” where used in its technical significance in an act relating to the Army, does not apply to a cadet, who is not an enlisted man.⁴ Where the legislature makes use of a word having a well-defined technical meaning, it is presumed to use the word in its technical sense in the absence of an indication to the contrary in the statute.⁴ The general rule is that the same word is used with the same meaning wherever it occurs in an act;⁵ but where necessary to harmonize the different provisions of a statute, a different meaning may be given to the same word in different parts of a statute.⁶ The same words as used in different statutes may have different meanings; but the presumption is otherwise.⁷ “A word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged, it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used.”⁸

4. General words may be restricted by context.—“There is no mode by which the meaning affixed to any word or sentence, by a deliberative body, can be so well ascertained as by comparing it with the words and sentences with which it stands connected.”⁹ This principle is known as “noscitur a sociis,” which means the interpretation of a word or phrase by reference to other words with which it is associated.¹⁰

The most common application of this principle occurs where several classes of persons or things are specifically enumerated in a statute, and immediately following and classed with such enumeration the clause embraces “other” persons or things, as is done, for example, throughout the Articles for the Government of the Navy.¹¹ In such cases the particular application of this principle is known as the “ejusdem generis” rule, in accordance with which the word “other” will generally be read as “other such like,” and persons and things therein comprised thus restricted to the same genus or class as those specifically enumerated instead of being extended to include such as are of a superior or different quality or class.¹² Thus, in an early case, it was held by the Supreme Court that the words “other place” appearing in the phrase “any other place or district of country, under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States,” did not include a vessel of the Navy, which was not of similar character with the places previously enumerated which were “objects in their nature fixed and territorial"; and accordingly, that under the statutes then in force a Federal court did not have jurisdiction to punish the crime of murder committed on board a war vessel of the United States in Boston harbor.¹

This principle, like all others relating to the interpretation and construction of statutes, is not inflexible; its purpose is to assist in arriving at the legislative intent, and where the application of the principle would fail to accomplish this purpose it is rejected, and general words may be given a more comprehensive effect than specific where such appears to be the intention of the legislature.²

5. Interpretation of miscellaneous words.—The Revised Statutes contains definitions of various words which may be applied in interpreting the provisions of Federal statutes. For example, it is provided that the word "person" may include partnerships and corporations; that the plural number may include the singular, and vice versa; that the masculine gender may include females; that reference to any officer may include any person authorized by law to perform the duties of such office, etc.³

In addition, under judicial decisions the word "or" may be construed as "and";⁴ and the word "and" may be construed as "or";⁵ and even in a penal statute, the words "fine or imprisonment" may under certain circumstances be read "fine and imprisonment."⁶ But these words are not to be construed otherwise than according to their ordinary and well-understood meaning except where it is necessary to effectuate the plain intent of the law.⁷

As to the interpretation of the words "may" and "shall," see below (VI, E, 5), "Mandatory and directory statutes."

6. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another.—Another rule of value in interpreting statutes is that where certain classes of persons or things are specifically included or specifically excepted in a statute, this is to be understood as meaning that the legislature did not intend to include or except any class of persons or things not specifically mentioned. The rule is known in law as "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," which means that "the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another." This rule is also subject to the paramount consideration of effectuating the legislative intent, and was accordingly not applied in the case of the Holy Trinity Church already noted.⁸

7. A prospective operation is to be given to a statute unless the legislative intent to the contrary is expressed in unambiguous terms or is clearly implied.⁹ Thus a statute intended, as indicated by its title, "to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy," should not be construed so as to give a gratuity to certain officers for past services.¹ "Even though the words of a statute are broad enough in their literal extent to comprehend existing cases, they must yet be construed as applicable only to cases that may hereafter arise, unless the language employed expresses a contrary intention in unequivocal terms."²

8. Controlling purpose of statute prevails in its construction.—A secondary purpose, which from the nature of things would defeat the controlling purpose of a statute, will not be ascribed to Congress, especially when it rests on mere implication.³ The specific intent of the legislature is to be found in the leading provisions of a statute.⁴ Where the principal purpose of a statute is to provide compensation to a person damaged by the wrongful act of another, and not to punish the wrongdoer, it is not to be construed as penal.⁵ Similarly, where a statute was intended primarily to increase the efficiency of the Navy, and incidentally to rid the service of officers unable to qualify for promotion because of their own misconduct by providing that such officers should be discharged with not more than one year's pay, the controlling purpose of the law should not be defeated by giving it a strict construction against the Government and in favor of a particular officer.⁶

D. AIDS TO INTERPRETATION OF AMBIGUOUS STATUTES.

Where the language of a statute is ambiguous or susceptible of two meanings, certain established rules may be availed of in endeavoring to arrive at the legislative intent. But in connection with the application of all such rules it must be borne in mind that their purpose is to solve real and not fanciful ambiguities, and that they may not be invoked as a means of escape from the plain language of a statute or for the purpose of raising a doubt where none in fact exists.

1. The title of a statute, although not properly a part of the law, may be resorted to in case of doubt as a source of information in interpreting language used in the act. Thus the word "military" in a broad sense may refer both to the land and naval forces; but where a statute provided for the arrest of deserters from the military service, the Attorney General held that it could not be construed to include deserters from the Navy, because the title of the act showed plainly that the law was intended to apply only to the Army, and hence that the word "military" was used in its more restricted sense.⁷ Similarly the title of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, was referred to by the courts as indicating that certain provisions contained in the act were intended to operate prospectively only and not to give a gratuity to certain officers for past services.⁸ But where the language of an act is plain, it may be applied to cases not comprehended by its title; as, for example, an act which by its title applied to "American seamen," but which was nevertheless held to extend to foreigners.¹ And even when the meaning of a statute is doubtful it has been said that the title has little weight in its construction.²

2. Marginal notes in Revised Statutes.—As already explained, marginal notes are incorporated in the Revised Statutes in accordance with instructions of Congress, indicating the laws from which the different sections of the revision were compiled. It has been held that, in case of ambiguity in the language of the revision, these notes may be consulted as an aid to construction, and that resort may be had to the original statutes to which they refer.³

3. Conditions existing at the time the law was enacted.—In cases of doubtful construction it is safe guidance for a court to look into the conditions surrounding the subject matter of the legislation at the time the act was passed and the situation as it existed and as it was pressed upon the attention of Congress.⁴ The court should endeavor to place itself as far as possible in the light that the legislature enjoyed, to look at things as they appeared to it, and to discover the purpose of the law from the language used in connection with attending circumstances.⁵ "The general rule is that laws speak from the date of their enactment,"⁶ and they should accordingly be construed as of the time of their enactment.⁷ Thus where Congress authorized the appointment, from the Navy Dental Reserve Corps, of "dental corps officers of permanent tenure," the language quoted was construed to mean that such appointments were to be made to the grade of acting assistant dental surgeon, which was the only grade in the regular Dental Corps at the time the law was passed, as the grade of assistant dental surgeon was not to come into existence until more than two years later.⁸

4. Reasons for the enactment of the law.—The evil or mischief which the law was designed to remedy is also a proper subject for consideration in arriving at the legislative intent in case of doubtful language.⁹ It is one of the oldest and best recognized principles of construction that "the preexisting law and the reason and purpose of the new enactment are considerations of great weight."¹⁰ "There is no better way of discovering its true meaning when expressions in it are rendered ambiguous by their connection with other clauses than by considering the necessity for it and the causes which induced its enactment."¹¹

5. Legislative history.—In arriving at the meaning of a statute where the proper construction is doubtful, it is always proper to consider the history of the statute and the different steps taken in the enactment of the law as disclosed by the legislative records.¹ This includes the reports of committees² and the introduction of amendments;³ but the opinion of the draftsman of the law can not be considered,⁴ except as it indicates the existing conditions and purpose of the law as it was pressed upon the attention of Congress.⁵

6. Debates in Congress.—The views expressed by individual Members of Congress in the course of debates “are not appropriate sources of information from which to discover the meaning of the language of a statute passed by that body”;⁶ the law as it passed being the will of the majority of both Houses.⁷ “It is impossible to determine with certainty what construction was put upon an act by the members of a legislative body that passed it by resorting to the speeches of individual members thereof. Those who did not speak may not have agreed with those who did, and those who spoke might differ from each other.”⁸ Frequently the arguments of individual members can hardly be considered even as the deliberate views of the persons who made them;⁹ “nor have there been wanting illustrious instances of great minds which, after they had, as legislator or commentators, reposed upon a short and hasty opinion, have deliberately withdrawn from their first impressions when they came upon the judgment seat to reexamine the statute or law in its full bearings.”¹⁰

But it has been held that “the statements of those who had charge of the law, made to the legislative body passing it, as to its meaning and purpose, are always competent.”¹¹ And debates may be referred to for information as to the existing conditions and the evil or mischief which the law was intended to remedy,¹² or to confirm a construction otherwise arrived at by the court.¹³

7. Prior enactments on the same subject may be consulted in cases of doubt in an effort to ascertain the legislative intent. Where the subject of a prior act is identical with, and not merely similar to, the law under consideration, the two acts are said to be “in pari materia”¹⁴ and should be construed together unless the language of the act to be construed is plain and free of all uncertainty.¹⁵

Several statutes on the same general subject, passed at different times by successive legislatures, without express repeal of former provisions, should be so construed that all parts of each shall retain their force and effect, except where it is apparent that by the later acts substantial changes were intended.

Incidental changes will not be imputed unless clearly intended by the legislators and within the scope of the particular matters considered by them. What is to be determined is the will of the legislature, and that will as expressed in the latest enactment is paramount; but on all matters in which the will of the latest legislature has not been clearly manifested, that of all former legislatures must stand.¹

Prior enactments on the same subject may be consulted in order to ascertain the legislative intent, even though such prior acts have been repealed.²

8. Implied repeals never favored.—"It is a fundamental and familiar rule that a repeal by implication is never held to take place unless there is an irreconcilable repugnancy between the earlier and later acts, and that if, by any permissible construction, both may stand and be enforced, there is no such repeal."³ Every doubt should be resolved against a construction which would work an implied repeal, and it is not to be admitted unless the implication is so clear as to be equivalent to an explicit declaration.⁴ "It must not be supposed that the legislature intended by a later statute to repeal a prior one on the same subject, unless the last statute is so broad in its terms and so clear and explicit in its words as to show that it was intended to cover the whole subject, and, therefore, to displace the prior statute;"⁵ or "unless its provisions are so clearly repugnant as to imply a negative."⁶ "Statutes which apparently conflict with each other are to be reconciled, as far as may be on any fair hypothesis;"⁷ "if both can exist, the repeal by implication will not be adjudged."⁸

"The general presumption is that if a repeal was intended it would have been expressly declared; and such is the usual practice of legislation."⁹

Where two acts are in apparent conflict, and one of the acts is general and the other special, the rule is that the special act will be construed as an exception to the provisions of the general, and both acts thus given effect even though the special act be earlier in date.¹⁰

9. Statutes not operative against the Government.—It is "the settled rule of construction that the sovereign authority of the country is not bound by the words of a statute, unless named therein, if the statute tends to restrain or diminish the powers, rights, or interests of the sovereign;"¹¹ "unless its language requires that such meaning shall be given to it."¹² Thus a statute prohibiting the transportation of merchandise from one port in the United States to another port in the United States in foreign vessels was held not to apply to the transportation of coal belonging to the Government and needed for the use of the Navy.¹ But a tariff act requiring the payment of duty on imports was held to apply to the importation of coal by the Government for the use of the Navy, notwithstanding that the payment of duty by the Government to itself would amount in effect merely to a bookkeeping transaction; the practice of Congress having been to except the Government specifically from the operation of tariff laws, where such was the intention, and the policy of the law being to encourage American industries.²

"Where the Government is not expressly or by necessary implication included, it ought to be clear from the nature of the mischiefs to be redressed, or the language used, that the Government itself was in contemplation of the legislature before a court of law would be authorized to put such an interpretation upon any statute."³

10. Objectionable results to be avoided.—The rule is that an act of Congress must be construed as within the powers conferred upon Congress unless in the judgment of the court it is plainly and palpably inconsistent with the Constitution.⁴

Also, where the language used is susceptible of two meanings, it should be so interpreted as to avoid absurd results, inconvenience, injustice, unreasonableness, or hardship. But it is only in the case of doubt that such considerations may be taken into account.⁵

"All laws which derogate from the constitutional authority of the executive or judiciary, and all laws giving special or unusual powers to individuals, must be construed strictly and according to the narrowest sense of their words. No intention must in such cases be imputed to the lawgiver beyond what is clearly expressed in terms too plain to be misunderstood."⁶

11. Construction adopted by Congress.—Congress is presumed to have known what construction has been placed upon language used by it in a statute, and when the same language is used again, in a subsequent statute on the same subject, without any indication of a contrary intent, it should be given the same construction as it received in the former act.⁷ This rule applies to language which has been construed in decisions of the Supreme Court and Court of Claims,⁸ and also to the construction placed upon a law in practice by the proper administrative officers,⁹ unless the circumstances are such that Congress could not be presumed to have knowledge of the departmental construction.¹⁰

12. Contemporaneous construction by executive departments.—The contemporaneous construction placed upon a law by the officers charged with its administration, where uniform and long continued, will be given great weight by the courts in passing upon a statute so construed, and in case of doubt will be controlling.¹ Especially will the courts look with disfavor upon any sudden change whereby parties who have contracted with the Government upon the faith of such construction may be prejudiced.² Where such construction of the law has received the tacit if not express approval of Congress, the court will not feel at liberty to disregard it although the correctness of such construction "may well be doubted."³ However, "while contemporaneous and long-continued departmental construction of an ambiguous statute is entitled to very great weight, it is quite otherwise where the statute is clear and there is no need for the assistance derived from that source."⁴

E. CONSTRUCTION OF PARTICULAR STATUTES.

1. Revised statutes.—"A change of language in a revised statute⁵ will not change the law from what it was before, unless it be apparent that such was the intention of the legislature."⁶ "The reenacted sections are to be given the same meaning they had in the original statute unless a contrary intention is plainly manifested."⁷ "Upon a revision of statutes, a different interpretation is not to be given to them without some substantial change of phraseology—some change other than what may have been necessary to abbreviate the form of the law."⁸ But "where the language of the Revised Statutes is plain and unambiguous, the grammatical structure simple and accurate, and the meaning of the whole intelligible and obvious, a court is not at liberty by construction to reproduce the law as it stood before the revision. Whatever palpable modifications, alterations, or changes of preexisting laws may be found in the Revised Statutes are as much in force as any of these provisions."⁹

2. Appropriation acts.—The general rule of law is that when Congress makes a specific appropriation for any particular purpose, no more shall be expended for that purpose than is thus appropriated; and if a general appropriation applicable to the same purpose would otherwise be available to meet the same expenditure, the specific appropriation operates to repeal in part or supersede the general appropriation and render its use for the specific purpose illegal.¹⁰

The rule that a specific appropriation is exclusive, and that another general appropriation is not available for the same purpose, is a rule of administration

Gen., 362). "When an act of Congress has, by actual decision or by continued usage and practice, received a construction at the proper department and that construction has been acted on for a succession of years, it must be a strong and palpable case of error and injustice that would justify a change in the interpretation to be given to it" (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 558). "The officers concerned are usually able men and masters of the subject. Not unfrequently they are the draftsmen of the laws they are afterwards called upon to interpret" (*U. S. v. firmly established by the accounting branch of the Government; but there is no such statutory limitation on the use of appropriations. While this rule is a proper one, it may be remarked of it, first, that it operates within a narrow range; second, that the Comptroller recognizes that two appropriations may sometimes be available—"cumulative" appropriations, as they are called—and, finally, that the Comptroller has noticed certain reasonable limits to the applicability of the general rule in order to accomplish the evident purpose of Congress.¹

No clause, phrase, or section of an appropriation act ought to be construed as permanent legislation unless such words are used therein as make that purpose clear.² "Annually," "hereafter," and similar words in an appropriation act indicate permanent legislation.³ Permanent legislation contained in an appropriation act becomes effective, where not otherwise specified, immediately upon approval of the act.⁴

3. Penal laws.—The general rule is that penal statutes are to be strictly construed, which means in effect that the language is not to be extended so as to include persons or things not clearly within its terms.⁵ But in construing penal laws as all others the whole purpose is to effectuate the legislative intent if possible; and therefore it is settled that the rule of strict construction does not require that the purpose be ignored or defeated; it merely means that cases must not be brought within the provisions of the statute that are not clearly embraced by it. On the other hand, a narrow, technical, or forced construction of words is not to be adopted so as to exclude cases that are obviously within its provisions.⁶ The words of a penal statute are to be given their full meaning;⁷ and effect is to be given to every word used if it can be done without violating the obvious intention of the legislature.⁸

"While we are bound to give the person accused the benefit of every statutory provision, we are not bound to import words into the statute which are not found there."⁹ "In expounding a penal statute the court will not extend it beyond the plain meaning of its words,"¹⁰ but the rule of strict construction is not violated by giving to words the more extended of two meanings where such construction best harmonizes with the context and most fully promotes the policy and objects of the legislation.¹¹

4. Remedial statutes are to be liberally construed so as to accomplish the beneficial purpose of the legislature to the fullest extent consistent with the language of the law;¹ but a statute is not to be so liberally construed as to violate its language.²

5. Mandatory and directory statutes.—The question whether or not a statute is mandatory or directory depends upon the intention of the legislature, to be ascertained from a consideration of the entire act, its nature, its object, and the consequences that would result from construing it one way or the other.³

“It is well settled that ‘may,’ in any statute, is to be construed as equivalent to ‘shall’ or ‘must’ when the public interests or rights are concerned and when the public or third persons have a right de jure [in law] to claim that the power granted shall be exercised.”⁴

“The general rule is that, where Congress confers a power upon an executive officer which involves the rights or interests of private individuals or the general public, the language used by Congress is to be considered as imposing a duty rather than a discretion.”⁴

Thus, a statute providing that the Secretary of the Navy “is hereby authorized” to furnish a clothing bounty to apprentices on enlistment in the Navy is mandatory. While the ordinary meaning of this language is generally permissive, nevertheless in this case, the object of the statute being to encourage enlistments, it “is to be construed as imposing upon the Secretary of the Navy an imperative obligation and not merely discretionary power.”⁴

“Shall” will be construed as “may” where no public or private right is impaired by such construction; but where the public are interested, or where the public or third persons have a legal claim that the act shall be done, it is imperative and will be construed to mean “must.” For example, section 1498, Revised Statutes, providing that naval examining boards “shall consist of not less than three officers senior in rank to the officer to be examined,” was evidently framed as a protection to officers generally, and is therefore construed as mandatory; hence the proceedings of a board are fatally defective where one of the members was junior to the candidate.⁵

“The rule of construction of statutory provisions regulating the time, form, and mode of proceeding by courts and public officers is that they are generally to be deemed directory and as intended merely to secure system, uniformity, and dispatch in the conduct of public business. ‘Provisions of this character are not usually regarded as mandatory unless accompanied by negative words, importing that the acts required shall not be done in any other manner or time than designated.’”⁶

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

HISTORICAL NOTE.

[Compiled principally from notes to Constitution in Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, and S. Doc. No. 427, 66th Cong., 3d sess.]

The original Constitution.—In May, 1785, a committee of Congress made a report recommending an alteration in the Articles of Confederation, but no action was taken on it, and it was left to the State Legislatures to proceed in the matter. In January, 1786, the Legislature of Virginia passed a resolution providing for the appointment of five commissioners, who, or any three of them, should meet such commissioners as might be appointed in the other States of the Union, at a time and place to be agreed upon, to take into consideration the trade of the United States; to consider how far a uniform system in their commercial regulations may be necessary to their common interest and their permanent harmony; and to report to the several States such an act, relative to this great object, as, when ratified by them, will enable the United States in Congress effectually to provide for the same. The Virginia commissioners, after some correspondence, fixed the first Monday in September as the time, and the city of Annapolis as the place for the meeting, but only four other States were represented, viz: Delaware, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania; the commissioners appointed by Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, and Rhode Island failed to attend. Under the circumstances of so partial a representation, the commissioners present agreed upon a report (drawn by Mr. Hamilton, of New York), expressing their unanimous conviction that it might essentially tend to advance the interests of the Union if the States by which they were respectively delegated would concur, and use their endeavors to procure the concurrence of the other States, in the appointment of commissioners to meet at Philadelphia on the second Monday of May following, to take into consideration the situation of the United States; to devise such further provisions as should appear to them necessary to render the Constitution of the Federal Government adequate to the exigencies of the Union; and to report such an act for that purpose to the United States in Congress assembled as, when agreed to by them and afterwards confirmed by the Legislatures of every State, would effectually provide for the same.

Congress, on the 21st of February, 1787, adopted a resolution in favor of a convention, and the Legislatures of those States which had not already done so (with the exception of Rhode Island) promptly appointed delegates. On the 25th of May, seven States having convened, George Washington, of Virginia, was unanimously elected President, and the consideration of the proposed constitution was commenced. On the 17th of September, 1787, the Constitution as engrossed and agreed upon was signed by all the members present, except

Mr. Gerry, of Massachusetts, and Messrs. Mason and Randolph, of Virginia. The president of the convention transmitted it to Congress, with a resolution stating how the proposed Federal Government should be put in operation, and an explanatory letter. Congress, on the 28th of September, 1787, directed the Constitution so framed, with the resolutions and letter concerning the same, to "be transmitted to the several Legislatures in order to be submitted to a convention of delegates chosen in each State by the people thereof, in conformity to the resolves of the convention."

On the 4th of March, 1789, the day which had been fixed for commencing the operations of Government under the new Constitution, it had been ratified by the conventions chosen in each State to consider it, as follows: Delaware, December 7, 1787; Pennsylvania, December 12, 1787; New Jersey, December 18, 1787; Georgia, January 2, 1788; Connecticut, January 9, 1788; Massachusetts, February 6, 1788; Maryland, April 28, 1788; South Carolina, May 23, 1788; New Hampshire, June 21, 1788; Virginia, June 26, 1788; and New York, July 26, 1788.

The President informed Congress, on the 28th of January, 1790, that North Carolina had ratified the Constitution November 21, 1789; and he informed Congress on the 1st of June, 1790, that Rhode Island had ratified the Constitution May 29, 1789. Vermont, in convention, ratified the Constitution January 10, 1791 and was, by an act of Congress approved February 18, 1791, "received and admitted into this Union as a new and entire member of the United States."

The first ten amendments to the Constitution of the United States [commonly known as the "Bill of Rights"] were proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the First Congress, on the 25th of September, 1789. They were ratified by the following States, and the notifications of ratification by the governors thereof were successively communicated by the President to Congress: New Jersey, November 20, 1789; Maryland, December 19, 1789; North Carolina, December 22, 1789; South Carolina, January 19, 1790; New Hampshire, January 25, 1790; Delaware, January 28, 1790; Pennsylvania, March 10, 1790; New York, March 27, 1790; Rhode Island, June 15, 1790; Vermont, November 3, 1791, and Virginia, December 15, 1791. There is no evidence on the journals of Congress that the legislatures of Connecticut, Georgia, and Massachusetts ratified them.

The eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Third Congress on the 5th of March, 1794; and was declared in a message from the President to Congress, dated the 8th of January, 1798, to have been ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

The twelfth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Eighth Congress, on the 12th of December, 1803, in lieu of the original third paragraph of the first section of the second article; and was declared in a proclamation of the Secretary of State, dated the 25th of September, 1804, to have been ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

The thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Thirty-eighth Congress, on the 1st of February, 1865, and was declared, in a proclamation of the Secretary of State, dated the 18th of December, 1865, to have been ratified by the legislatures of twenty-seven of the thirty-six States, viz: Illinois, Rhode Island, Michigan, Maryland, New York, West Virginia, Maine, Kansas, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Missouri, Nevada, Indiana, Louisiana, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Vermont, Tennessee, Arkansas, Connecticut, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Alabama, North Carolina, and Georgia.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Thirty-ninth Congress, on the 16th of June, 1866. On the 21st of July, 1868, Congress adopted and transmitted to the Department of State a concurrent resolution declaring that "the legislatures of the States of Connecticut, Tennessee, New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, New York, Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia, Kansas, Maine, Nevada, Missouri, Indiana, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Iowa, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Alabama, South Carolina, and Louisiana, being three-fourths and more of the several States of the Union, have ratified the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, duly proposed by two-thirds of each House of the Thirty-ninth Congress: Therefore Resolved, That said fourteenth article is hereby declared to be a part of the Constitution of the United States, and it shall be duly promulgated as such by the Secretary of State." The Secretary of State accordingly issued a proclamation, dated the 28th of July, 1868, declaring that the proposed fourteenth amendment had been ratified, in the manner hereafter mentioned, by the legislatures of thirty of the thirty-six States, viz: Connecticut, June 30, 1866; New Hampshire, July 7, 1866; Tennessee, July 19, 1866; New Jersey, September 11, 1866 (and the legislature of the same State passed a resolution in April, 1868, to withdraw its consent to it); Oregon, September 19, 1866; Vermont, November 9, 1866; Georgia rejected it November 13, 1866, and ratified it July 21, 1868; North Carolina rejected it December 4, 1866, and ratified it July 4, 1868; South Carolina rejected it December 20, 1866, and ratified it July 9, 1868; New York ratified it January 10, 1867; Ohio ratified it January 11, 1867 (and the legislature of the same State passed a resolution in January, 1868, to withdraw its consent to it); Illinois ratified it January 15, 1867; West Virginia, January 16, 1867; Kansas, January 18, 1867; Maine, January 19, 1867; Nevada, January 22, 1867; Missouri, January 26, 1867; Indiana, January 20, 1867; Minnesota, February 1, 1867; Rhode Island, February 7, 1867; Wisconsin, February 13, 1867; Pennsylvania, February 13, 1867; Michigan, February 15, 1867; Massachusetts, March 20, 1867; Nebraska June 15, 1867; Iowa, April 3, 1868; Arkansas, April 6, 1868; Florida, June 9, 1868; Louisiana, July 9, 1868, and Alabama, July 13, 1868. Georgia again ratified the amendment February 2, 1870. Texas rejected it November 1, 1866, and ratified it February 18, 1870. Virginia rejected it January 19, 1867, and ratified it October 8, 1869. The amendment was rejected by Kentucky January 10, 1867; by Delaware February 8, 1867; by Maryland March 23, 1867, and was not afterwards ratified by either State.

The fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Fortieth Congress on the 27th of February, 1869, and was declared, in a proclamation of the Secretary of State, dated March 30, 1870, to have been ratified by the legislatures of twenty-nine of the thirty-seven States. The dates of these ratifications (arranged in the order of their reception at the Department of State) were: From North Carolina, March 5, 1869; West Virginia, March 3, 1869; Massachusetts, March 9-12, 1869; Wisconsin, March 9, 1869; Maine, March 12, 1869; Louisiana, March 5, 1869; Michigan, March 8, 1869; South Carolina, March 16, 1869; Pennsylvania, March 26, 1869; Arkansas, March 30, 1869; Connecticut, May 19, 1869; Florida, June 15, 1869; Illinois, March 5, 1869; Indiana, May 13-14, 1869; New York, March 17-April 14, 1869 (and the legislature of the same State passed a resolution January 5, 1870, to withdraw its consent to it); New Hampshire, July 7, 1869; Nevada, March 1, 1869; Vermont, October 21, 1869; Virginia, October 8, 1869; Missouri, January 10, 1870; Mississippi, January 15-17, 1870; Ohio, January 27, 1870; Iowa, February 3, 1870; Kansas, January 18-19, 1870; Minnesota, February 19, 1870; Rhode Island, January 18, 1870; Nebraska, February 17, 1870; Texas, February 18, 1870. The State of Georgia also ratified the amendment February 2, 1870.

The sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Sixty-first Congress on the 12th day of July, 1909, and was declared, in an announcement by the Secretary of State, dated February 25, 1913, to have been ratified by the legislatures of the following thirty-eight of the forty-eight States. The dates of these ratifications were: Alabama, August 17, 1909; Kentucky, February 8, 1910; South Carolina, February 23, 1910; Illinois, March 1, 1910; Mississippi, March 11, 1910; Oklahoma, March 14, 1910; Maryland, April 8, 1910; Georgia, August 3, 1910; Texas, August 17, 1910; Ohio, January 19, 1911; Idaho, January 20, 1911; Oregon, January 23, 1911; Washington, January 26, 1911; California, January 31, 1911; Montana, January 31, 1911; Indiana, February 6, 1911; Nevada, February 8, 1911; Nebraska, February 11, 1911; North Carolina, February 11, 1911; Colorado, February 20, 1911; North Dakota, February 21, 1911; Michigan, February 23, 1911; Iowa, February 27, 1911; Kansas, March 6, 1911; Missouri, March 16, 1911; Maine, March 31, 1911; Tennessee, April 11, 1911; Arkansas, April 22, 1911; Wisconsin, May 26, 1911; New York, July 12, 1911; South Dakota, February 3, 1912; Arizona, April 9, 1912; Minnesota, June 12, 1912; Louisiana, July 1, 1912; Delaware, February 3, 1913; Wyoming, February 3, 1913; New Jersey, February 5, 1913; New Mexico, February 5, 1913. The States of Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Utah rejected this amendment.

The seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Sixty-second Congress on the 16th day of May, 1912, and was declared, in an announcement by the Secretary of State, dated May 31, 1913, to have been ratified by the legislatures of the following thirty-six of the forty-eight States. The dates of these ratifications were: Massachusetts, May 22, 1912; Arizona, June 3, 1912; Minnesota, June 10, 1912; New York, January 15, 1913; Kansas, January 17, 1913; Oregon, January 23, 1913; North Carolina, January 25, 1913; California, January 28, 1913; Michigan, January 28, 1913; Idaho, January 31, 1913; West Virginia, February 4, 1913; Nebraska, February 5, 1913; Iowa, February 6, 1913; Montana, February 7, 1913; Texas, February 7, 1913; Washington, February 7, 1913; Wyoming, February 11, 1913; Colorado, February 13, 1913; Illinois, February 13, 1913; North Dakota, February 18, 1913; Nevada, February 19, 1913; Vermont, February 19, 1913; Maine, February 20, 1913; New Hampshire, February 21, 1913; Oklahoma, February 24, 1913; Ohio, February 25, 1913; South Dakota, February 27, 1913;

Indiana, March 6, 1913; Missouri, March 7, 1913; New Mexico, March 15, 1913; New Jersey, March 18, 1913; Tennessee, April 1, 1913; Arkansas, April 14, 1913; Connecticut, April 15, 1913; Pennsylvania, April 15, 1913; Wisconsin, May 9, 1913.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Sixty-fifth Congress on the 19th day of December, 1917, and was declared, in an announcement by the Acting Secretary of State, dated January 29, 1919, to have been ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the whole number of States in the United States, as follows: Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, South Carolina, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the Sixty-sixth Congress on the 5th day of June, 1919, and was declared, in an announcement by the Secretary of State dated August 26, 1920, to have been ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the whole number of States in the United States, as follows: Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Massachusetts, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Montana, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Utah, California, Maine, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, New York, South Dakota, North Dakota, Colorado, Rhode Island, Indiana, Kentucky, Oregon, Wyoming, Nevada, Arizona, New Jersey, Oklahoma, West Virginia, New Mexico, Idaho, Washington, and Tennessee.

THE CONSTITUTION.

[The preamble.] WE THE PEOPLE of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this CONSTITUTION for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. [Legislative powers vested in Congress.] All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Congress can not legislate in detail.—To attempt to regulate by statute the minute movements of every part of the complicated machinery of government would evince a most unpardonable ignorance on the subject. Whilst the great outlines of its movements may be marked out and limitations imposed on the exercise of its powers, there are numberless things which must be done that can neither be anticipated nor defined and which are essential to the proper action of the Government. (U. S. v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet., 14; U. S. v. Webster, 28 Fed. Cas., 515; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, 182 Fed. Rep., 13, 16; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S., 462, 480; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 358.)

Quasi legislative powers may be exercised by heads of departments.—Congress can only legislate in a general way, and large powers are necessarily intrusted to the different departments. They really exercise in this way by delegation, and necessarily so, for the purpose of carrying on the vast affairs of the Government and its details, authority which in a strict sense pertains to Congress. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 438, 439.) The authority thus exercised by heads of departments is “quasi legislative.” (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

For other decisions concerning executive regulations, see note to section 161, Revised Statutes.

Constitutionality of Statutes.—“To warrant a court in declaring unconstitutional a law passed by Congress, the defect of legislative power must be of the most plain and indisputable character. The fact that a law of Congress has been in course of execution for many years and has been acquiesced in during that time is a strong reason why the courts, especially those of a subordinate character, should not decide the same to be unconstitutional.” (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313.)

Although the President should veto an act on the ground that he believed it to be unconstitutional, if it should subsequently be passed by Congress over his veto and the President proceed to carry it into execution, such action by him can not be enjoined by the courts. (Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall., 475.)

The Attorney General is authorized by statute to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress when requested to render an opinion thereon by the President or head of a department. (Sec. 358, R. S.; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 259.)

“Every law is to be carried out so far forth as is consistent with the Constitution, and no further. The sound part of it must be executed, and the vicious portion of it suffered to drop. A legislative act is not to be treated as void merely because it is coupled with an abortive attempt to usurp executive powers. It stands to reason that if a condition such as this is asserted to be void it could have no effect whatever, either upon the subject matter or upon other parts of the law to which it is appended. * * * You [the President] are therefore entirely justified in treating this condition (if it be a condition) as if the paper on which it is written were blank.” (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 462.)

Congress can not enact advice or counsel. It can enact nothing but that which is to have full vigor and effect of a law. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 18; but see sec. 1755, R. S.) However, where Congress enacted a law which was construed by the Attorney General to be advisory only, and not mandatory upon the President as claimed, the Attorney General in his opinion to the President remarked: “But it is what you called it in your message—a recommendation; and your respectful deference to the wishes of Congress induced you to carry it out, though you were not bound to do so.” (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 462.)

“Procuring legislation by the private solicitation of persons who have no official relations which authorize them to communicate with Congress is never to be commended; it can be excused only where the motive is as manifestly honest as it was in this case. You, yourself, speaking of this very affair in a solemn message have declared it to be dangerous to the subordination and discipline of the Army, since, if it were encouraged, ‘officers might then be found, instead of performing their appropriate duties, besieging the halls of Congress for the purpose of obtaining special favors and choice places by legislative enactment.' " (Atty. Gen. to the President, 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 468; Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 5, p. 597; see also acts July 11, 1919, sec. 6, 41 Stat., 68, and Aug. 24, 1912, sec. 6, 37 Stat., 555.)

By General Orders, No. 32, War Department, March 15, 1873, it was ordered that "no officer, either active or retired, shall, directly or indirectly, without being called upon by proper authority, solicit, suggest, or recommend action by Members of Congress for or against military affairs;" that "all petitions to Congress by officers relative to subjects of a military character will be forwarded through the General of the Army and Secretary of War for their action and transmittal;" and that "an officer visiting the seat of government during a congressional session will, upon his arrival, register his name at the Adjutant General's Office, as now required, and, in addition, address a letter to the Adjutant General of the Army, reciting the purpose of and time that will be embraced by his visit and the authority under which he is absent from his command or station. The purpose or object so recited will be the strict guide of the officer during his stay." (As to authority of Secretary of War to issue such an order, see letter of Secretary of War in reply to House Resolution of April 13, 1874, as published in Executive Document No. 275, House of Representatives, 43d Cong., 1st sess.; Lieber on Regulations, Appendix A.)

SECTION 2. [CLAUSE 1. Election of Representatives.] ¹ The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

[CLAUSE 2. Qualifications of Representatives.] ² No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty-five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

[CLAUSE 3. Apportionment of Representatives and direct taxes.] ³ Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to chuse three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

The first sentence of this clause is amended by the fourteenth amendment, second section.

[CLAUSE 4. Vacancies in House of Representatives.] ⁴ When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

[CLAUSE 5. Officers and impeaching power of House of Representatives.] ⁵ The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

SECTION 3. [CLAUSE 1. Number and election of Senators.] ¹ The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

This clause is superseded by the seventeenth amendment.

[CLAUSE 2. Term of Senators and filling of vacancies.] ² Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one-third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

This clause is modified by the seventeenth amendment.

[CLAUSE 3. Qualifications of Senators.] ³ No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

[CLAUSE 4. The Vice-President and his vote.] ⁴ The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

[CLAUSE 5. Officers of the Senate.] ⁵ The Senate shall chuse their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

[CLAUSE 6. Trial by Senate of impeachments.] ⁶ The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

[CLAUSE 7. Judgment in cases of impeachment.] ⁷ Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

SECTION 4. [CLAUSE 1. Holding of elections for Senators and Representatives.] ¹ The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

[CLAUSE 2. Annual session of Congress.] ² The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

SECTION 5. [CLAUSE 1. Regularity of elections, quorum to do business, etc.] ¹ Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

Acts of Member not legally elected.—A member of Congress who has actually been seated is a de facto member, and acts performed by him as such are valid, although he may subsequently be unseated as the result of an election contest. So held with reference to the nomination of a candidate for appointment as a midshipman at the Naval Academy. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 342.)

[CLAUSE 2. Rules of proceedings; punishment of members.] ² Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

[CLAUSE 3. Journal of proceedings.] ³ Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

[CLAUSE 4. Temporary adjournments.] ⁴ Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

A temporary adjournment is not a "recess of the Senate" within the meaning of Article II, section 2, clause 3, empowering the President to fill vacancies. "Recess" refers only to the case where the Senate adjourns sine die (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 599; affirmed, 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 602; contra, Gould v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 593, 595; 33 Op. Atty. Gen., 20.)

SECTION 6. [CLAUSE 1. Compensation and privilege of Senators and Representatives.] ¹ The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

The privilege from arrest does not exempt Senators and Representatives from being served with, and required to obey, a subpoena in a criminal case. (U. S. v. Cooper, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14861.)

Naval courts-martial and courts of inquiry have power to issue like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify as United States courts of criminal jurisdiction; and refusal of any person to appear and testify when so subpoenaed is punishable as a misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment. (Act Feb. 16, 1909, secs. 11 and 12, 35 Stat., 621, 622.) Held, that under this law a court of inquiry is empowered to subpoena a Representative attending a session of Congress, but that if he refused to appear, he could not be compelled to do so owing to the fact that under this clause of the Constitution he would be privileged from arrest for the misdemeanor so committed. (Court of inquiry Rec. No. 5203, pp. 1281-1286, 1293-1294, 1339-1343, 1363-1365, 1422.)

The record showed that he was advised by the Speaker and parliamentarians of the House not to respond without an order of the House; that this would necessitate the introduction of a resolution in the House, which would possibly create a debate and produce considerable publicity as to the subject of the inquiry; that he was willing to appear voluntarily without a subpoena; that the Department had been consulted and held as above stated. Accordingly, the court decided to withdraw the subpoena, and Representative Weeks thereupon voluntarily appeared and testified.]

Privilege applies only to civil cases.— "The words 'treason, felony, and breach of the peace' were used by the framers of the Constitution in Sec. 6, Art. I, and should be construed, in the same sense as those words were commonly used and understood in England as applied to the parliamentary privilege, and as excluding from the privilege all arrests and prosecutions for criminal offenses, and confining the privilege alone to arrests in civil cases." (Williamson v. U. S., 207 U. S., 427.)

[CLAUSE 2. Appointment of Senators or Representatives to other offices.]

² No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

This clause prevents the appointment of a former Senator to a civil office created after his resignation from the Senate, but "during the time for which he was elected." (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 365.) It also prevents his appointment as a member of the Cabinet, where the salary of the office was increased during his service in the Senate. (See note to sec. 160, R. S.) The President is not authorized to nominate for office a person ineligible under this clause, and such a nomination, although confirmed by the Senate, can not be made the basis of an appointment to the nominee even when his disqualification ceases. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 522.)

The Secretary of War is not in the military service, but is a civil officer. (U. S. v. Burns, 12 Wall., 246.)

Whether a retired Army officer can receive pay as such while holding a seat in Congress is a question of grave doubt which only a determination of the Supreme Court can satisfactorily settle. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 686; see also file 27231-74, May 12, 1916.)

SECTION 7. [CLAUSE 1. Bills for raising revenue.] ¹All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

[CLAUSE 2. Approval and disapproval of bills by President.] ²Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by Yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Bills vetoed as unconstitutional and becoming law without President's approval.—Where certain bills were enacted into law without the approval of President Johnson, who had vetoed them on the ground of their unconstitutionality, he proceeded to put them into effect, and it was held by the Supreme Court that such action on the part of the President could not be enjoined, notwithstanding the alleged unconstitutionality of the statutes. (Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall., 475.)

Veto of bill authorizing restoration of dismissed officer.—A bill passed by both houses of Congress provided: "That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz John Porter, late a major general of the United States Volunteers and a brevet brigadier general and colonel of the Army, to the position of colonel in the Army of the United States, of the same grade and rank held by him at the time of his dismissal from the Army by sentence of court-martial promulgated January 27, 1863. * * *"

This bill was vetoed by the President in a message reading in part as follows:

"It is apparent that should this bill become a law it will create a new office which can be filled by the appointment of the particular individual whom it specifies, and can not be filled otherwise; or it may be said with perhaps greater precision of statement that it will create a new office upon condition that the particular person designated shall be chosen to fill it. Such an act, as it seems to me, is either unnecessary and ineffective or it involves an encroachment by the legislative branch of the Government upon the authority of the Executive. As the Congress has no power under the Constitution to nominate or appoint an officer and can not lawfully impose upon the President the duty of nominating or appointing to office any particular individual of its own selection, this bill, if it can fairly be construed as requiring the President to make the nomination and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the appointment which it authorizes is in manifest violation of the Constitution. If such be not its just interpretation, it must be regarded as a mere enactment of advice and counsel, which lacks in the very nature of things the force of positive law and can serve no useful purpose upon the statute books." (Veto message of President Arthur, July 2, 1884, Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 8, p. 221.)

The Attorney General advised the President that the above bill was beyond the power of Congress and should not be approved by the President, for reasons similar to those afterwards given in the veto message above quoted. (See 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 18, noted under Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

The Secretary of the Navy in commenting upon the above veto message stated: "The foregoing clear exposition of the force of section 2 of Article II of the Constitution * * * shows that an effectual barrier has been established by the Constitution to any restoration to the Navy, by legislation, of particular officers who have been dismissed therefrom; and the Supreme Court has further established the proposition that such dismissals when once accomplished can not be revoked by the Executive. No more important doctrines than these can be stated bearing upon the welfare of our Navy personnel." (Annual Report, 1884, p. 43. See also note to Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, "Restoration of dismissed officers.")

Veto of bill to annul the finding and sentence of a court-martial.—"There are other causes that deter me from giving this bill the sanction of my approval. The judgment of the court-martial by which, more than twenty years since, Fitz John Porter was tried and convicted was pronounced by a tribunal composed of nine general officers of distinguished character and ability. Its investigation of the charges for which it found the accused guilty was thorough and conscientious, and its findings and sentence were in due course of law approved by Abraham Lincoln, then President of the United States. Its legal competency, its jurisdiction of the accused and of the subject of the accusations, and the substantial regularity of all of its proceedings are matters which have never been brought into question. Its judgment, therefore, is final and conclusive in its character * * *.

"The provisions of the bill now under consideration are avowedly based on the assumption that the findings of the court-martial have been discovered to be erroneous; but it will be borne in mind that the investigation which is claimed to have resulted in this discovery was made many years after the events to which that evidence related and under circumstances that made it impossible to reproduce the evidence on which they were based.

"It seems to me that the proposed legislation would establish a dangerous precedent, calculated to imperil in no small measure the binding force and effect of the judgments of the various tribunals established under our Constitution and laws.

"I have already, in the exercise of the pardoning power with which the President is vested by the Constitution, remitted the continuing penalty which had made it impossible for Fitz John Porter to hold any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States; but I am unwilling to give my sanction to any legislation which shall practically annul and set at naught the solemn and deliberate conclusions of the tribunal by which he was convicted and of the President by whom its findings were examined and approved." (Veto message of President Arthur, July 2, 1884, Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 8, p. 221.)

Veto of bill to alter military records.—

"The bill is objectionable because, if approved, it will require that for all purposes that are controlled by the laws of the United States, Aaron Cornish shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as assistant surgeon from the Ninety-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry. But it is a fact that Asst. Surg. Cornish was dismissed from the military service of the United States as of the organization mentioned September 8, 1862, in pursuance of an order issued by competent authority. In addition to this the approval of this bill will require an alteration of historical records that should be kept inviolate. If approved, the bill will also require the issuance of a certificate of honorable discharge in the case of an officer who, as a matter of fact, was not honorably discharged from the military service. It is impossible to discharge Cornish honorably now, because both he and the organization of which he was a member passed out of the military service of the United States and beyond military control more than 40 years ago. And to issue a certificate to show that he is now, or was at some previous time, honorably discharged from the military service of the United States would be to issue a false certificate.

"It is easily possible, without any alteration of historical records and without the issuance of a discharge certificate that is contrary to the fact, to confer upon Aaron Cornish, or any other person claiming under him, any right or benefit to which he, or such other person, would have been entitled, if it were a fact that he actually was honorably discharged from the military service of the United States. If, as is presumably the case, it is desired to give him, or some other person claiming under him, a pensionable status, of which he or such other person is now deprived by reason of the fact that he was not honorably discharged, that object can be accomplished with certainty, without requiring any alteration of records and without the issue of an incorrect discharge certificate, by enacting a law providing as follows:

"That in the administration of the pension laws, Aaron Cornish, who was assistant surgeon, Ninety-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry; shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the eighth day of September, eighteen hundred and sixty-two." (Veto message of President Taft, Mar. 28, 1910, quoting and adopting report of The Adjutant General of the Army; S. Doc. No. 464, 61st Cong., 2d sess.; 45 Cong. Rec., pt. 4, pp. 3848, 3849.)

Veto of bill to restore to active list officer voluntarily retired.—"I inclose herewith copy of reports of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation adverse to the signature of this bill. The report of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation gives the precedents which this bill follows. In each case special reasons were believed to exist at the time why a special exception should be made, but actual experience has shown that in each case the restoration served as a precedent for the restoration of somebody else where the cause was not quite so strong. Commander White was transferred to the retired list three years ago on his own application. He now seeks reinstatement. All the advantages that should be derived from the legislation under which he was retired will be lost if the various individuals who take advantage of it are encouraged to believe that whenever they desire to undo their action that end can be achieved by supplemental special legislation. I agree entirely with Admiral Pillsbury's statement that legislation of this character does not contribute to the best interests of the service. I accordingly return the bill without my approval." (Veto message of President Roosevelt, Apr. 7, 1908, 42 Cong. Rec., pt. 5, p. 4503, 60th Cong., 1st sess.)

Veto of bill to restore to active list officers compulsorily retired.—"In accordance with the provisions of the personnel act of March 3, 1899, Capt. Veeder was placed upon the retired list with the rank of commodore, being one of the officers deemed by the board of five rear admirals less efficient than the remaining captains on the active list. The finding of this board was approved by me, acting upon the recommendation of the Navy Department, and I see no reason why that action should be reversed. The board was composed of well-known officers, and I believe that their recommendation was, in accordance with their oaths, based upon the relative standing and special fitness of the officer concerned, as well as the efficiency of the naval service. If this bill for the relief of Commodore Veeder is approved, it will probably be followed by others of a similar nature for the return of all officers who have been placed on the retired list in accordance with the provisions of the personnel act, and it is my opinion that the enacting of this measure into a law will have a most injurious effect upon the naval service." (Veto message of President Taft, Mar. 4, 1911, 46 Cong. Rec., pt. 5, p. 4290, 61st Cong., 3d sess. But see act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 939, making provision for restoration to active list of all officers compulsorily retired under the personnel act of Mar. 3, 1899; and see act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 602, 603, making provision for restoration to the active list of Commodore Veeder and other officers named therein.)

Veto of bill to make retired officers of Army not amenable to court-martial.—See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes.

[CLAUSE 3. President's action on joint resolutions.] ³ Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

SECTION 8. The Congress shall have Power [CLAUSE 1. Revenue power, common defense and general welfare.] ¹ To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

[CLAUSE 2. Borrowing power.] ² To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

[CLAUSE 3. Power over commerce.] ³ To regulate Commerce with Foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

[CLAUSE 4. Naturalization and bankruptcies.] ⁴ To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

"The power of naturalization, vested in Congress by the Constitution, is a power to confer citizenship, not a power to take it away. 'A naturalized citizen,' said Chief Justice Marshall, 'becomes a member of the society, possessing all the rights of a native citizen, and standing, in the view of the Constitution, on the footing of a native. The Constitution does not authorize Congress to enlarge or abridge those rights. The simple power of the national legislature is to prescribe a uniform rule of naturalization, and the exercise of this power exhausts it, so far as respects the individual.

The Constitution then takes him up, and, among other rights, extends to him the capacity of suing in the courts of the United States precisely under the same circumstances which a native might sue.' Congress having no power to abridge the rights conferred by the Constitution upon those who have become naturalized citizens by virtue of acts of Congress, a fortiori, no act or omission of Congress, as to the providing for the naturalization of parents or children of a particular race, can affect citizenship acquired as a birthright, by virtue of the Constitution itself, without any aid of legislation."

(U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649. As to loss of citizenship, compare Mackenzie v. Hare, 239 U. S., 299.)

Naturalization of enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps.—Special provision has been made by Congress in these cases, which form exceptions to the general naturalization law. (See act May 9, 1918, 40 Stat., 542.)

Deserters from the military or naval service, who desert in time of war, "are deemed to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights of citizenship, as well as their right to become citizens; and such deserters shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof." (Sec. 1998, R. S., as amended by act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 356.)

For other statutes and decisions relating to citizenship and naturalization, see note to Amendments, Art. XIV.

[CLAUSE 5. Coinage, weights, and measures.] ⁵ To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

[CLAUSE 6. Counterfeiting.] ⁶ To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

[CLAUSE 7. Post offices and post roads.] ⁷ To establish Post Offices and post Roads;

[CLAUSE 8. Patents and copyrights.] ⁸ To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

Right of Government to use a patent.—Congress has provided that the owner of any patented invention may recover reasonable compensation by suit in the Court of Claims for the unauthorized use thereof by the United States; but that this shall not apply to any device invented by any person while in the employment or service of the United States, or who is in such employment or service at the time of making claim, or to the assignee of any such patentee. (Act June 25, 1910, 36 Stat., 851, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 705. See also act Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 10 (i), 40 Stat., 422.)

"It has been determined that the Government of the United States has no right to use a patented invention without compensation to the owner, under the constitutional provision that in the exercise of the power of eminent domain it may take private property for public use, but not without making just compensation therefor. (U. S. v. Burns, 12 Wall., 246; Cammer v. Newton, 94 U. S., 225; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S., 356; Hollister v. Benedict Mfg. Co., 113 U. S., 59; U. S. v. Palmer, 128 U. S., 262; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S., 10.)" 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 302.)

[CLAUSE 9. Inferior courts.] ⁹ To constitute Tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court;

Courts-martial.—This clause does not apply to military and naval courts, which form no part of the judicial system of the United States, but are instrumentalities of the executive, created by Congress under its power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." (See Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 500; Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 78; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 137; U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313; Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6349; Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322; O. M. O. 24, 1914, p. 19.)

Judicial system of United States.—The United States has been divided by Congress into "judicial districts" and "judicial circuits." Each State comprises one or more judicial districts, and in each district there is a court called a District Court for which there are provided one or more district judges, with a few exceptions in which only one judge is provided for two districts in the same State. There are nine judicial circuits, each of which necessarily embraces a number of judicial districts. In each judicial circuit there is a Circuit Court of Appeals consisting of three judges, who may be either circuit judges, of whom two or more are authorized for each judicial circuit, or any of the district judges within the circuit. In addition, the justices of the Supreme Court, of whom there are nine including the Chief Justice, are allotted one to each circuit, and are authorized to sit as judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals within their respective circuits, being designated as the "circuit justice" for the circuit.

The circuit courts of appeal for the respective circuits exercise appellate jurisdiction over the district courts within the circuit, except that in certain cases appeals and writs of error may be taken direct to the Supreme Court. The judgments of the circuit courts of appeal are final in a great many cases. In others, appeals and writs of error may be taken to the Supreme Court.

In addition, Congress has established special tribunals of very limited jurisdiction, such as consular courts, the Court of Claims, and the Court of Customs Appeals. It has also provided for courts in Alaska, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico. (See Judicial Code, act Mar. 3, 1911, 36 Stat., 1087.)

[CLAUSE 10. Crimes at sea and offenses against law of nations.] ¹⁰ To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

The judicial power of the United States embraces "all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." (Art. III, sec. 2, clause 1.)

Piracies and felonies committed on the high seas are defined and punished by the Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 290-310 (35 Stat., 1145-1148); offenses within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction are defined and punished by same act, secs. 272-289 (35 Stat., 1142-1145.)

Power of Congress to punish offenses.—The Constitution contains no grant to Congress of power to provide for the punishment of crimes except piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, offenses against the law of nations, treason, and counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States. Nevertheless, Congress has power to provide for the punishment of other crimes within the State or within the territory over which Congress has plenary and exclusive jurisdiction. (Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S., 283.)

Any act of Congress which plainly and directly tends to enhance the respect and love of the citizen for the institutions of his country and to quicken and strengthen his motives to defend them, and which is germane to and intimately connected with and appropriate to the exercise of some one or all of the powers granted by the Constitution to Congress, must be valid. (U. S. v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co., 160 U. S., 679.)

The Government of the Union is not dependent on the States for the execution of the great powers assigned to it; its means are adequate to its ends. (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat., 316, 424; In re Debs, 158 U. S., 578.)

Implied power in Congress to pass laws to define and punish offenses is also derived from the Constitutional grant to Congress to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, and to provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia and for governing of such part of them as may be employed in the public service. Like implied authority is also vested in Congress from the power conferred to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards and other needful buildings, and from the clause empowering Congress to pass all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or any department or officer thereof. (U. S. v. Hall, 98 U. S., 346; see also U. S. v. Barnow, 239 U. S., 77.)

Any act committed with a view to evading the legislation of Congress passed in the execution of any of its powers, or of fraudulently securing the benefit of such legislation, may properly be made an offense against the United States. But an act committed within a State, whether for a good or a bad purpose, or whether with an honest or a criminal intent, can not be made an offense against the United States unless it has some relation to the execution of a power of Congress or to some matter within the jurisdiction of the United States. An act not having any such relation is one in respect to which the State can alone legislate. (U. S. v. Fox, 95 U. S., 672.)

Miscellaneous cases.—U. S. v. White, 27 Fed. Rep., 203 (not necessary for Congress to name offense); U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat., 157 (not necessary for Congress to define the offense); U. S. v. Kelly, 11 Wheat., 417 (judicial definition of offense not defined by Congress); U. S. v. Holmes, 5 Wheat., 417 (offense on vessel held by pirates); U. S. v. Bowers, 5 Wheat., 198 (offense committed by foreigner on foreign vessel at sea); U. S. v. Arjona, 120 U. S., 484 (offense against law of nations). See also, U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat., 610; U. S. v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat., 76; U. S. v. Pirates, 5 Wheat., 184; U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 336.

"That the laws of nations constitute a part of the laws of the land is established from the face of the Constitution, upon principle and by authority. But the laws of war constitute much the greater part of the law of nations. Like the other laws of nations, they exist and are of binding force upon the departments and citizens of the Government, though not defined by any law of Congress." (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 299.)

[CLAUSE 11. Power to declare war and regulate captures, etc.] ¹¹ To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

I. THE WAR POWER.

II. PROPERTY OF BELLIGERENTS.

III. ACQUISITION AND GOVERNMENT OF TERRITORY.

IV. DISCIPLINE OF ARMY.

V. MARTIAL LAW.

I. THE WAR POWER.

Power of Congress to declare war and President's power as Commander in Chief.—"Congress has the power not only to raise and support and govern armies but to declare war. It has, therefore, the power to provide by law for carrying on war. This power necessarily extends to all legislation essential to the prosecution of war with vigor and success, except such as interferes with the command of forces and the conduct of campaigns. That power and duty belong to the President as Commander in Chief. Both these powers are derived from the Constitution, but neither is defined by that instrument. Their extent must be determined by their nature and by the principles of our institutions. The power to make the necessary laws is in Congress, the power to execute in the President. Both powers imply many subordinate and auxiliary powers. Each includes all authority essential to its due exercise. But neither can the President in war more than in peace intrude upon the proper authority of Congress, nor Congress upon the proper authority of the President. Both are servants of the people, whose will is expressed in the fundamental law. Congress can not direct the conduct of campaigns, nor can the President or any commander under him, without the sanction of Congress, institute tribunals for the trial and punishment for offenses, either of soldiers or civilians, unless in cases of a controlling necessity which justifies what it compels, or at least insures acts of indemnity from the justice of the legislature." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, 139, concurring opinion of four justices; see also Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173, 221, affirmed, 165 U. S., 553; and see note to Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1.)

Power of President in advance of congressional action.—"If a war be made by invasion of a foreign nation, the President is not only authorized but bound to resist force by force. He does not initiate the war, but is bound to accept the challenge without waiting for any special legislative authority." (Prize Cases, 2 Black, 635.)

"Whether the President in fulfilling his duties as Commander in Chief in suppressing an insurrection has met with such armed hostile resistance and a civil war of such alarming proportions as will compel him to accord to them the character of belligerents is a question to be decided by him, and this court must be governed by the decisions and acts of the political department of the Government to which this power was intrusted. He must determine what degree of force the crisis demands. The proclamation of blockade is itself official and conclusive evidence to the court that a state of war existed which demanded and authorized a recourse to such a measure, under the circumstances peculiar to the case." (Prize Cases, 2 Black, 635.)

"A state of actual war may exist without any formal declaration of it by either party; and this is true of both a civil and a foreign war." (Prize Cases, 2 Black, 635.)

"That a foreign nation, or insurrectionary body of citizens, may by invasion of the United States or by other acts bring about a condition of affairs which will warrant the President in declaring, in advance of congressional legislation, that a state of war exists, was asserted by the Supreme Court in the Prize Cases." (2 Willoughby Const., 796.) [That power of declaring war is exclusive with Congress, see Perkins v. Rogers, 35 Ind., 167.]

"The question in the present case is, When did the Rebellion begin and end? * * * The proclamation of intended blockade by the President may, therefore, be assumed as marking the first of these dates, and the proclamation that the war had closed as marking the second." (The Protector, 12 Wall., 700.)

[The President's proclamations of intended blockade were issued on April 19 and 27, 1861; see also 102 U. S., 426, 438; 9 Wall., 71; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 572, 574; secs. 1997 and 4749, R. S.; proclamations that the war had closed were issued on April 2 and August 20, 1866.]

Extent of war power.—"The measures to be taken in carrying on war and to suppress insurrection are not defined. The decision of all such questions rests wholly in the discretion of those to whom the substantial powers involved are confided by the Constitution. In the latter case the power is not limited to victories in the field and to the dispersion of the insurrectionary forces. It carries with it inherently the power to guard against the immediate renewal of the conflict and to remedy the evils which have arisen from its rise and progress." (Stewart v. Kahn, 11 Wall., 493.)

The power to prohibit the liquor traffic as a means of increasing war efficiency is part of the war power of Congress. (Hamilton v. Kentucky Distilleries Co., 251 U. S., 146; Rupert v. Caffey, 251 U. S., 264.)

Congress has the authority to raise and support armies and to make rules and regulations for the protection of the health and welfare of those composing them against the evils of prostitution, and may leave the details of such regulations to the Secretary of War. A citizen may legally be convicted of setting up a house of ill fame within five miles of a military station, that being the distance designated by the Secretary of War in regulations made by him under the act of May 18, 1917, section 13 (40 Stat., 76). (McKinley v. U. S., 249 U. S., 397.)

II. PROPERTY OF BELLIGERENTS.

Effect of declaration of war.—"The people of the two countries become immediately the enemies of each other—all intercourse, commercial or otherwise, between them unlawful—all contracts existing at the commencement of the war suspended, and all made during its existence utterly void. The insurance of enemies' property, the drawing of bills of exchange or purchase on the enemies' country, the remission of bills or money to it are illegal and void. Existing partnerships between citizens or subjects of the two countries are dissolved and, in fine, interdiction of trade and intercourse, direct or indirect, is absolute and complete by the mere force and effect of war itself. All the property of the people of the two countries on land or sea are subject to capture and confiscation by the adverse party as enemies' property, with certain qualifications as it respects property on land (Brown v. U. S., 8 Cranch, 110). All treaties between the belligerent parties are annulled. The ports of the respective countries may be blockaded, and letters of marque and reprisal granted as rights of war, and the law of prizes as defined by the law of nations comes into full and complete operation, resulting from maritime captures, jure belli. War also effects a change in the mutual relations of all States or countries, not directly, as in the case of belligerents, but immediately and indirectly, though they have no part in the contest, but remain neutral."

(Prize Cases, 2 Black, 635, 682, dissenting opinion Justice Nelson; see also McCormick v. Humphrey, 27 Ind., 154; Perkins v. Rogers, 35 Ind., 167.)

Confiscation of enemy property.—"War gives the right to confiscate but does not of itself confiscate the property of the enemy." (Brown v. U. S., 8 Cranch, 110; see also Britton v. Butler, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1903; Wagner v. Schooner Juanita, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 17039; Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall., 304; Brown v. Hiatt, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2011.)

"When war breaks out the question what shall be done with enemy property in our country is a question rather of policy than of law. The rule which we apply to the property of our enemy will be applied by him to the property of our citizens. Like all other questions of policy it is proper for the consideration of a department which can modify it at will; not for the consideration of a department which can pursue only the law as it is written. It is proper for the consideration of the legislature, not of the executive or judiciary." (Brown v. U. S., 8 Cranch, 110.)

Authority of military commander to seize private property.—"Private property may be taken by a military commander to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy or for the purpose of converting it to the use of the public; but the danger must be immediate and impending, or the necessity urgent for the public service such as will not admit of delay and where the action of the civil authority would be too late in providing the means which the occasion calls for. The facts as they appeared to the officer must furnish the rule for the application of these principles. But the officer can not take possession of private property for the purpose of insuring the success of a distant expedition upon which he is about to march." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

"If private property there [in conquered territory] was taken by an officer or a soldier of the occupying army, acting in his military character, when by the laws of war or the proclamation of the commanding general it should have been exempt from seizure, the owner could have complained to that commander, who might have ordered restitution or sent the offending party before a military tribunal, as circumstances might have required, or he could have had recourse to the Government for redress. But there can be no doubt of the right of the Army to appropriate any property there, although belonging to private individuals, which was necessary for its support or convenient for its use. This was a belligerent right which was not extinguished by the occupation of the country, although the necessity for its exercise was thereby lessened. However exempt from seizure on other grounds private property there may have been, it was always subject to be appropriated when required by the necessities or convenience of the Army, though the owner of property taken in such case may have had a just claim against the Government for indemnity." (Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158, 167; compare, Heflebower v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 237; U. S. v. Pacific R. Co., 120 U. S., 239; Alexander v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 383; 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 111; Wiggins's Case, 3 Ct. Cls., 413.)

"Extraordinary and unforeseen occasions arise, however, beyond a doubt, in cases of extreme necessity in time of war or of immediate or impending danger in which private property may be impressed into the public service or may be seized and appropriated to the public use or may even be destroyed without the consent of the owner. * * * The rule is well settled that the officer taking private property for such a purpose, if the emergency is fully proved, is not a trespasser and that the Government is bound to make full compensation to the owner." (U. S. v. Russell, 13 Wall., 623.)

Status of inhabitants in enemy country.—"The district of country declared by the constituted authorities during the late Civil War to be in insurrection against the Government of the United States was enemy territory, and all the people residing within such district were, according to public law and for all purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, liable to be treated by the United States, pending the war and while they remained within the lines of insurrection, as enemies without reference to their personal sentiments and dispositions." (Ford v. Surget, 97 U. S., 594.)

"It is said that, though remaining in rebel territory, Mrs. Alexander has no personal sympathy with the rebel cause and that her property therefore can not be regarded as enemy property; but the court can not inquire into the personal character and dispositions of individual inhabitants of enemy territory. We must be governed by the principle of public law so often announced by this bench as applicable alike to civil and international wars, that all the people of each State or district in insurrection against the United States must be regarded as enemies until, by action of the legislature and the executive, or otherwise, that relation is thoroughly and permanently changed." (Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, 2 Wall., 404; see also, Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall., 268, sustaining laws providing for confiscation of private property owned by friendly as well as hostile inhabitants of the Confederate States.)

III. ACQUISITION AND GOVERNMENT OF TERRITORY.

Power to acquire territory.—"The genius and character of our institutions are peaceful, and the power to declare war was not conferred upon Congress for the purposes of aggression or aggrandizement, but to enable the General Government to vindicate by arms if it should become necessary its own rights and the rights of its citizens. A war, therefore, declared by Congress can never be presumed to be waged for the purpose of conquest or the acquisition of territory; nor does the law declaring the war imply an authority to the President to enlarge the limits of the United States by subjugating the enemy's territory. The United States, it is true, may enlarge its boundaries by conquest or treaty and may demand the cession of territory as a condition of peace in order to indemnify its citizens for the injuries they have suffered, or to reimburse the Government for the expense of the war; but this can be done only by the treaty-making power or the legislative authority, and is not a part of the power conferred upon the President by the declaration of war. His duty and power are purely military. * * * He may invade the hostile country and subject it to the sovereignty and authority of the United States; but his conquests do not enlarge the boundaries of this Union nor extend the operations of our institutions and laws beyond the limits before assigned to them by the legislative power." (Fleming v. Page, 9 How., 603.)

"The Constitution confers absolutely upon the Government of the Union the power of making war and of making treaties; consequently that Government possesses the power of acquiring territory, either by conquest or treaty." (American Insurance Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet., 511.)

"The war power and the treaty-making power each carries with it authority to acquire new territory." (Stewart v. Kahn, 11 Wall., 493.)

"The power to acquire territory, either by conquest or treaty, is vested by the Constitution in the United States." (U. S. v. Huckabee, 16 Wall., 414.)

The port of Tampico, Mexico, while in the military possession of the United States and governed by its military authorities acting under the orders of the President, was not a part of the United States and did not cease to be a foreign country in the sense in which these words are used in the acts of Congress. "It is true that when Tampico had been captured and the state of Tamaulipas subjugated, other nations were bound to regard the country while our possession continued as the territory of the United States and to respect it as such. * * * As regards all other nations it was a part of the United States and belonged to them as exclusively as the territory included in our established boundaries. But yet it was not a part of this Union. For every nation which acquires territory by treaty or conquest holds it according to its own institutions and laws. * * * The power of the President under which Tampico and the state of Tamaulipas were conquered and held in subjection was simply that of a military commander prosecuting a war waged against a public enemy by the authority of his Government." Tampico therefore continued to be a foreign port "nor did our laws extend over it." (Fleming v. Page, 9 How., 603.)

Status of Porto Rico while under military government previous to ratification of treaty of peace ceding the island to the United States: "During this period the United States and Porto Rico were still foreign countries with respect to each other. * * * The fact that notwithstanding the military occupation of the United States Porto Rico remained a foreign country within the revenue laws is established by the case of Fleming v. Page." (Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S., 222.)

"Cuba is none the less foreign territory, within the meaning of the act of Congress, because it is under a military government appointed by and representing the President in the work of assisting the inhabitants of that island to establish a government of their own under which as a free and independent people they may control their own affairs without interference by other nations." As between the United States and all foreign nations, Cuba was to be treated as if it were conquered territory. "But as between the United States and Cuba, that island is territory held in trust for the inhabitants of Cuba to whom it rightfully belongs." (Neely v. Henkel, 180 U. S., 109; see also 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 120.)

Government of conquered territory during war.—By the conquest and military occupation of the port of Castine, Me., by the British during the War of 1812, "the enemy acquired that firm possession which enabled him to exercise the fullest rights of sovereignty over that place. The sovereignty of the United States over the territory was, of course, suspended and the laws of the United States could no longer be rightfully enforced there or be obligatory upon the inhabitants who remained and submitted to the conquerors. By the surrender the inhabitants passed under a temporary allegiance to the British Government and were bound by such laws, and such only, as it chose to recognize and impose. From the nature of the case no other laws could be obligatory upon them; for where there is no protection or allegiance or sovereignty there can be no claim to obedience." (U. S. v. Rice, 4 Wheat., 246.)

"Although the city of New Orleans was conquered and taken possession of in a civil war waged on the part of the United States to put down an insurrection and restore the supremacy of the National Government in the Confederate States, that Government had the same power and rights in territory held by conquest as if the territory had belonged to a foreign country and had been subjugated in a foreign war. * * *

In such cases the conquering power has a right to displace the preexisting authority and to assume to such an extent as it may deem proper the exercise by itself of all the powers and functions of government. It may appoint all the necessary officers and clothe them with designated powers, larger or smaller, according to its pleasure. It may prescribe the revenues to be paid and apply them to its own use or otherwise. It may do anything necessary to strengthen itself and weaken the enemy. There is no limit to the powers that may be exerted in such cases save those which are found in the laws and usages of war. * * * In such cases the laws of war take the place of the Constitution and laws of the United States as applied in time of peace." (New Orleans v. New York Mail S. S. Co., 20 Wall., 387; Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S., 222.)

"While his [military commander's] power is necessarily despotic, this must be understood rather in an administrative than in a legislative sense. While in legislating for a conquered country he may disregard the laws of that country, he is not wholly above the laws of his own. * * * His power to administer would be absolute, but his power to legislate would not be without certain restrictions—in other words, they would not extend beyond the necessities of the case. * * * It was said that the courts established in Mexico during the war 'were nothing more than the agents of the military power to assist it in preserving order in the conquered territory and to protect the inhabitants in their persons and property while it was occupied by the American arms. They were subject to the military power and their decisions under its control whenever the commanding officer thought proper to interfere. They were not courts of the United States and had no right to adjudicate upon a question of 'prize or no prize,' although Congress in the exercise of its general authority in relation to the national courts would have power to validate their action." (Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S., 222.)

"So long as the war continued it can not be denied that he [the President] might institute temporary governments in insurgent districts occupied by the national forces or take measures in any States for the restoration of State governments faithful to the Union, employing, however, in such efforts only such means and agents as were authorized by constitutional laws." (Texas v. White, 7 Wall., 700.)

"The municipal laws—that is, such as affect private rights of persons and property and provide for the punishment of crime—are generally allowed to remain in force and to be administered by the ordinary tribunals as they were administered before the occupation. They are considered as continuing unless suspended or superseded by the occupying belligerent." (Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158.)

"While we see no reason to doubt the conclusion of the court that the port of Tampico [during its occupation by the United States in the Mexican War] was still a foreign port, it is not perceived why the fact that there was no act of Congress establishing a customhouse there or authorizing the appointment of a collector should have prevented the collector appointed by the military commander from granting the usual documents required to be issued to a vessel engaged in the coasting trade. A collector, though appointed by a military commander, may be presumed to have the ordinary power of a collector under an act of Congress, with authority to grant clearances to ports within the United States, though, of course, he would have no power to make a domestic port of what was in reality a foreign port." (De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 1.)

Government of conquered and ceded territory after war.—See note to Article IV, section 3, clause 2.

IV. DISCIPLINE OF ARMY.

Jurisdiction over persons in military service during war.—"The question here is, What is the law which governs an army invading an enemy's country? It is not the civil law of the invaded country. It is not the civil law of the conquering country. It is military law—the law of war—and its supremacy for the protection of the officers and soldiers of the Army when in service in the field in the enemy's country is as essential to the efficiency of the Army as the supremacy of the civil law at home and in time of peace is essential to the preservation of liberty." (Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158, 170.)

"This doctrine of nonliability to the tribunals of the invaded country for acts of warfare is as applicable to members of the Confederate Army when in Pennsylvania as to members of the National Army when in the insurgent States. The officers or soldiers of neither Army could be called to account civilly or criminally in those tribunals for such acts, whether those acts resulted in the destruction of property or the destruction of life. Nor could they be required by those tribunals to explain or justify their conduct upon any averment of the injured party that the acts complained of were unauthorized by the necessities of war." (Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158, 169.)

Courts-martial did not have exclusive jurisdiction to try persons in the Army for offenses punishable by State laws during the Civil War while they were in States "occupying as members of the Union their normal and constitutional relation to the Federal Government, in which the supremacy of that Government was recognized and the civil courts were open and in the undisturbed exercise of their jurisdiction. When the armies of the United States were in the territory of insurgent States, banded together in hostility to the National Government, and making war against it—in other words, when the armies of the United States were in the enemy's country—the military tribunals mentioned had under the laws of war and the authority conferred by the section named exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish offenses of every grade committed by persons in the military service. Officers and soldiers of the armies of the Union were not subject during the war to the laws of the enemy or amenable to his tribunals for offenses committed by them. They were answerable only to their own Government and only by its laws as enforced by its armies could they be punished. * * * The fact that when the offense was committed for which the defendant was indicted the State of Tennessee was in the military occupation of the United States with a military governor at its head appointed by the President can not alter this conclusion. Tennessee was one of the insurgent States forming the organization known as the Confederate States, against which the war was waged. Her territory was enemy's country, and its character in this respect was not changed until long afterwards * * *. The laws of the State for the punishment of crime were continued in force only for the protection and benefit of its own people." (Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 513, 515; see also Tennessee v. Hibdon, 23 Fed. Rep., 795; 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570.)

When the armies of the United States are in the enemy's country, the established military tribunals of the United States have under the laws of war and statutory authority exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish offenses of every grade committed by persons in the military service. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570, citing Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509.)

"While it is true that the jurisdiction of military tribunals is not exclusive in time of peace and in territory where the supremacy of the United States is recognized and the relations between the local government and the National Government normal, and where also the exercise of jurisdiction of the local civil courts is not disturbed, it is equally true that when the armies of the United States are in hostile territory, and as in the present case engaged in actual warfare, the jurisdiction of such tribunals over such offenses is exclusive; and it is evident from the decisions cited that in reference to the present question [Philippine insurrection] the country was none the less 'enemy's country' and the territory hostile because it was harassed by insurrection against a sovereignty perfect in law rather than attacked or defended by a recognized belligerent." (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570.)

"It is well settled that a foreign army permitted to march through a friendly country or to be stationed in it by authority of its sovereign or government is exempt from its civil and criminal jurisdiction * * *. Much more must this exemption prevail where a hostile army invades an enemy's country. There would be something singularly absurd in permitting an officer or soldier of an invading army to be tried by his enemy whose country it had invaded. The same reasons for his exemption from criminal prosecution apply to civil proceedings. There would be as much incongruity and as little likelihood of freedom from the irritations of the war in civil as in criminal proceedings prosecuted during its continuance. In both instances, from the very nature of war the tribunals of the enemy must be without jurisdiction to sit in judgment upon the military conduct of the officers and soldiers of the invading army * * *. It is manifest that if officers or soldiers of the Army could be required to leave their posts and troops upon the summons of every local tribunal on pain of a judgment by default against them which at the termination of hostilities could be enforced by suit in their own States, the efficiency of the Army as a hostile force would be utterly destroyed." (Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158, 165.)

"Nor is the position of the invading belligerent affected or his relation to the local tribunals changed by his temporary occupation and domination of any portion of the enemy's country * * *. The municipal laws—that is, such as affect private rights of persons and property and provide for the punishment of crime—are generally allowed to remain in force and to be administered by the ordinary tribunals as they were administered before the occupation. They are considered as continuing unless suspended or superseded by the occupying belligerent. But their continued enforcement is not for the protection or control of the army or its officers or soldiers. These remain subject to the laws of war and are responsible for their conduct only to their own government and the tribunals by which those laws are administered. If guilty of wanton cruelty to persons or of unnecessary spoliation of property or of other acts not authorized by the laws of war, they may be tried and punished by the military tribunals. They are amenable to no other tribunal except that of public opinion, which it is to be hoped will always brand with infamy all who authorize or sanction acts of cruelty and oppression." (Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158; see also 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570.)

An officer of the Army may be sued in the courts of the United States for unauthorized seizure of the property of a citizen traveling with the Army as a trader during the war with Mexico. "The trespass was committed out of the limits of the United States. But an action may be maintained in the circuit court for any district in which the defendant may be found upon process against him where the citizenship of the respective parties gives jurisdiction to a court of the United States." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

The validity of a seizure by a United States officer in command of troops while in an insurgent State could not be tried in a municipal court in a common-law proceeding, where the property seized belonged to an enemy, as such seizure was an act of war and no action can be maintained in such court against the captor of booty. This conclusion does not conflict with the ruling of the Supreme Court in Mitchell v. Harmony, as there the property in question belonged to a citizen and not to an enemy. (Coolidge v. Guthrie, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3185.)

An officer of the Federal Army was sued in New Orleans for seizure of private property by a subordinate officer under his authority, alleged to be a wanton abuse of power. Judgment was entered against defendant, with interest and costs. Suit was brought on this judgment in the Federal court for the district of Maine and judgment entered by that court for $2,659.67 and costs. This was reversed by the Supreme Court on ground that lower courts were without jurisdiction. (Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158.)

An officer in the Army of the United States who, while operating in the Philippines during the insurrection in those islands and while the government of military occupation was in force therein, committed homicide against a native of those islands, was amenable only to the laws of war and could not be tried by the civil courts of those islands or of the United States; and having left the military service, he could not be tried for the offense by a military court. A court-martial has no jurisdiction over an officer after he has left the service, and a military commission has no jurisdiction to try such officer after peace has been proclaimed. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570.) [While the United States was not at war with any recognized power during the Philippine insurrection, nevertheless a state of war existed for certain purposes as to all the military forces of the United States directly engaged in the suppression of said insurrection (7 Comp. Dec., 345); see note to section 290, Revised Statutes.]

An officer of United States Volunteers was charged with having deliberately murdered a brother officer during the Mexican War at a place in Mexico occupied by the United States troops and under the jurisdiction of the United States. He escaped to the United States during the progress of his trial by a military commission. Held, that he could not be tried by any civil court of the United States; and the volunteer forces to which he belonged having been disbanded and mustered out of the service, he could not be brought to trial by a military court as for a military offense. "However much it is to be regretted that the extraordinary case of Capt. Foster should escape a judicial or military investigation, it is of infinitely higher moment that the constitutional principles of the Government as wisely expounded by the judiciary should be upheld and enforced. If the country hereafter should be likely to be placed in circumstances under which a similar case might arise, Congress can easily provide against a recurrence of the difficulties of the present case." (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 55.)

V. MARTIAL LAW.

Military jurisdiction over civilians in time of war.—"There are under the Constitution three kinds of military jurisdiction: One to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within the States or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of States maintaining adhesion to the National Government, when the public danger requires its exercise. The first of these may be called jurisdiction under the military law, and is found in acts of Congress prescribing rules and articles of war, or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces; the second may be distinguished as military government, superseding, as far as may be deemed expedient, the local law, and exercised by the military commander, under the direction of the President, with the express or implied sanction of Congress; while the third may be denominated martial law proper, and is called into action by Congress or temporarily when the action of Congress can not be invited, in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President, in times of insurrection or invasion, or of civil or foreign war, within districts or localities whose ordinary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, 141, concurring opinion of four justices.)

"Martial law is the law of military necessity in the actual presence of war. It is administered by the general of the Army, and is in fact his will." (U. S. v. Diekelman, 92 U. S., 520. For other definitions, see 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 365; In re Egan, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4303; In re Ezeta, 62 Fed. Rep., 972.)

"What has been called the paramount law of self-defense, common to all countries, has established the rule that whatever force is necessary is also lawful. 'Whatever force is necessary for self-defense is also lawful. This law, applied nationally, is the martial law, which is an offshoot of the common law, and although ordinarily dormant in peace, may be called forth by insurrection or invasion.'" (Commonwealth v. Shortall, 206 Pa. St., 165; 65 L. R. A., 193.)

"The right in the military officer to govern by martial law, as we have said, arises upon the fact of existing or immediately impending force at a given place and time, against legal authority, which the civil authority is incompetent to overcome; and it is exercised precisely upon the principle on which self-defense justifies the use of force by individuals. * * * That is, there are cases where force must be resisted by force, instead of waiting for the civil authorities. * * * This is the doctrine expressed by the maxim, inter arma silent leges; * * * that is, that in the midst of actual force, for arms is used as meaning force, the law is silent." (Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind., 370.)

"As has been said by a distinguished civilian, 'when foreign invasion or civil war renders it impossible for courts of law to sit, or to enforce the execution of their judgments, it becomes necessary to find some rude substitute for them and to employ for that purpose the military, which is the only remaining force in the community; and, while the laws are silenced by the noise of arms, the rulers of the armed force must punish, as equitably as they can, those crimes which threaten their own safety and that of society; but no longer.' This necessity must be shown affirmatively by the party assuming to exercise this extraordinary and irregular power over the life, liberty, and property of the citizen, whenever it is called in question." (In re Egan, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4303.)

"Public danger warrants the substitution of executive process for judicial process." (Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U. S., 78.)

"Unquestionably a State may use its military power to put down an armed insurrection too strong to be controlled by the civil authority. The power is essential to the existence of every government, essential to the preservation of order and free institutions, and is as necessary to the States of this Union as to any other government. The State itself must determine what degree of force the crisis demands. And if the government of Rhode Island deemed the armed opposition so formidable and so ramified throughout the State as to require the use of the military force and the declaration of martial law, we see no ground upon which this court can question its authority. It was a state of war, and the established government resorted to the rights and usages of war to maintain itself and to overcome the unlawful opposition." (Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1.)

"It is not unfrequently said that the community must be either in a state of peace or war, as there is no intermediate state. But from the point of view now under consideration this is an error. There may be peace for all the ordinary purposes of life and yet a state of disorder, violence, and danger in special directions, which, though not technically war, has in its limited field the same effect, and if important enough to call for martial law for suppression is not distinguishable, so far as the powers of the commanding officer are concerned, from actual war. The condition in fact exists, and the law must recognize it, no matter how opinions may differ as to what it should be most correctly called." (Commonwealth v. Shortall, 206 Pa. St., 165; 65 L. R. A., 193.)

Martial law "is called into action by Congress, or temporarily, when the action of Congress can not be invited, in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, concurring opinion; see also Despan v. Olney, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3822.)

"It is to be borne in mind that this power is not one to be exercised only by the highest officers of the Government, in whose hands it might be exercised with moderation. It is claimed for the President as Commander in Chief and as incident to a state of war. But if it exists at all it exists as the law of war or martial law, and may be exercised by the military officer in command of any district without reference to his rank, as rightfully as by the President himself. He might be afraid to exercise it without orders from his superior, but if it exists at all it belongs to him as well as to the President." (Johnson v. Jones, 44 Ill., 143; 92 Am. Dec., 159.)

Limitations upon exercise of martial law.—"Martial law can not arise from a threatened invasion. The necessity must be actual and present; the invasion real, such as effectually closes the courts and deposes the civil administration. * * * There are occasions when martial rule can be properly applied. If in foreign invasions or civil war the courts are actually closed and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then on the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority thus overthrown, to preserve the safety of the Army and society; and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course. As necessity creates the rule, so it limits its duration, for if this government is continued after the courts are reinstated it is a gross usurpation of power. Martial rule can never exist where the courts are open and in the proper and unobstructed exercise of their jurisdiction. It is also confined to the locality of actual war." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2.)

"A citizen not connected with the military service and resident in a State where the courts are open and in the proper exercise of their jurisdiction can not, even when the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is suspended, be tried, convicted, or sentenced otherwise than by the ordinary courts of law." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 3.)

The Federal authority having been unopposed in the State of Indiana and the Federal courts open for the trial of offenses and the redress of grievances, the usages of war could not, under the Constitution, afford any sanction for the trial there of a citizen in civil life not connected with the military or naval service by a military tribunal for any offense whatever. "It is claimed that martial law covers, with its broad mantle, the proceedings of this military commission. The proposition is this: that in a time of war the commander of an armed force (if in his opinion the exigencies of the country demand it and of which he is the judge) has the power, within the lines of his military district, to suspend all civil rights and their remedies and subject citizens, as well as soldiers, to the rule of his will; and in the exercise of his lawful authority can not be restrained except by his superior officer or the President of the United States. * * * Martial law established on such a basis destroys every guaranty of the Constitution and effectually renders the 'military independent of and superior to the civil power.' * * * Civil liberty and this kind of martial law can not endure together. * * * It will be borne in mind that this is not a question of the power to proclaim martial law when war exists in a community and the courts and civil authorities are overthrown." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 3, 124-127.)

"Martial law is exercised in our country, the military being on the spot to execute it where no civil authority exists; but where the civil authority exists, the Constitution is imperative that it shall be paramount to the military." (Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind., 370.)

"Martial law is restricted to those places which are the theater of war and to their immediate vicinity. Modified by the necessities of war, it is obvious it can not operate beyond these bounds." (In re Kemp, 16 Wis., 359.)

"Neither can even the Commander in Chief of the Army extend martial law beyond the sphere of military operations. If he possessed this power, in time of war or insurrection, over the whole extent of the Nation, whether within the theater of military operations or not, the political institutions and laws of the land would be entirely at his mercy." (Jones v. Seward, 40 Barb. (N. Y.), 563.)

"But when the civil courts, in the midst of loyal communities, are exercising their ordinary jurisdiction, the appeal to the military arm or to martial law is needless." (Johnson v. Jones, 44 Ill., 143; 92 Am. Dec., 159.)

See note to Article I, section 8, clause 13, "civil responsibility of persons in military service."

Effect of martial law.—When martial law is declared by a State during a local insurrection, "the officers engaged in its military service might lawfully arrest anyone who, from the information before them, they had reasonable grounds to believe was engaged in the insurrection, and might order a house to be forcibly entered and searched when there were reasonable grounds for supposing he might be there concealed. Without the power to do this, martial law and the military array of the Government would be mere parade and rather encourage attack than repel it." (Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1.)

"The effect of martial law is to put into operation the powers and methods vested in the commanding officer by military law. So far as his powers for the preservation of order and security of life and property are concerned, there is no limit but the necessities and exigency of the situation; and in this respect there is no difference between a public war and domestic insurrection." (Commonwealth v. Shortall, 206 Pa. St., 165; 65 L. R. A., 193.)

Martial law "overrides and suppresses all existing civil laws, civil officers, and civil authorities by the arbitrary exercise of military power; and every citizen or subject, in other words the entire population of the country, within the confines of its power, is subjected to the mere will or caprice of the commander. He holds the lives, liberty, and property of all in the palm of his hand. Martial law is regulated by no known or established system or code of laws, as it is over and above all of them. The commander is the legislator, judge, and executioner. His order to the provost marshal is the beginning and the end of the trial and condemnation of the accused. There may be a hearing, or not, at his will. If permitted, it may be before a drumhead court-martial or the more formal board of a military commission, or both forms may be dispensed with and the trial and condemnation be equally legal, though not equally humane and judicious." (In re Egan, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4303.)

"The will of the military chief * * * is, subject to slight limitations, the law of the military zone or theater of war. It is sometimes spoken of as a substitute for the civil law. It is said also that the proclamation of martial law ousts or suspends the civil jurisdiction. These expressions are hardly accurate. The invasion or insurrection sets aside, suspends, and nullifies the actual operation of the Constitution and laws. The guaranties of the Constitution as well as the common law and statutes, and the functions and powers of the courts and officers, become inoperative by virtue of the disturbance. The proclamation of martial law simply recognizes the status or condition of things resulting from the invasion or insurrection and declares it. In sending the army into such territory to occupy it and execute the will of the military chief for the time being, as a means of restoring peace and order, the executive merely adopts a method of restoring and making effective the Constitution and laws within that territory, in obedience to his sworn duty to support the Constitution and execute the laws." (State v. Brown, 71 W. Va., 519, 521; 33 Ann. Cas., 2.)

"In most, if not all, of the instances in which the civil courts have treated sentences of the military commissions as void, the commissions acted and the sentences were pronounced in tranquil territory, not covered by any proclamation of martial law, in which there was no actual war, in which the Constitution and laws were in full and unobstructed operation." (State v. Brown, 71 W. Va., 519, 524; 33 Ann. Cas., 3.) ["In some parts of the country, during the War of 1812, our officers made arbitrary arrests and by military tribunals tried citizens who were not in the military service. These arrests and trials when brought to the notice of the courts were uniformly condemned as illegal." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 128.)]

"Power to establish a military commission for the punishment of offenses committed within the military zone is challenged in argument; but we think such a commission is a recognized and necessary incident and instrumentality of martial government. A mere power of detention of offenders may be wholly inadequate to the exigencies and effectiveness of such government. How long an insurrection or a war may last depends upon its character." (State v. Brown, 71 W. Va., 519, 525; 33 Ann. Cas., 4.)

"So long as such arrests [without judicial process] are made in good faith and in the honest belief that they are needed in order to head the insurrection off, the governor is the final judge and can not be subjected to an action after he is out of office on the ground that he had not reasonable ground for his belief. * * * When it comes to a decision by the head of the state upon a matter involving its life, the ordinary rights of individuals must yield to what he deems the necessities of the moment." (Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U. S., 78.)

"No more force, however, can be used than is necessary to accomplish the object. And if the power is exercised for the purposes of oppression and any injury willfully done to person or property, the party by whom or by whose order it is committed will undoubtedly be answerable." (Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1.)

"It is an unbending rule of law that the exercise of military power where the rights of the citizen are concerned shall never be pushed beyond what the exigency requires." (Raymond v. Thomas, 91 U. S., 712.)

During the war of 1812 Gen. Jackson declared martial law in New Orleans. By his order some of the citizens were arrested for seditious publications. A writ of habeas corpus was issued and served on Gen. Jackson, who tore up the writ and sent the judge by force beyond his lines. Later, news was received of the treaty of peace and martial law revoked. The court issued a process against Jackson for contempt of court. He came into court personally, submitted to its jurisdiction, and paid a fine of $1,000. "I have always been taught to believe that Judge Hall was right in imposing the fine and that Gen. Jackson earned the brightest page in his history by paying it and gracefully submitting to the judicial power. Such I believe is the judgment of history and of thoughtful judicial inquirers, though a grateful country very properly refunded to her favorite general the sum he had paid for a necessary but unauthorized exercise of military power." (Dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Miller, Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158, 194; see also Ex parte Beck (245 Fed. Rep., 967, 973.)

Military commissions.—"The laws of war constitute much the greater part of the law of nations. Like the other laws of nations, they exist and are of binding force upon the departments and citizens of the Government, though not defined by any law of Congress * * * It is manifest from what has been said, that military tribunals exist under and according to the laws and usages of war in the interest of justice and mercy. They are established to save human life, and to prevent cruelty as far as possible. The commander of an army in time of war has the same power to organize military tribunals and execute their judgments that he has to set his squadrons in the field and fight battles. His authority in each case is from the law and usage of war. * * * That the laws of war authorized commanders to create and establish military commissions, courts, or tribunals for the trial of offenders against the laws of war, whether they be active or secret participants in the hostilities, can not be denied. * * * It must be constantly borne in mind that such tribunals * * * can not exist except in time of war, and can not then take cognizance of offenders or offences where the civil courts are open, except offenders and offences against the laws of war * * * The fact that the civil courts are open does not affect the right of the military tribunal to hold as a prisoner and to try. The civil courts have no more right to prevent the military, in time of war, from trying an offender against the laws of war than they have a right to interfere with and prevent a battle." (11 Op. Atty. Gen. 297, holding that "the persons charged with the assassination of the President in the city of Washington, on the 14th of April, 1865, may be lawfully tried before a military tribunal"; see also Carver v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 361; 111 U. S., 609.)

A military commission was without jurisdiction to try a member of the United States Army in occupation of Cuba in 1900, for homicide, notwithstanding that the offense was not cognizable by Army court-martial. Although Cuba was being governed by the President of the United States, principally by means of American soldiers, it did not have the status of martial law or military government. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 120.)

[CLAUSE 12. Raising and support of armies.] ¹² To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two years;

[CLAUSE 13. Provision for a Navy.] ¹³ To provide and maintain a Navy;

I. POWER TO PROVIDE NAVY.

II. FREEDOM FROM STATE INTERFERENCE.

III. JURISDICTION OF CIVIL AUTHORITIES.

IV. RESPONSIBILITY OF MILITARY AUTHORITIES FOR ILLEGAL ACTS.

V. PROTECTION OF MILITARY OFFICERS FOR ACTS DONE IN PERFORMANCE OF DUTY.

I. POWER TO PROVIDE NAVY.

Distinguished from power to govern Navy.—"The power to formulate Articles for the Government of the Navy and punish individual officers for violation thereof is conferred upon Congress by the clause of the Constitution authorizing it 'to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;' [Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14.] The power to provide what persons may be appointed or enlisted in the naval service, the qualifications they must possess, and the total number of the entire force, is conferred by the clause authorizing the Congress 'to provide and maintain a Navy.' Statutes passed under the first clause mentioned are penal and are to be enforced by courts-martial; those passed under the second clause are enacted in the interest of the Navy at large and are to be administered by the President either alone or with the aid of examining boards or such other instrumentalities as may be determined upon by Congress. Persons excluded from appointment for lack of any required qualification—health, age, nationality, height, temperament, or any other condition that Congress might see fit to impose—are not being punished under penal laws for their failure to measure up to the necessary requirements, but are merely incidentally affected by the Government's policy * * * ." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, pp. 24-25; see also Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 15, 1918, file 26282-326: 2.)

Acquiring and manning ships of war.—This clause authorizes the Government to buy or build any number of steam or other ships of war, to man, arm, and otherwise prepare them for war, and to dispatch them to any accessible

Rules governing military commissions and provost courts convened by naval authority are published in C. M. O. Nos. 13, 1916, page 6, and 15, 1917, page 8.

See "Unconstitutional Claims of Military Authority," published in Journal of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, vol. 5, page 718, for criticism of decisions of the United States Supreme Court and other authorities above cited; see also, Johnson v. Duncan, 3 Martin (La.) 530, 6 Am. Dec. 675, cited in dissenting opinion in Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 83, in dissenting opinion in Re Moyer, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979, 35 Colo. 159, etc.

part of the globe; and to establish a naval academy to prepare young men for the naval service. (U. S. v. Rhodes, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16151.) Similar authority might be implied in the power to "declare war." (U. S. v. Burlington, etc., Ferry Co., 21 Fed. Rep., 340.)

Power to compel military service.—Powers granted to Congress by Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, include power to compel military service, exercised by the selective draft law of May 18, 1917 (40 Stat., 76). This conclusion, obvious upon the face of the Constitution, is confirmed by a historical examination of the subject. (Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U. S., 366.)

Allowance of pensions.—Congress is empowered to give or withhold a pension, to prescribe who may receive it, and to determine all the circumstances and conditions under which any application therefor shall be prosecuted. No man has a legal right to a pension; the whole control of the matter is within the domain of congressional power. (Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U. S., 166; see also U. S. v. Van Leuven, 62 Fed. Rep., 56.)

II. FREEDOM FROM STATE INTERFERENCE.

State interference with Federal instrumentalities.—The principle that no State has the right to interfere with the instrumentalities of the Federal Government has been recognized from the earliest days of our Government. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911, and 26524-54, Feb. 12, 1914.)

"Such is the law with reference to all instrumentalities created by the Federal Government. Their exemption from State control is essential to the independence and sovereign authority of the United States within the sphere of their delegated powers." (Fort Leavenworth, etc. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525.)

"Such being the distinct and independent character of the two Governments within their respective spheres of action, it follows that neither can intrude with its judicial process into the domain of the other, except so far as such intrusion may be necessary on the part of the National Government to preserve its rightful supremacy in cases of conflict of authority. In their laws and mode of enforcement neither is responsible to the other. How their respective laws shall be enacted; how they shall be carried into execution; and in what tribunals, or by what officers; and how much discretion, and whether any at all, shall be vested in their officers, are matters subject to their own control, in the regulation of which neither can interfere with the other. Now, among the powers assigned to the National Government is the power to raise and support armies and the power to provide for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. * * * No interference with the execution of this power of the National Government in the formation, organization, and government of the armies by any State officials could be permitted without greatly impairing the efficiency, if it did not utterly destroy, this branch of the public service." (U. S. v. Tarble, 13 Wall., 397.)

"A building on a tract of land owned by the United States, used as a fort, or for other public purposes of the Federal Government, is exempted, as an instrumentality of the Government, from any such control or interference by the State as will defeat or embarrass its effective use for those purposes" [although such land may not be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States]. (Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S., 545, explaining Ft. Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525.)

"If any particular State had it in its power to intermeddle with the police and government of an Army or Navy * * * upon any pretext, there would be an end of the exclusive authority of the United States in this respect. Wars and other measures unpopular in particular sections of the country might be impeded in their prosecution by the interference of the State authorities. Such a conflict of jurisdictions must terminate in anarchy and confusion." (Argument of Attorney-General, U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 374.)

"National banks are instrumentalities of the Federal Government. * * * It follows that an attempt by a State to define their duties or control the conduct of their affairs is absolutely void whenever such attempted exercise of authority expressly conflicts with the laws of the United States and either frustrates the purpose of the national legislation or impairs the efficiency of these agencies of the Federal Government to discharge the duties for the performance of which they were created." (Davis v. Bank, 161 U. S., 275.)

Taxation of Federal instrumentalities.—"If the States may tax one instrumentality employed by the Government in the execution of its powers, they may tax any and every other instrumentality. They may tax the mail; they may tax the mint; they may tax patent rights; they may tax the papers of the customs-house; they may tax judicial process; they may tax all the means employed by the Government to an excess which would defeat all the ends of government. This was not intended by the American people. They did not design to make their government dependent on the States." (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat., 432, per Chief Justice Marshall.)

Taxation of Federal property.—"It is familiar law that a State has no power to tax property of the United States within its limits. This exemption of their property from State taxation—and by State taxation we mean any taxation by authority of the State, whether it be strictly for State purposes or for more local and special objects—is founded upon that principle which inheres in every independent government, that it must be free from any such interference of another government as may tend to destroy its powers or impair their efficiency." (Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S., 496; Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S., 151.)

Poll taxes upon persons in Navy.—"A poll tax upon the person of an officer of the Navy levied by a State or municipality within the confines of which he is ordered officially to perform duty as an agent of the Government in his capacity as such officer is not such a tax as he can be lawfully required to pay." (File 9212-22, Feb. 21, 1912; see also file 9212-47, and Ex parte White, 228 Fed. Rep., 88.)

State tax on Federal automobiles.—"Automobiles purchased for the President under appropriations made by Congress are not subject to taxation by a State, nor can the chauffeurs operating said machines be taxed by a State for the privilege of performing the duties pertaining to their employment." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 604.)

"A State may, however, in order to protect the public against dangers that might arise from performing the duties of a lawful employment in an unlawful manner, adopt reasonable police regulations which require that certain conditions be complied with before entering upon such occupation, and the fees intended merely to pay the expenses of complying with these requirements may be exacted." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 604.)

"Under existing law and appropriations an employee of the Federal Government who pays a fee to a State for a chauffeur's license to operate a Government-owned motor vehicle on public business is not entitled to reimbursement therefor from public funds. Quære, whether the Federal Government, while denying the right of a State to exact from it a motor vehicle license fee, should at the same time accept such a license and place the tag evidencing it upon such motor vehicle." (23 Comp. Dec., 386.)

A law of a State penalizing those who operate motor trucks on highways without having obtained licenses based on examination of competency and payment of a fee, can not constitutionally apply to an employee of the Post Office Department while engaged in driving a Government motor truck over a post road in the performance of his official duty. (Johnson v. Maryland, 254 U. S., 51.)

Hunters' licenses issued by States.—"The appropriation "General expenses, Bureau of Entomology," is not available for the payment of a fee for a hunter's license to be issued by a State to a scientific investigator of the Department of Agriculture as an attempted condition precedent to his performing his official duties in that State. (23 Comp. Dec., 57.)

State taxation of Federal salaries.—"The powers of the National Government can only be executed by officers whose services must be compensated by Congress. The allowance is in its discretion. The presumption is that the compensation given by law is no more than the services are worth, and only such in amount as will secure from the officer the diligent performance of his duties. * * * The compensation of an officer of the United States is fixed by a law made by Congress. It is in its exclusive discretion to determine what shall be given. * * * Does not a tax, then, by a State upon the office, diminishing the recompense, conflict with the law of the United States, which secures it to the officer in its entirety? It certainly has such an effect." (Dobbins v. Commissioners, 16 Pet., 435.)

Taxation of Federal telegrams.—A State tax upon telegraph messages could not be collected upon messages sent by officers of the United States on public business. (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S., 460.)

Taxation of Federal contractors.—"Can a contractor for supplying a military post with provisions be restrained from making purchases within any State, or from transporting the provisions to the place at which the troops were stationed? Or could he be fined or taxed for doing so? We have not yet heard these questions answered in the affirmative. It is true that the property of the contractor may be taxed, as the property of other citizens; and so may the local property of the bank. But we do not admit that the act of purchasing or of conveying the articles purchased can be under State control." (Osborn v. United States Bank, 9 Wheat., 867.)

Taxation of passenger transportation.—"A special tax on railroad and stage companies for every passenger carried out of the State by them is a tax on the passenger for the privilege of passing through the State by the ordinary modes of travel and is inconsistent with objects for which the Federal Government was established and with rights conferred by the Constitution on that Government and on the people. An exercise of such a power is accordingly void." (Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall., 35.)

"The Federal power has a right to declare and prosecute wars and as a necessary incident to raise and transport troops through and over the territory of any State of the Union. If this right is dependent in any sense, however limited, upon the pleasure of a State, the Government itself may be overthrown by an obstruction to its exercise. Much the largest part of transportation of troops during the late rebellion was by railroads, and largely through States whose people were hostile to the Union. If the tax levied by Nevada on railroad passengers had been the law of Tennessee, enlarged to meet the wishes of her people, the Treasury of the United States could not have paid the tax necessary to enable its armies to pass through her territory." (Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall., 35.)

"The United States has a right to require the services of its citizens at the seat of Federal Government in all executive, legislative, and judicial departments, and at all points in the several States where the functions of the Government are to be performed * * *. The citizens of the United States have the correlative right to approach the great departments of the Government, the ports of entry through which commerce is conducted, and the various Federal offices in the States. The taxing power, being in its nature unlimited over the subjects within its control, would enable the State governments to destroy the above-mentioned rights of the Federal Government and of its citizens if the right of transit through the States by railroad and other ordinary modes of travel were one of the legitimate objects of State taxation." (Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall., 36; compare 28 Op. Atty Gen., 435.)

Inspection of powder.—The powder officer for the harbor of Norfolk, appointed under the laws of Virginia to superintend the handling of all powder to and from vessels in the harbor, has no authority over powder belonging to the Federal Government, and the United States is not liable for any charge for services performed by him under the authority of that law. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 234; compare 28 Op. Atty Gen., 604.)

"It is not open to question that such a law is the legitimate exercise by the State of its police power so far as its provisions do not affect the agencies of the Federal Government or impair their efficiency in performing the functions which they are designed to perform. No police regulation of a State, however, can be permitted to interfere with the instrumentalities of the Federal Government * * *. If the State of Virginia has authority to control the shipment through the State of powder belonging to the Government and impose a charge therefor, it may stop such powder at its borders on the ground that it is improperly boxed, or that it is not boxed in accordance with regulations of the State. It is obvious that such a proceeding would seriously interfere with and impede an agency of the Government. If Virginia may make and enforce such a police regulation, it follows that every other State may do the same * * *. If the State may control the transfer of powder belonging to the Government, it may inspect a regiment of Cavalry under a police regulation providing for the inspection of all horses coming within its borders. If one State may inspect a regiment of Cavalry and impose a charge therefor, it follows that every other State may do the same. If a regiment of Cavalry may be inspected and turned back—for, of course, the power to inspect includes the power to stop—an army of Cavalry and Artillery may be inspected and stopped at the borders of a State * * *. If a State under the exercise of its police power may prevent the Federal Government from sending its troops and munitions of war to different parts of the country, the Constitution did not in fact 'provide for the common defense.'" (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)

Inspection of battleships.—"The health laws of a State do not extend to agencies of the Federal Government, and as battleships belonging to the United States are agencies of the Federal Government, the charges by a health officer of a State for the inspection of such battleships are not a legal claim against the United States." (13 Comp. Dec., 672, followed, file 6118-3, Nov. 22, 1907.)

"Quarantine charges have been allowed in some instances where naval vessels, particularly colliers which have no medical officers on board, arrive from a foreign port, or from an infected port in the United States. In such instances it is always assumed that actual services are rendered by the inspecting officer, and that such services are necessary in defense and protection of the public health, and the payment is for such services. The case reported * * * is entirely different. No services were rendered, and the charge is in the nature of a quarantine fee or tax. While the department desires to afford all reasonable facilities to quarantine officers in making inspections, it can not undertake to pay fees of this character every time a war vessel enters a port of the United States. Such charges are unnecessary and would become onerous if made at every port entered by naval vessels. The bill referred to * * * should, therefore, not be paid." (File 3983, Mar. 5, 1906; followed, file 6118-2, Dec. 29, 1906.) [This decision was prior to the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury quoted in preceding paragraph. See also 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 299, noted below.]

Inspection of horses.—Where the Federal Government acquiesces in the requirement of State laws and makes arrangements for inspection of its horses in accordance therewith, the expense is properly payable from its appropriations. (Comp. Dec., June 12, 1915, War Dept. Bul. No. 26, July 16, 1915, distinguishing 21 Comp. Dec., 449.)

Toll for property of United States passing over wharves.—"The State harbor commissioners of California are charged by the laws of that State with the supervision and control of the wharves and landings of the harbor of San Francisco, with the right to collect dockage, wharfage, rent, or toll. The imposition of a toll or charge by such commissioners on merchandise, being the property of the United States, passing to or over the wharves at San Francisco, is constitutional and valid, the charge being for a service rendered; the Government is not entitled to such services free of toll." (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 299.)

"It has been adjudged that the United States Government is not entitled to have property or troops transported free over a railroad, even where a land grant provided that the road shall remain a public highway for the use of the Government free from all toll or other charges for transportation, since that act did not include free use of rolling stock (Lake Superior & M. R. Co. v. U. S., 93 U. S., 442). This principle fairly includes the Government use of State or municipal wharf and harbor facilities. That is to say, the different kinds of Government property affected in this case, while used for public service and in sovereign and important operations of the Government such as required this shipment, are not instrumentalities or agencies which are necessarily free from local charges for services or facilities generally legitimate. Indeed, from Railroad Co. v. Peniston (18 Wall., 5, 36), showing that a tax upon property of agents of the United States does not necessarily hinder the efficient exercise of their powers or discharge of their duties, it seems to be a consequence that the same distinction would apply to the Government itself, and that a charge upon Government property which was not a tax upon operations of the Government or a direct obstruction to the exercise of Federal powers would not necessarily be invalid. This is also the conclusion to be drawn from Railroad Co. v. United States (93 U. S., 442); so that, while Government property may not be taxed nor Government instrumentalities or agencies nor the operations of the Government be obstructed or burdened in any such way, if the Government is properly liable to pay charges for transportation, a charge for services or facilities analogous to transportation and connected with it would not be a tax and would not be invalid on that score." (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 299; compare 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 604.)

State health laws.—The health authorities of the State of Illinois are without jurisdiction to require reports from the naval authorities at Great Lakes, apart from any question of jurisdiction over the lands occupied by the naval training station at that place. (File 14560-174, Apr. 19, 1916. See also file 4778-95, Dec. 16, 1916, re training station, San Francisco, Cal.)

Exemption from State laws requiring employment of pilots.—"Commanders of public vessels are not required to employ and pay branch pilots upon entering the ports and harbors of the United States. This exemption extends to all vessels belonging to the United States, and employed in the public service, whether they are armed or not." (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 532.)

"The penalties imposed by State laws for piloting vessels without due license from the State have no application to persons employed as pilots on board of the public vessels of the United States, the latter vessels being within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States." (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 647.)

Exemption from compulsory personal services under State laws.—"The salary of a Federal officer may not be taxed; he may be exempted from any personal services which will interfere with the discharge of his official duties, because those exemptions are essential to enable him to perform those duties." (Bank v. Commonwealth, 9 Wall., 353.)

Persons connected with the military service of the United States are exempt from performing road duty upon order of the county authorities when compliance with such order would interfere with their duty to the Federal Government. The land for a military post having been purchased by the United States with the consent of the State, neither the State nor other local authorities have power to interfere with any instrumentalities necessary to the proper use of such location as a military post. This would be true even if the land had been acquired within the State without any consent whatever on the part of the legislature of the State. It is certainly true that the county authorities would have no right to interfere in any way with the troops located at the post.

It is not claimed that the officers and enlisted men of the Army stationed at the fort are subject to road duty in the county. The same is true of teamsters employed and regularly used by the quartermaster's department at the fort. A military post could not be properly maintained without teamsters. The character of an Army teamster's service and his duties are such that it would be impossible for him to perform them properly and be at the call of the road commissioners to work public roads of the county outside of the Government's property. The State and county have no right to call on him to be absent from the fort when such absence would interfere with the proper discharge of his duties as a necessary and important, even if an humble, part of the Army of the United States. The necessary conclusion is that the detention of the petitioner in jail for failure to perform road duty is in violation of his rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, such laws including the Articles of War and the Army Regulations, the latter made in pursuance of the statutes of the United States, and therefore for present purposes considered as a part of the statutes. (Pundt v. Pendleton, 167 Fed. Rep., 997; compare Butler v. Perry, 240 U. S., 328.)

As to the exemption of civil employees under the War Department from jury duty in a State court where such exemption is not allowed by the court, the Attorney General is reluctant to render an opinion, as to do so might bring him in conflict with a judicial tribunal. In this case the State judge in refusing the claim notified the War Department that he would excuse the men from such duty if in the department's opinion not to do so would seriously prejudice the public interest. Under these circumstances no such serious occasion has as yet arisen as would justify the Attorney General in reviewing the ruling of the State judge. "If the claim of right to jury duty from Government workmen shall in the future be so far pressed as to cause serious inconvenience in your [Secretary of War's] judgment, of course I can not then hesitate to meet the question." (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 618; see also file 21090-3, Sept. 3, 1908.)

Limitation upon exemption from State interference.—"These agencies [of the Federal Government] are exempt from State control by police regulation, or by the exercise of the taxing power, so far only as that legislation may interfere with or impair their efficiency in performing the functions by which they are designed to serve the Government." (Bank v. Commonwealth, 9 Wall., 353; Railroad Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall., 5; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mayor, 38 Fed. Rep., 560.)

III. JURISDICTION OF CIVIL AUTHORITIES.

Exemption of Federal officers and subordinates from arrest by State authorities.—"An officer of the United States Army, in the discharge of his duty, acting in obedience to commands by the Secretary of War, who in turn is executing an act of Congress, is not subject to arrest on a warrant or order of a State court, and * * * such arrest is wholly illegal." (In re Turner, 119 Fed. Rep., 231; see also State v. Burton, 103 Atl., 962.)

"It is begging the whole question, and it is idle, to say that any and all Federal officers are amenable and subject to the laws, civil and criminal, of Iowa when within the State. Of course they are. The Secretary of War, the general of the Armies, the Chief Justice, and even the President, perhaps, are subject to all laws of Iowa when in Iowa. No one disputes this. But that is not the question. Can any one of those officers, or any subordinate, in the discharge of his duties as a Government officer, be subject to the laws of the State while in the State? That is the question and the only question. The State is not greater than the Nation, but, on the contrary, the State is but a part, and a small part, of the Nation. And, if I am wrong, then instead of the President, and the Secretary of War, and the general of the Army, being in control, we will have army commands given by and through the courts, and an officer like Major Turner cashiered and dismissed from the service if he refuses to obey the commands from his superiors, and if he does obey them, thrown into a county jail for contempt of court." (In re Turner, 119 Fed. Rep., 231.)

"The arrest, under authority of a State, of a Federal officer, and that officer one of the Federal Army in the performance of a command by a superior which he dare not disobey, presents a matter of urgency, and it is within the discretion of the Federal court to at once take cognizance of the case, and act at once, rather than allow the case to be carried through three courts, taking two or three years of time." (In re Turner, 119 Fed. Rep., 231.) [In this case an officer of the Army was enjoined by a State court from obeying the orders of the Secretary of War. He disregarded the injunction and was attached and imprisoned for contempt. His release was ordered by the Federal court upon writ of habeas corpus.]

There is no act of Congress authorizing a call by the governor of a State for the surrender of an officer of the Navy charged with having broken the peace of such State, nor any law authorizing an arrest by the Executive with a view to a forcible surrender by him for the purposes of trial. However, advised that the accused be ordered by the Navy Department to surrender himself. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 244. See further, note to Art. IV, sec. 2, clause 2, and Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14; see also note to sec. 355, Revised Statutes.)

The State authorities are not empowered to arrest persons, either in the naval or the civil service of the United States, within the limits of a navy yard, whether on shore or on board vessels at the yard, without first obtaining the permission of the commandant, to the end that such service of process shall not interfere with or obstruct operations of the United States Government. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

However, where a police officer, holding a warrant for the arrest of an enlisted man upon a charge of misdemeanor, persuaded the man to leave his vessel on liberty and accompany the police officer outside the limits of the navy yard, there making the arrest, it was held by the Attorney General that while there are authorities which indicate that an application to the commanding officer is a necessary condition precedent to the State's acquiring jurisdiction (especially Ex parte McRoberts, 16 Iowa, 600, 604), yet the better view, as held in the case of In re O'Connor (37 Wis., 379), is that application to the commanding officer is not jurisdictional, the matter being one that does not go to the jurisdiction of the civil court issuing the process; that there is no doubt that the members of the military forces of the United States are subject in times of peace to the criminal laws of the States; and, accordingly, that want of an application to the commanding officer would be a mere informality which might make the warrant of arrest irregular but would not make it void or liable to be attacked upon a habeas corpus proceeding. (File 7657-261:1, Nov. 14, 1914.)

"If the civil magistrate has become de facto seized of a case of murder, if indictment is pending, if the accused is thus in the actual jurisdiction of the law of the land, it is not material to the validity of the proceedings at law and the right of the magistrate to go on according to the lex loci, whether the party passed into the hands of the magistrate regularly, by the act and with the consent of his commanding officer, or whether by breach of arrest of the party, desertion, or any other violation of military duty." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413.)

A mail carrier, although on duty, is subject to arrest by the State authorities upon a charge of murder. (U. S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall., 482, holding specifically that the police officer making such arrest was not subject to criminal proceedings for violation of the Federal statute against delaying the mails.) From this decision of the Supreme Court it would appear that the well-established principle, that the State authorities can not interfere with an instrumentality of the Federal Government, is subject to an exception in a case where a person of the Federal Government is arrested in good faith, upon a charge of felony. However, it would seem that the charge upon which such an arrest is made would require a very clear prima facie case to warrant such action, as otherwise the Federal Government might be seriously interfered with and embarrassed in its official functions. In the case presented, an enlisted man was arrested upon a charge of felony while traveling through a State under orders; was acquitted, and has been released and proceeded to carry out his orders. This would have been a good case in which to test the question, in view of the fact, as now appears, that the charge was wholly without foundation. In its present status it does not appear that there is any action which can be taken by the Government. Should another case of this character arise, and the department be promptly informed thereof, consideration might be given to the feasibility of having the legality of the arrest tested in habeas corpus proceedings instituted in behalf of the United States. (File 26524-70, Aug. 12, 1914.)

The imposition of a sentence of imprisonment for 60 days on a soldier by the authorities of a city for a violation of a city ordinance, where the act charged did not result in nor threaten any injury to person or property, is unwarranted, and the soldier will be discharged by the Federal court and restored to the custody of his commanding officer, on petition of the latter in habeas corpus proceedings. (Ex parte Schlaffer, 154 Fed. Rep., 921.)

While an enlisted soldier in time of peace may be subjected to arrest and punishment for violation of a municipal ordinance, the same as a civilian, yet where any punishment is sought to be inflicted which will interfere with the performance of the duties which he owes to the United States, the utmost good faith is required from the civil authorities and any unfair or unjust discrimination against the offender because he is a soldier, or departure from the strict requirements of the law, or any cruel or unusual punishment, can be as justly inquired into by the Federal courts in proceedings instituted by his commanding officer as it can be in protecting the interests of the United States in any matter where its necessary governmental agencies are involved. (Ex parte Schlaffer, 154 Fed. Rep., 921.)

"A court or judge of the United States has power to issue a writ of habeas corpus on petition of the United States for the purpose of an inquiry into the cause of detention of a prisoner held by a State to answer to a criminal charge, where it is alleged by the petitioner that the act charged as a crime was committed by the prisoner in the performance of his duty as a soldier of the United States; and it has authority to determine summarily as a fact whether or not such allegation is true, and if found to be true to discharge the prisoner on the ground that the State is without jurisdiction to try him for such act." (U. S. v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. Rep., 65.)

"It is an exceedingly delicate jurisdiction given to the Federal courts by which a person under an indictment in a State court, and subject to its laws, may, by the decision of a single judge of the Federal court, upon a writ of habeas corpus, be taken out of the custody of the officers of the State and finally discharged therefrom, and thus a trial by the State court of an indictment found under the laws of that State be finally prevented. Cases have occurred of so exceptional a nature that this course has been pursued." (Drury v. Lewis, 200 U. S., 1, quoting from Baker v. Grice, 169 U. S., 284. In the Drury case the court remanded the accused for trial to the State court, the evidence being conflicting as to whether or not he had in fact exceeded his Federal authority.)

We are of opinion that while the circuit court has the power to do so, and may discharge the accused in advance of his trial, if he is restrained of his liberty in violation of the National Constitution, it is not bound in every case to exercise such a power immediately upon application for the writ. We can not suppose that Congress intended to compel those courts, by such means, to draw to themselves, in the first instance, the control of all criminal prosecutions commenced in State courts exercising authority within the same territorial limits, where the accused claims that he is held in custody in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The Federal courts should exercise their discretion in the light of the relations existing under our system of Government between the judicial tribunals of the Union and of the States, and in recognition of the fact that the public good requires that those relations be not disturbed by unnecessary conflict between courts equally bound to regard and protect rights secured by the Constitution. (Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S., 241; see also Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S., 101; Ex parte Wood, 155 Fed. Rep., 190.)

In the absence of express statutory authorization, the general authority of the President to see that the laws of the United States are faithfully executed empowered him to appoint a deputy marshal to protect a Federal judge whose life was threatened in consequence of the conscientious and faithful discharge of his duties. Where such deputy was arrested and brought to trial in a State court upon a charge of murder, for a homicide committed while acting within the line of duty thus assigned him, he was entitled to release on habeas corpus issued by a Federal judge. (In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1.)

It is recognized that during times of peace the military power in the United States is subordinate to the civil, and that an enlisted man is amenable to the statutory law and under proper circumstances and on necessary occasions may be subject to arrest and detention for the violation of municipal ordinances the same as any civilian. The relations existing between the police force and the enlisted men and the peace and welfare of the community demand consistent and harmonious action, both by the officers in command on the one side and the higher municipal authorities on the other, in checking and controlling the forces under each. The enlisted man should be as obedient and subservient to civil law when called upon as he is to military law, and the municipal authorities should recognize his peculiar conditions and responsibilities and act in harmony and accord with his officers. It is not considered that enlisted men should be treated and held in any detention or attempted punishment the same as though they were answerable to no other power. Their position and the requirements of their constitutional duty demand in behalf of the National Government from the municipal authorities such a recognition of its rights as would accomplish a preservation of the peace and the observance of the city ordinances without in any way affecting their duties as soldiers. (Ex parte Schlaeffer, 154 Fed. Rep., 921.)

Where persons in the Navy or Marine Corps are arrested by the Federal or State authorities while on leave for criminal offenses and return to duty under bail, they may be granted leave of absence by their commanding officer in order to appear in the civil court for trial. (File 5322, G. O. No. 121, par. 17, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914.)

By enlistment a person is not absolved from liability to arrest for taxes on property due previous to his enlistment. (Webster v. Seymour, 8 Vt., 135.)

State courts can not order release of persons held by authority of United States.—"No State, judge, or court, after they are judicially informed that a party is imprisoned under the authority of the United States, has any right to interfere with him, or require him to be brought before them. And if the authority of the State, in form of judicial process or otherwise, should attempt to control the marshal or other authorized officer of the United States, in any respect, in the custody of his prisoner, it would be his duty to resist it, and to call to his aid any force that might be necessary to maintain the authority of the law against illegal interference." (Ableman v. Booth, 21 How., 506.)

"We do not question the authority of the State court, or judge, who is authorized by the laws of the State to issue the writ of habeas corpus, to issue it in any case where the party is imprisoned within its territorial limits, provided it does not appear, when the application is made, that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States. The court or judge has a right to inquire, in this mode of proceeding, for what cause and by what authority the prisoner is confined within the territorial limits of the State sovereignty. But after the return is made, and the State judge or court is judicially apprised that the party is in custody under the authority of the United States, they can proceed no further." (Ableman v. Booth, 21 How., 506; see also United States v. Tarble, 13 Wall., 397.)

In the event that a writ of habeas corpus should be issued by a State court to a commanding officer of the Navy or Marine Corps, afloat or ashore, the latter will communicate with the Secretary of the Navy; and, if instructions are not received by the commanding officer from the Secretary of the Navy by the return day of the writ, the officer upon whom the writ is served will make return thereto, showing that the party is held by authority of the United States, but without producing the body of the party in court. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914; compare 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 258.)

State courts cannot punish perjury committed before Federal court.—"The power of punishing a witness for testifying falsely in a judicial proceeding belongs peculiarly to the Government in whose tribunals that proceeding is had. It is essential to the impartial and efficient administration of justice in the tribunals of the Nation that witnesses should be able to testify freely before them, unrestrained by legislation of the State or by fear of punishment in the State courts. The administration of justice in the national tribunals would be greatly embarrassed and impeded if a witness testifying before a court of the United States, or upon a contested election of a Member of Congress, were liable to prosecution and punishment in the courts of a State upon a charge of perjury preferred by a disappointed suitor or contestant or instituted by local passion or prejudice. A witness who gives his testimony, pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, in a case pending in a court or other judicial tribunal of the United States, whether he testifies in the presence of that tribunal, or before any magistrate or officer either of the Nation or of the State designated by act of Congress for that purpose, is accountable for the truth of his testimony to the United States only; and perjury committed in so testifying is an offense against the public of the United States, and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the United States." (Thomas v. Loney, 134 U. S., 372.)

Mandamus against Federal officers.—See note to Article II, section 1, clause 1, "Mandamus against heads of departments."

Habeas corpus proceedings in Federal courts to discharge persons from the Navy.—Where a person is being held for trial by court-martial, he will not be discharged from the jurisdiction of the court and from the military service even though his original enlistment was fraudulent. (In re Morrissey, 137 U. S., 157; Ex parte Rock, 171 Fed. Rep., 240; Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696, file 5956-6; In re Scott, 144 Fed. Rep., 79, file 2757-4; In re Lessard, 134 Fed. Rep., 305; U. S. v. Reeves, 126 Fed. Rep., 127, file 152-04; Solomon v. Davenport, 87 Fed. Rep., 318; see also file 5624, Feb. 17, 1896; compare Ex parte Bakley, 148 Fed. Rep., 56, affirmed, Dillingham v. Bakley, 152 Fed. Rep., 1022, file 5506-5; and Ex parte Lisk, 145 Fed. Rep., 860, file 2757-8, in which latter cases the court ordered the petitioner's release from naval custody.)

For other decisions, see note to Article I, section 8, clause 14, "Judgments of courts-martial acting within their jurisdiction not open to review by civil courts," and see note to section 761, Revised Statutes.

IV. RESPONSIBILITY OF MILITARY AUTHORITIES FOR ILLEGAL ACTS.

Civil responsibility of persons in military service.—"No man in this country is so high that he is above the law. No officer of the law may set that law at defiance with impunity. All the officers of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law and are bound to obey it. It is the only supreme power in our system of Government, and every man who by accepting office participates in its functions is only the more strongly bound to submit to the supremacy and to observe the liabilities which it imposes upon the exercise of the authority which it gives." (U. S. v. Lee, 106 U. S., 196.)

A person making an illegal arrest, even when the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is suspended, is liable to damages in a civil suit for such arrest, and to punishment in a criminal prosecution. (Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind., 372.)

Although martial law exists, "no more force * * * can be used than is necessary to accomplish the object. And if the power is exercised for the purpose of oppression and any injury willfully done to person or property, the party by whom or by whose order it is committed, will undoubtedly be answerable." (Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1.)

At the close of the War of 1812, Gen. Jackson was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 for contempt of court, in refusing obedience to a writ of habeas corpus, which fine he paid. (See Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S., 158, 194, noted under Art. I, sec. 8, clause 11, "Effect of martial law".)

Captain of a ship.—"No doubt there are cases where the expert on the spot may be called upon to justify his conduct later in court, notwithstanding that he had sole command at the time and acted to the best of his knowledge. That is the position of the captain of a ship." (Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U. S., 78.)

A commanding officer in the Navy "is not to be shielded from responsibility if he acts out of his authority or jurisdiction, or inflicts private injury, either from malice, cruelty, or any species of oppression founded on considerations independent of public ends. The humblest seaman or marine is to be sheltered under the aegis of the law from any real wrong as well as the highest in office." (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89.) [In this case suit was brought by a marine against the commanding officer of a squadron, the marine alleging that he was illegally detained on board after the expiration of his term of enlistment, and that he was illegally punished by the commanding officer. Judgment was given against the squadron commander, but was reversed by the Supreme Court, which, while making the above statement as to the responsibility of commanding officers, held that in this case the detention was legal, and that the commanding officer had the legal right to inflict punishment; that "the commander was acting as a public officer, invested with certain discretionary powers, and can not be made answerable for any injury when acting within the scope of his authority and not influenced by malice, corruption, or cruelty. His position is quasi judicial. Hence the burden of proof that the officer exceeded his powers is upon the party complaining; the rule of law being that the acts of a public officer on public matters within his jurisdiction, and where he has a discretion, are to be presumed legal until shown by others to be unjustifiable. It is not enough to show that he committed an error in judgment, but it must have been a malicious and willful error." See Dinsman v. Wilkes (12 How., 389).]

Members of a court-martial.—Members of a duly constituted and organized naval court-martial "are responsible in civil courts for any abuse of power or illegal proceedings." (Par. 241, Naval Courts and Boards, 1917.) [On general subject of responsibility of judges of civil courts, see Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S., 483, and Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall., 335.]

"If a court-martial has no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the charge it has been convened to try, or shall inflict a punishment forbidden by law, though its sentence shall be approved by the officers having a revisory power of it, civil courts may on an action of a party aggrieved by it inquire into the want of the court's jurisdiction and give him redress." (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65.)

"In such cases, as has just been said, all of the parties to such illegal trial are trespassers upon a party aggrieved by it, and he may recover damages from them on a proper suit in a civil court by the verdict of a jury." (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65.)

"According to our laws, all military courts are under a constant subordination to the ordinary courts of law. Officers who have abused their powers, though only in regard to their own soldiers, are liable to prosecution in a court of law, and compelled to make satisfaction. Even any flagrant abuse of authority by members of a court-martial, when sitting to judge their own people and determine in cases entirely of a military kind, makes them liable to the animadversion of the civil judge." (Johnson v. Duncan, 6 Am. Dec., 679; 3 Martin (La.), 530.)

Judge Advocate General of the Navy.—In 1904 suit was entered by Paymaster Robert B. Rodney, retired, against Capt. Sam. C. Lemly, Judge Advocate General of the Navy, based upon action alleged to have been taken by Captain Lemly in his official capacity. The United States attorney for the District of Columbia was instructed by the Department of Justice to appear in behalf of the Judge Advocate General in response to the summons upon the latter. June 23, 1904, an order was entered by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia dismissing the suit. (At law, No. 46683, Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; file 204-04.)

Illegal order not a defense.—"It can never be maintained that a military officer can justify himself for doing an unlawful act by producing the order of his superior. The order may palliate, but it can not justify." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 Wall., 115.)

"Neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the President could nullify the statute, and though the defendant [collector of the port of New York] may have thought himself bound to obey the instructions of the former, his mistaken sense of duty could not justify his refusal of the clearance, and these instructions afford him no protection unless they were authorized in law." (Hendricks v. Gonzalez, 67 Fed. Rep., 351; see also Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S., 168.)

A naval officer is liable in an action of trespass for seizing the plaintiff's ship in obedience to an order of the President based upon a misinterpretation by him of an act of Congress. "I confess the first bias of my mind was very strong in favor of the opinion that, though the instructions of the Executive could not give a right they might yet excuse from damages. I was much inclined to think that a distinction ought to be taken between acts of civil and those of military officers; and between proceedings within the body of the country and those on the high seas. That implicit obedience which military men usually pay to the orders of their superiors, and which indeed is indispensably necessary to every military system appeared to me strongly to imply the principle that those orders, if not to perform a prohibited act, ought to justify the person whose general duty it is to obey them, and who is placed by the laws of his country in a situation which in general requires that he should obey them. * * * But I have been convinced that I was mistaken, and I have receded from this first opinion. I acquiesce in that of my brethren, which is that the instructions can not change the nature of the transaction nor legalize an act which without them would have been a plain trespass." (Little v. Barreme, 2 Cranch, 170, opinion of Chief Justice Marshall.) [In this case the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the lower court against the officer, in the sum of $8,504 damages and costs.]

"In time of peace, at least, an officer is not obliged to obey an illegal order. * * * It becomes his duty, at once or within a reasonable time, to appeal to the highest authority for revocation, modification, or correction of the illegal order." (Ide v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 407; 150 U. S., 517. See also C. M. O. 37, 1915.)

"Captain Gambier, of the British Navy, by the order of Admiral Boscawen, pulled down the houses of sutlers on the coast of Nova Scotia, who were supplying the sailors with spirituous liquors, the health of the sailors being injured by frequenting them. The motive was evidently a laudable one, and the act done for the public service. Yet it was an invasion of the rights of private property and without the authority of law, and the officer who executed the order was held liable to an action, and the sutlers recovered damages against him to the value of the property destroyed." (See Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

An officer of the Army was sued for seizing property of plaintiff during the war with Mexico under the order of his superior officer. Judgment was rendered against defendant and affirmed by the Supreme Court, amounting to $104,562.23. Plaintiff was a trader and went from the United States into the adjoining Mexican provinces, which were in possession of the military authorities of the United States, for the purpose of carrying on a trade which was sanctioned by the executive branch of the Government (as a means to conciliation of the provinces bordering on the United States) and also by the commanding military officer. "It is certainly true as a general rule that no citizen could lawfully trade with a public enemy; and if found to be engaged in such illicit traffic his goods are liable to seizure and confiscation. But the rule has no application to a case of this kind; nor can an officer of the United States seize the property of an American citizen for an act which the constituted authorities, acting within the scope of their lawful powers, have authorized to be done." Accordingly held that "it was improper for an officer of the United States to seize the property upon the ground of trading with the enemy;" and that "the officer who made the seizure can not justify his trespass by showing the orders of his superior officer. An order to commit a trespass can afford no justification to the person by whom it was executed;" that "if the power exercised by Col. Doniphan had been within the limits of a discretion confided to him by law, his order would have justified the defendant even if the commander had abused his power or acted from improper motives. But we have already said that the law did not confide to him a discretionary power over private property. Urgent necessity would alone give him the right; and the verdict finds that this necessity did not exist. Consequently the order given was an order to do an illegal act, to commit a trespass upon the property of another, and can afford no justification to the person by whom it was executed. The case of Captain Gambier, to which we have just referred, is directly in point upon this question." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

"The willful killing of a soldier by a guard may be as clearly murder as the willful killing of one citizen by another. Nor will any order of a superior officer to an inferior in rank justify the willful killing of a person under the peace and protection of the law. A soldier is bound to obey only the lawful orders of his superiors. If he receives an order to do an unlawful act, he is bound neither by his duty nor his oath to do it. So far from such an order being a justification, it makes the party giving the order an accomplice in the crime. For instance, an order from an officer to a soldier to shoot another for disrespectful words merely would, if obeyed, be murder both in the officer and soldier." (U. S. v. Carr, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14732; see below, "Order not clearly illegal may be defense," and "Extenuating and aggravating circumstances.")

Order not clearly illegal may be defense.—"The law is that an order given by an officer to his private, which does not expressly or clearly show on its face its illegality, the soldier is bound to obey; and such order is his full protection. The first duty of a soldier is obedience, and without this there can be neither discipline nor efficiency in an army. If every subordinate officer and soldier were at liberty to question the legality of the orders of the commander, and obey them or not as he may consider them valid or invalid, the precious moment for action would be wasted. Its law is that of obedience. No question can be left open of the right to command in the army, or of the duty of obedience in the soldier." (In re Fair, 100 Fed. Rep., 149; U. S. v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. Rep., 71.)

An order illegal in itself and not justifiable by the rules and usages of war, so that a man of ordinary sense and understanding would know when he heard it read or given that the order was illegal, would afford a soldier no protection for a crime committed under such order; but an order given by an officer to his private which does not expressly and clearly show on its face or body thereof its own illegality the soldier would be bound to obey and such order would be a protection to him. (Riggs v. State, 43 Tenn. (3 Cold.), 85; U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710, 717.)

"Except in a plain case of excess of authority, where at first blush it is apparent and palpable to the commonest understanding that the order is illegal, I can not but think that the law should excuse the military subordinate when acting in obedience to the order of his commander. Otherwise he is placed in the dangerous dilemma of being liable for damages to third persons for obedience to an order, or to the loss of his commission and disgrace for disobedience thereto * * *. The first duty of a soldier is obedience, and without this there can be neither discipline nor efficiency in the Army. If every subordinate officer and soldier were at liberty to question the legality of the orders of the commander, and obey them or not as he may consider them valid or invalid, the camp would be turned into a debating school where the precious moment for action would be wasted in wordy conflicts between the advocates of conflicting opinions." (McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673; quoted with approval, U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710, 716; U. S. v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. Rep., 71.)

"A military subordinate is not liable in damages for making an illegal arrest if he acted in pursuance of an order from his superior which was legal on its face; the liability for the false imprisonment is confined to the officer who gave the order." (McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673.)

"The defendant does not stand in the situation of an officer who merely obeys the command of his superior," if "it appears that he advised the order and volunteered to execute it when according to military usage that duty more properly belonged to an officer of inferior grade." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

"Soldiers might reasonably think that their officer had good grounds for ordering them to fire into a disorderly crowd which to them might not appear to be at that moment engaged in acts of dangerous violence, but soldiers could hardly suppose that their officer could have any good grounds for ordering them to fire a volley down a crowded street when no disturbance of any kind was either in progress or apprehended. The doctrine that a soldier is bound under all circumstances whatever to obey his superior officer would be fatal to military discipline itself, for it would justify the private in shooting the colonel by the orders of the captain, or in deserting to the enemy on the field of battle on the order of his immediate superior. I think it is not less monstrous to suppose that superior orders would justify a soldier in the massacre of unoffending civilians in time of peace, or in the exercise of inhuman cruelties, such as the slaughter of women and children, during a rebellion. The only line that presents itself to my mind is that a soldier should be protected by orders for which he might reasonably believe his officer to have good grounds. The inconvenience of being subject to two jurisdictions, the sympathies of which are not unlikely to be opposed to each other, is an inevitable consequence of the double necessity of preserving on the one hand the supremacy of the law, and on the other the discipline of the Army." (2 Willoughby Const., 1195, quoting 1 Stephen's Hist. Cr. L. Eng., 205.)

"An army is not a deliberative body. It is the executive arm. Its law is that of obedience. No question can be left open as to the right to command in the officer, or the duty of obedience in the soldier." (In re Grimley, 137 U. S., 153. See also 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 357, 365, and Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 30.)

Extenuating and aggravating circumstances.—"In respect to those compulsory duties, whether in reenlisting or detaining on board or in punishing or imprisoning on shore, while arduously endeavoring to perform them in such a manner as might advance the science and commerce and glory of his country rather than his own personal designs, a public officer invested with certain discretionary powers never has been and never should be made answerable for any injury when acting within the scope of his authority and not influenced by malice, corruption, or cruelty * * *. The officer being intrusted with a discretion for public purposes is not to be punished for the exercise of it, unless it is first proved against him either that he exercised the power confided to him in cases without his jurisdiction or in a manner not confided to him, as, with malice, cruelty, or willful oppression, or in the words of Lord Mansfield, that he exercised it as if 'the heart is wrong.' In short, it is not enough to show that he committed an error in judgment, but it must have been a malicious and willful error." (U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710, 716; Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89.)

"In an action of false imprisonment the defendant [plaintiff], by his gross and incendiary language on the news of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, the President of the United States, having provoked his arrest, though the same was illegal, such provocation must be taken into account in mitigation of damages." (McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673.)

"In an action for false imprisonment, where the arrest complained of was illegal but was caused by the defendant while acting as commanding officer of a military department of the United States, without malice or intention to injure or oppress the plaintiff, but from good motives and considerations involving the public peace and safety, the plaintiff is only entitled to recover compensatory damages." (McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673.)

"The move upon Chihuahua was undoubtedly undertaken from high and patriotic motives. It was boldly planned and gallantly executed and contributed to the successful issue of the war. But it is not for the court to say what protection or indemnity is due from the public to an officer who, in his zeal for the honor and interest of his country, and in the excitement of military operations, has trespassed on private rights. That question belongs to the political department of the Government." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

In Beckwith v. Bean (98 U. S., 266) a judgment for $15,000 against two Army officers for arresting a civilian during the Civil War on the charge of aiding and abetting deserters from the Army, was reversed on the ground that certain evidence in mitigation had been erroneously excluded by the trial court; and that, if the officers acted in good faith, as the evidence excluded was intended to show, "they were entitled by every consideration of justice to stand before the jury in a more favorable light upon the question of damages than they would or should have stood had they been actuated by ill-will or sought to oppress one whose conduct had not justified the conclusion that he had violated any law."

"If a homicide be committed by a military guard without malice and in the performance of his supposed duty as a soldier, such homicide is excusable unless it was manifestly beyond the scope of his authority or was such that a man of ordinary sense and understanding would know that it was illegal." (U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710.) [In this case it was held that the finding of an Army court of inquiry was entitled to great weight as showing that guard was not to blame.]

"In charging the jury in U. S. v. Carr, 1 Woods, 484 [25 Fed. Cas. No. 14732], Mr. Justice Woods instructed them to 'inquire whether at the moment he fired his piece at the deceased, with his surroundings at that time, he had reasonable grounds to believe and did believe that the killing or serious wounding of the deceased was necessary to the suppression of a mutiny then and there existing, or of a disorder which threatened speedily to ripen into a mutiny. If he had reasonable ground so to believe, and did so believe, then the killing was not unlawful. * * * But it must be understood that the law will not require an officer charged with the order and discipline of a camp or fort to weigh with scrupulous nicety the amount of force necessary to suppress disorder. The exercise of a reasonable discretion is all that is required." (U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 716.)

"A public officer is not liable to an action if he falls into error in a case where the act to be done is not merely a ministerial one, but is one in relation to which it is his duty to exercise judgment and discretion, even although an individual may suffer by his mistake. A contrary principle would, indeed, be pregnant with the greatest mischiefs." (Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How., 87; see also Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S., 483.)

"The defendant having caused the arrest and imprisonment of the plaintiff, who was a civilian and not amenable to military law, it was his duty to make provision against his being treated with undue harshness and severity or subjected to any treatment or discipline not necessary and proper to restrain him of his liberty for the time being; and having failed to do so and suffered the plaintiff to be confined in the guardhouse with drunken soldiers and to be compelled to lay in common with military culprits, the damages for the false imprisonment must be enhanced on account of such treatment." (McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673.)

"But in this case the defendant does not stand in the situation of an officer who merely obeys the command of his superior. For it appears that he advised the order and volunteered to execute it when according to military usage that duty more properly belonged to an officer of inferior grade." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

V. PROTECTION OF MILITARY OFFICERS FOR ACTS DONE IN PERFORMANCE OF DUTY.

Congress may protect officers against civil or criminal responsibility.—"Congress has power to protect officers and persons engaged or concerned in making arbitrary arrests and imprisonments, or arrests or imprisonments without ordinary legal warrant or cause, under the authority or in pursuance of an act suspending the writ of habeas corpus, by the passage of laws indemnifying such officers and persons against the ordinary legal consequences thereof or declaring that they shall not be liable to an action or other legal proceeding therefor." (McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673.)

"It is not for the court to say what protection or indemnity is due from the public to an officer who, in his zeal for the honor and interest of his country and in the excitement of military operations, has trespassed on private rights. That question belongs to the political department of the Government." (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115.)

An act of Congress passed during the Civil War (Mar. 3, 1863, 12 Stat., 756) provided that any order of the President during the existing war should be a defense to any prosecution, civil or criminal, "for any search, seizure, arrest or imprisonment, made, done, or committed, or acts omitted to be done," under authority of such order. This act was upheld, the court saying: "That an act passed after the event which in effect ratifies what has been done and declares that no suit shall be sustained against the party acting under color of authority is valid, so far as Congress could have conferred such authority before, admits of no reasonable doubt. These are ordinary acts of indemnity passed by all governments when the occasion requires." (Mitchell v. Clark, 110 U. S., 633; see also O'Reilly De Camara v. Brooke, 142 Fed. Rep., 858; 209 U. S., 45.)

Referring to acts of March 3, 1863 (12 Stat., 756), and March 2, 1867 (14 Stat., 432), it was held by the Supreme Court that "these statutes were enacted among other things to protect parties from liability to prosecution for acts done in the arrest and imprisonment of persons during the existence of the rebellion, under orders or proclamations of the President or by his authority or approval, who were charged with participation in the rebellion, or as aiders or abettors, or as being guilty of disloyal practices in aid thereof, or any violation of the usages or the laws of war"; that said statutes do not "cover all acts done by officers in the military service of the United States, simply because they are acting under the general authority of the President as commander in chief of the armies of the United States"; that, "assuming that they are not liable to any constitutional objection, they only cover acts done under orders or proclamations issued by the President or by his authority"; that "they do not dispense with the exhibition of the order or authority upon which a party relies"; and, accordingly, that "where certain military officers of the United States, being sued for the arrest and imprisonment of a person in Vermont, not connected with the military service of the United States, alleged in their pleas that the arrest and imprisonment were made under the authority and by the order of the President, whose orders as commander in chief of the armies of the United States by the rules and regulations of the Army they were bound to obey, without setting forth any order, general or special, of the President directing or approving of the acts in question, * * * the pleas were defective and insufficient." (Bean v. Beckwith, 18 Wall., 510.) [In the case of In re Murphy, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9947, it was held that the act of March 2, 1867, validating arrest of citizens by military under acts of Congress and proclamations and orders of President or by his authority and approval, was void as ex post facto. In Griffin v. Wilcox (21 Ind., 370) the act of March 3, 1863, was held to violate the fourth amendment.]

"When an officer of the United States is sued for the performance of his duty, the Government is bound to protect him by paying the costs of his defense. If he defends himself, and proves upon his trial that he was executing the law, or the orders of his superior, his expenses ought to be reimbursed to him." (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 51, case of Capt. Wilkes; compare 22 Comp. Dec., 264.)

"This is required by the plain principles of justice as well as by sound policy. No man of common prudence would enter the public service if he knew that the performance of his duty would render him liable to be plagued to death with lawsuits which he must carry on at his own expense. For this reason it has been the uniform practice of the Federal Government, ever since its foundation, to take upon itself the defense of its officers who are sued or prosecuted for executing its laws. The following are some of the cases in which this has been done: Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 115; Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet., 137; Tracy v. Swartwout, 10 Pet., 80; Lawrence v. Allen, 7 How., 785; Same v. Caswell, 13 Howard, 488; Greely v. Thompson, 10 How., 225; King v. Maxwell, 17 How., 147; The United States v. Guthrie, 17 How., 284; The United States v. Booth, 18 How., 476; Greely v. Burgess, 18 How., 413; Stairs v. Peaslee, 18 How., 521; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat., 247; Fleming v. Page, 9 How., 603; Kendall v. The United States, 12 Pet., 51 [524]; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cr., 137. In Little v. Barreme, 2 Cr., 170, the Government took no part in the defense, but it afterwards assumed the judgment and paid it with interest and all charges." (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 51; see also 12 Comp. Dec., 208, and 12 Comp. Dec., 191.)

Civil responsibility for seizure of private property during war.—See note to Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 11, "Jurisdiction over persons in military service during war."

[CLAUSE 14. Regulation of land and naval forces.] ¹⁴ To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

- I. GENERAL POWERS OF CONGRESS AND PRESIDENT.
- II. POWER TO CREATE COURTS-MARTIAL.
- III. FINALITY OF COURT-MARTIAL PROCEEDINGS.
- IV. JURISDICTION OF COURTS-MARTIAL.
- V. JURISDICTION OF CIVIL COURTS.
- VI. APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTION TO THE NAVY.

I. GENERAL POWERS OF CONGRESS AND PRESIDENT.

Land and naval forces.—"Armies, divisions, brigades, regiments, companies, guards, sentinels; fleets, squadrons, separate vessels, boats, crews, are land and naval forces, integrally and independently, no less than when compounded in the general mass, and so is the individual soldier and seaman." (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313.)

Powers of Congress and of the President.—"The power to make the necessary laws is in Congress; the power to execute in the President. Both powers imply many subordinate and auxiliary powers. Each includes all authority essential to its due exercise. But neither can the President in war more than in peace intrude upon the proper authority of Congress, nor Congress upon the proper authority of the President. Both are servants of the people whose will is expressed in the fundamental law." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 129.)

"Congress may increase the Army or reduce the Army or abolish it altogether; but so long as we have a military force, Congress can not take away from the President the supreme command. It is true that the Constitution has conferred upon Congress the exclusive power 'to make rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces;' but the two powers are distinct; neither can trench upon the other; the President can not under the guise of military orders evade the legislative regulations by which he in common with the Army must be governed; and Congress can not in the guise of 'rules for the government' of the Army impair the authority of the President as Commander in Chief." (Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173, 221; affirmed, 165 U. S., 553.)

For other cases see note to Article II, section 2, clause 1; and see note to Article II section 2, clause 2, as to powers of Congress and of the President with reference to appointments and promotions in the Army and Navy.

Delegation of power to make regulations.—Congress can only legislate in a general way, and large powers are necessarily intrusted to the different departments. They really exercise in this way by delegation, and necessarily so, for the purpose of carrying on the vast affairs of the Government and its details, authority which in a strict sense pertains to Congress. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 438, 439.)

While of course Congress can not constitutionally delegate to the President legislative powers, "it may, in conferring powers constitutionally exercisable by him, prescribe or omit prescribing, special rules of their administration or may specially authorize him to make the rules. When Congress neither prescribes them nor expressly authorizes him to make them, he has the authority, inherent in the powers conferred, of making regulations necessarily incidental to their exercise." (McCall's Case, 15 Fed. Cas., 1230.)

It is well settled that executive regulations when directly approved by Congress have the absolute force of law equally with other legislative acts. Regulations not approved by Congress have the force of law only when founded on the President's constitutional powers as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy or when consistent with and supplementary to the statutes which have been enacted by Congress. (In re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 452, 459.)

Congress has approved regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President and authorized him to make changes therein in the same manner. (Sec. 1547, R. S.) The Navy Regulations so issued by the Secretary of the Navy have the force and effect of positive law. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 257; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 180.)

For citation of decisions on subject of executive regulations, see note to sections 161 and 1547, Revised Statutes; see also Article II, section 2, clause 1.

Power of President to change established customs.—A custom which "has come down to us from the British Navy and which has been expressed in regulations sanctioned by Congress, has thus become, in effect, a national policy; it is believed that a change therein would involve matters more properly a subject for the exercise of the constitutional powers vested in Congress 'to provide and maintain a Navy' and 'to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.' In other words, the regulation in this case did not prescribe the rule, but was merely declaratory of the preexisting rule based on established custom. Under such circumstances an amendment of the regulation would involve something more than occurs in the ordinary case; that is to say, it would involve not merely the change of a regulation but a radical change in previous custom which Congress has indicated should be continued. That the President's power to make such changes is not without limitation is supported by the Attorney General's opinion holding that the President was without authority to make radical changes in regulations prescribing in accordance with custom the duties to be performed by staff officers of the Marine Corps. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)" (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915.)

II. POWER TO CREATE COURTS-MARTIAL.

Trials by jury not required in the Navy.—

Among the powers conferred upon Congress by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution are the following: "To provide and maintain a Navy;" "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;" and the fifth amendment, which requires a presentment of a grand jury in cases of capital or otherwise infamous crimes expressly excepts from its operation "cases arising in the land or naval forces;" and by the second section of the second article of the Constitution it is declared that "the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States."—"These provisions show that Congress has the power to provide for the trial and punishment of military and naval offenses in the manner then and now practiced by civilized nations and that the power to do so is given without any connection between it and the third article of the Constitution defining the judicial power of the United States; indeed that the two powers are entirely independent of each other." (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65; see also U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313; Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6349; Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

"Under these powers it has always been supposed that Congress may provide for the trial by court-martial of persons in the land or naval forces, or in the militia in service, for military offenses. This is the usual mode of trial for these offenses which had prevailed in England, the country from which we borrowed most of our laws, for more than a hundred years prior to the adoption of our Constitution, and, in fact, ever since England has had any standing army at all. It is also the mode which prevailed in the colonies at the time the Convention sat, and it has been a part of our code of laws relating to the government of the land and naval forces and of the militia in service ever since we had a Government. This mode of trial of military men for military offenses has become too well fixed in our system to now admit of question." (Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6349.)

"The sixth amendment affirms that 'in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury,' language broad enough to embrace all persons and cases; but the fifth, recognizing the necessity of an indictment or presentment before anyone can be held to answer for high crimes, excepts 'cases arising in the land or naval forces or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger;' and the framers of the Constitution doubtless meant to limit the right of trial by jury in the sixth amendment to those persons who were subject to indictment or presentment in the fifth. The discipline necessary to the efficiency of the Army and Navy required other and swifter modes of trial than are furnished by the common-law courts; and in pursuance of the power conferred by the Constitution Congress has declared the kinds of trial and the manner in which they shall be conducted for offenses committed while the party is in the military or naval service. Every one connected with these branches of the public service is amenable to the jurisdiction which Congress has created for their government, and while thus serving surrenders his right to be tried by the civil courts." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 3, 123.)

"It is not denied that the power to make rules for the government of the Army and Navy is a power to provide for trial and punishment by military courts without a jury. It has been so understood and exercised from the adoption of the Constitution to the present time." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 137, concurring opinion of four justices.)

In the exercise of this power Congress has enacted rules for the regulation of the Army, known as the Articles of War (sec. 1342, R. S.), and for the Navy, known as the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.). Every officer before he enters on the duties of his office subscribes to these articles and places himself within the power of courts-martial to pass on any offense which he may have committed in contravention of them. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365.)

"The notion suggested by Sir Matthew Hale and repeated by Sir William Blackstone (Com., vol. 1, p. 213) that 'martial [military] law is built on no settled principles but is entirely arbitrary in its decisions and is in truth not law but something indulged rather than allowed by law' is an exploded absurdity. A court-martial is a lawful tribunal, existing by the same authority that any other court exists by, and the law military a branch of the law as valid as any other, and it differs from the general law of the land in authority only in this that it applies to officers and soldiers of the Army, but not to other members of the body politic, and that it is limited to breaches of military duty. * * * There is the less room for the superficial remark of Sir Matthew Hale to be applied in the United States, inasmuch as the Constitution expressly empowers Congress 'to make (special) rules for the government of the land and naval forces' and expressly excepts the trial of cases arising in the land or naval service from the ordinary provisions of law." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413.)

III. FINALITY OF COURT-MARTIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Judgments of courts-martial acting within their jurisdiction not open to review by civil courts.—Courts-martial are lawful tribunals with authority to finally determine any case over which they have jurisdiction, and their proceedings when confirmed as provided are not open to review by the civil tribunals except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the military or naval court had jurisdiction of the person and subject matter and whether, though having such jurisdiction, it had exceeded its powers in the sentence pronounced. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365; see also Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 333, 348.)

"With the sentences of courts-martial which have been convened regularly and have proceeded legally and by which punishments are directed not forbidden by law or which are according to the laws and customs of the sea, civil courts have nothing to do nor are they in any way alterable by them." (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65.)

"Within the sphere of their jurisdiction the judgments and sentences of courts-martial are as final and conclusive as those of civil tribunals of last resort, and the only authority of civil courts is to inquire whether the military authorities are proceeding regularly within their jurisdiction. If they are, they can not be interfered with no matter what errors may be committed in the exercise of their lawful jurisdiction." (In re McVey, 23 Fed. Rep., 878.)

"Undoubtedly errors are committed by courts-martial which a civil tribunal would regard as sufficient ground for a reversal of their judgments if it were sitting as an appellate court. But there is always this radical difference between an appellate court sitting for the correction of errors and a civil court into which the record of a court-martial is collateral—in the former there is not a failure of justice; the appellate court may reverse a judgment or prescribe another or award a new trial; in the latter the court must either give full effect to the sentence or pronounce it wholly void." (Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 217; affirmed, 165 U. S., 553.)

An officer of the Army attacked the sentence of a court-martial on the ground, among other things, that it was void because in violation of the fifth amendment, declaring that no person shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb. On behalf of the Government it was argued that the question was one within the power of the court-martial to decide, and must be held to have been waived or be assumed to have been ruled against the accused, in which case the decision would be conclusive on habeas corpus, since if incorrect it would be merely error and would not go to the jurisdiction. It had been held by the Supreme Court that the courts of the District of Columbia had jurisdiction to decide a similar question in cases tried by them, and that their decision would not be reviewed in that particular on habeas corpus. "It is difficult to see why the sentences of courts-martial, courts authorized by law in the enforcement of a system of government for a separate community recognized by the Constitution, are not within this rule. Its applicability would seem to be essential to the maintenance of that discipline which renders the Army efficient in war and morally progressive in peace and which is secured by the military code and the decisions of the military courts." (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365.)

Although error was committed by a naval court-martial in permitting the judge advocate to be present for a short time during a closed session of the court, this was an error of procedure only, and could not be corrected by a civil court in habeas corpus proceedings. "It is clear that the civil courts are in no sense appellate tribunals for the revision of proceedings in courts-martial. It has been decided that in such cases the civil courts should not interfere if it appears that the court-martial had jurisdiction of the person and of the subject matter which was tried before it and that errors in procedure in military courts can be corrected only by the proper military authorities." (Ex parte Tucker, 212 Fed. Rep., 569.)

"We must not be understood by anything we have said as intending in the slightest degree to impair the salutary rule that the sentences of courts-martial when affirmed by the military tribunal of last resort can not be revised by the civil courts save only when void because of an absolute want of power and not merely voidable because of defective exercise of power possessed." (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365; see also Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 82; Keyes v. U. S., 109 U. S., 336; Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167.)

"The court-martial for the trial of Capt. Oberlin M. Carter was convened by orders issued by the President; and he was therefore the reviewing authority and the court of last resort." (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 385.)

"Where a court-martial had jurisdiction to try petitioner for an offense against the naval regulations and to impose sentence authorized thereby, a civil court in habeas corpus proceeding could only review the question of jurisdiction and could not pass on alleged errors of law committed by the court-martial or on the severity of the sentence imposed." (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

"The case before me shows that the court-martial under which the petitioner was tried was properly constituted; that the charge and specification were in due form and authorized under the regulations for the government of the Navy; that the trial court had jurisdiction of the case and of the subject matter of the charge and acted within the scope of its lawful authority; that it also acted within its authority in imposing sentence; that such sentence was duly approved by the commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, by whom the court was convened; that it was also approved by the Secretary of the Navy, the final reviewing authority provided by law to act upon records of courts-martial in cases which do not extend to the loss of life or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer; that the sentence, therefore, can not be revised by the civil courts. * * *

If the petitioner was harshly dealt with and a sentence of undue severity was imposed, such sentence seems to have been within the powers of the court-martial, and it is held by the Supreme Court of the United States that the remedy must be found elsewhere than in courts of law." (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

What is conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, or conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline, is a question exclusively within the jurisdiction of a court-martial to determine, and its decision is not subject to review by a civil court. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 400; Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 178; Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 562, 563, reversed, on other grounds, 148 U. S., 84.)

Neither the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia nor the Supreme Court of the United States has any appellate jurisdiction over a naval court-martial nor over offenses which such a court has power to try. Neither of these courts is authorized to interfere with the court-martial in the performance of its duty, by way of writ of prohibition or any order of that nature. (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564, 570; compare State v. Peake, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.), 354.)

Whether the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has power to issue a writ of prohibition to a court-martial—quaere. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 168.)

"Where an officer of the Army during the War with Spain, after having been acquitted by a court-martial of charges preferred against him, was, by direction of the commanding generals retried by the court-martial on the same charge, and was convicted and dismissed from the service, and thereafter peace having been declared, and its term of enlistment having expired, his regiment was mustered out and discharged, it was held that mandamus would not lie on his relation against the Secretary of War to compel the respondent to cause the relator to be mustered out and discharged." (Brown v. Root, 18 App. D.C., 239.) [In this case there was not a second trial, but a revision by the court of its finding, by order of the convening authority.] "The United States Court of Claims would probably have jurisdiction of an action by the relator to establish the validity of his claim to salary accruing after the date of his dismissal." (Same case.)

"When the offense charged is trivial and the punishment is likewise trivial, a civil court should not be called upon to examine the legality of the sentence of a court-martial; and when called upon is not required by substantial justice to apply a stricter rule than that which prevails in ordinary criminal cases." (Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 236, 239.)

IV. JURISDICTION OF COURTS-MARTIAL.

Persons subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial.—Everyone connected with the military and naval service is amenable to the jurisdiction which Congress has created for their government, and while thus serving surrenders his right to be tried by the civil courts. (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 3, 123. See notes to sec. 1624, R. S.) The jurisdiction of courts-martial includes:

Retired officers.—(Runkle v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 396; 122 U. S., 543; Closson v. U. S., 7 App. (D. C.), 460; secs. 1256 and 1457, R. S.; Naval Dig., 1916, 539.)

Chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department.—(18 Op. Atty. Gen., 176; see also Smith v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 143; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 181; Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

Judge Advocate General of the Army.—(Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173; 165 U. S., 553.)

Clerks to paymasters in the Navy, although neither officers (in a constitutional sense) nor enlisted men. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109; U. S. v. Bogart, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14616; In re Reed, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11636; In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596. But see Ex parte Van Vranken, 47 Fed. Rep., 888, reversed, 163 U. S., 694.) [Paymasters' clerks were not strictly officers of the Navy at the time these decisions were rendered (U. S. v. Monat, 124 U. S., 303). Their status has since been changed and they are now officers of the Navy. (Naval appropriation act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 157; see also U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309.)]

Army contractors, under a specific statutory provision subjecting them to jurisdiction of courts-martial (Holmes v. Sheridan, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6644); but only for fraud or willful neglect of duty in connection with their contracts (Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6349).

Naval Militiamen, when employed in the service of the United States in time of war or public danger (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109, 114); or for refusing to obey the order of the President calling them forth into the service of the United States (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19; Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1; naval militia act, Feb. 16, 1914, sec. 5, 38 Stat., 285).

Civilians.—As to trials of civilians by military courts in time of war, see note to Art. I, sec. 8, clause 11, "Military jurisdiction over civilians in time of war."

Persons lawfully called, drafted or ordered into, or to duty or for training in, the military service are subject to jurisdiction of Army courts-martial from the dates they are required by the terms of the call, draft, or order to obey same; all retainers to the camp and all persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and in time of war all such retainers and persons accompanying or serving with the armies of the United States in the field both within and without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States: all persons admitted into the Regular Army Soldiers' Home at Washington,

D. C.; all persons under sentence adjudged by courts-martial. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, sec. 3, 39 Stat., 650, amending sec. 1342, R. S., art. 2; see Ex parte Gerlach, 247 Fed. Rep., 616.)

All persons who in time of war, or of rebellion against the United States, are found in the capacity of spies, etc. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 5.)

De facto enlisted man.—Where a man without enlisting in the Navy served the full term of enlistment, he is entitled to an honorable discharge and on reenlistment to the benefits of his de facto enlistment. (File 5839, July 5, 1904; see also 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319; Circular War Department, Mar. 18, 1901.)

A fraudulent enlistment is still an enlistment, and a man so enlisting is de facto in the service and subject to the jurisdiction of a naval court-martial. (File 5624, Feb. 17, 1896; U. S. v. Reaves, 126 Fed. Rep., 127, file 152-04; Ex parte Rock, 171 Fed. Rep., 240; Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696, file 5956-6; In re Scott 144 Fed. Rep., 79, file 2757-4; In re Lessard, 134 Fed. Rep., 305; Solomon v. Davenport, 87 Fed. Rep., 318; In re Morrissey, 137 U. S., 157; compare Ex parte Bakley, 148 Fed. Rep., 56, affirmed, Dillingham v. Bakley, 152 Fed. Rep., 1022, file 5506-5, and Ex parte Lisk, 145 Fed. Rep., 860, file 2757-8.)

"It seems to me illogical to say that a man can commit a crime and when arrested obtain a discharge on the ground that the original enlistment was not regular or proper." (In re Hamilton and Carroll, Superior Court, Fulton Co. (Ga.) Atlanta Circuit, file 7969 and 7988-04; see also, In re McVey, 23 Fed. Rep., 878.)

Soldier whose enlistment has expired.—"The proceedings against the prisoner having been instituted while he was clearly within the jurisdiction of the military authorities, by the preferring of charges and by his arrest as well as by the forwarding of the charges to headquarters with an application for the appointment of a court-martial for his trial, the question for determination is, Did that jurisdiction cease and expire at the end of the prisoner's term of enlistment so that all proceedings after that date were void? The general rule is that when the jurisdiction of a court attaches in a particular case by the commencement of proceedings and the arrest of the accused, it will continue for all the purposes of trial, judgment, and execution. * * * The general rule is grounded in sound reason. Many of the greatest military offenses are not cognizable by the courts of common law. A soldier might be guilty on the eve of the expiration of his term of enlistment of the grossest insults to his officers or of disobedience of orders or of desertion in the face of an enemy; and if he could not be held for trial after the end of his term he would escape punishment altogether. To hold that in every such case the jurisdiction of a court-martial would cease with the expiration of the term of enlistment would be to shield the guilty from punishment, to encourage crime, and to greatly demoralize the military service. The jurisdiction, therefore, in such cases is to be maintained upon the highest considerations of public policy. But such considerations are not alone sufficient to support the jurisdiction of a court which has power to deal with life, liberty, and property. The jurisdiction of a criminal court must rest upon sound principles of law and not merely upon considerations of public interest and convenience. It frequently happens that the guilty go acquit because there is no lawful mode of trial and punishment provided. The jurisdiction in the cases named and in many others of like character must therefore be upheld upon the ground first mentioned, to-wit, that the court-martial acquired it by the proper commencement of proceedings and could not be divested of it by any subsequent change in the status of the accused; and this reason applies as well to a case where the crime is one known to the common or statute law, as to one in which the offense is purely military." (Barrett v. Hopkins, 7 Fed. Rep., 312; see also, In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596; In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428; file 26251-5447, Dec. 8, 1911; 9 comp. Dec., 229.)

If before the expiration of his term of service an enlisted man commits a military crime, for the purpose of trying such offense an arrest or restraint would be justifiable. (U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537, Mr. Justice Story.)

The statute of limitations applicable to trials by court-martial for desertion from the Navy provides, "That said limitation shall not begin until the end of the term for which said person was enlisted in the service." (Art. 62, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 25, 1895, 28 Stat., 680.)

The statute authorizing detention of enlisted men in the Navy under certain circumstances beyond the expiration of the term for which they were enlisted provides "that all persons sent home or detained by a commanding officer, according to the provisions of this act, shall be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy until their return to an Atlantic or Pacific port and their regular discharge." Sec. 1422, R. S., as amended by act Mar. 3, 1875, 18 Stat., 484.)

Officer dismissed from Army.—Where an accused is proceeded against as an officer of the Army or Navy and jurisdiction attaches in respect of him as such, this includes not only the power to hear and determine the case, but the power to execute and enforce the sentence of the law. Having been sentenced, his status was that of a person held by authority of the United States as an offender against its laws, although pursuant to the sentence he had been dismissed before entering upon the period of imprisonment adjudged. The principle that where jurisdiction has attached, it can not be divested by mere subsequent change of status has been applied as justifying the trial and sentence of an enlisted man after expiration of the term of enlistment and the execution of sentence after many years and the severance of all connection with the Army. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, citing Barrett v. Hopkins, 7 Fed. Rep., 312, Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 349; and Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S., 696; see also Rose v. Roberts, 99 Fed. Rep., 948.)

charged from such confinement, remain subject to the Articles of War and other laws relating to the administration of military justice." (Act June 18, 1898, sec. 5, 30 Stat., 484; In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428; In re Craig, 70 Fed. Rep., 969; Ex parte Wildman, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17653a; Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365; see also act Aug. 29, 1916, noted above, under "Civilians.")

Persons discharged from the Navy.—"And if any person, being guilty of any of the offenses described in this article while in the naval service, receives his discharge, or is dismissed from the service, he shall continue to be liable to be arrested and held for trial and sentence by a court-martial in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had not received such discharge nor been dismissed." (Art. 14, Articles for the Government of the Navy, sec. 1624, R. S.; In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596; see also In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428, noted under sec. 1426, R. S., "Effect of discharge," and see file 28550-951:3, May 13, 1919; U. S. ex rel. Viscardi v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 695; U. S. ex rel. Sartantonio v. Warden of Naval Prison, 265 Fed. Rep., 787; 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 521.)

Persons in constructive custody of civil courts.—Where an officer of the Army is arrested by the civil authorities on the charge of felony and released on bail, he is amenable to the military authorities and may be tried by them for the military offense involved. However, "Although not necessary in the actual case, yet in deference to the spirit of our institutions and to the civil authorities, it may be expedient for the military authorities to suspend the trial of the military relations of the act of killing * * * until the civil relations of that act shall have been tried by the civil magistrate." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413; see also 21 Op. Atty. Gen. 504.)

The fact that an enlisted man convicted by a civil court was turned over to naval jurisdiction, sentence being suspended, is deemed sufficient authority to proceed with his trial by general court-martial for unauthorized absence. (File 26524-36, Jan. 15, 1912.)

The naval authorities have jurisdiction to try by court-martial and confine an enlisted man paroled by the civil authorities where the governor of the State consents to such man's delivery to the Navy for disciplinary action. (File 26524-44.)

An enlisted man tried by court-martial while on parole by civil authorities can not obtain his release from Army jurisdiction by habeas corpus proceedings. The court officials in whose custody he belonged while on parole are the only ones who could raise the question. (Case of John W. Pieper, Supreme Court, District of Columbia, 1912; see also In re Fox, 51 Fed. Rep., 427.)

See cases noted below under "Persons not subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial."

Persons not subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial.—Civilians—Congress have no power, and never had, to subject a person not in the military or naval service of the United States to a trial by a court-martial for any crime, especially one that is capital and infamous. This is plain enough upon the face of the Constitution. (Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6349. As to trial of civilians by military courts in time of war, see note to Art. I, sec. 8, clause 11, "Military jurisdiction over civilians in time of war," and see above, under "Persons subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial;" see also Holmes v. Sheridan, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6644, as to trials of Army contractors; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19, as to trials of militiamen prior to entering service of United States; and U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537, as to status of civilians visiting military posts.)

Officers discharged from Army.—A court-martial has no jurisdiction over an officer of the Army after he has left the service. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570; 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 55; compare, cases noted above, "Persons subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial.")

Officers resigned from the Navy.—Unless there be some act of Congress which prolonged his liability to military courts and military offenses after he had been allowed to leave the service, an officer is not subject to trial by naval court-martial on charges preferred after that date. (G. O. No. 143, Navy Department, Oct. 28, 1869; see In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596.)

Marine whose enlistment has expired.—Where the enlistment of a marine has expired, and there is no legal authority for retaining him in the service, in point of law he is entirely discharged from the Marine Corps. "If, therefore, he had been restrained of his liberty, or prevented from leaving the navy yard, the detention would have been illegal. He might, by a habeas corpus to this court, have been liberated, and might well have sustained an action for damages. If under such circumstances he had attempted to depart from the navy yard and had been forcibly prevented, he would have had a right to repel force by force, and if necessary to have taken the life of his opponent. And if he had been killed in this attempt to recover his liberty it might under such circumstances have been murder in the perpetrator. But although the prisoner was thus in contemplation of law discharged, yet he might remain if he and the officers of the garrison pleased. He might remain in expectation of his pay or of a pension or of a certificate of discharge, which should be a voucher for his good behavior and of his having left the garrison without desertion. And if he chose to remain (however reluctantly), and to perform military service partially until he could obtain a regular discharge or receive his pay, although not a soldier, he was undoubtedly liable in a limited degree to the regulations necessary to the peace and subordination of a military garrison. And even if he was unlawfully detained or remained under an erroneous impression that he was bound so to do, this would not authorize him, in collateral things, to violate the laws. For even an unlawful detention will not authorize a man to perpetrate crimes against innocent persons, or on other occasions disconnected with his attempts to recover his liberty. * * * But suppose him to be in the most favored condition and entitled to all the rights of a stranger, still in a military post or garrison every person who is voluntarily there, either as a visitor or guest, is bound to observe peace and order and to conduct himself inoffensively. If he excite a riot, if he attempt to stab or wound or kill anyone within the lines, he is liable to be arrested and detained until he can be placed in the hands of the proper tribunals having jurisdiction to punish him. It is not competent for mere military officers in such cases to apply imprisonment by way of punishment, but it is their duty to apply it if necessary to prevent bloodshed and to restore peace and to keep the offender to answer over to a competent tribunal." (U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537, Mr. Justice Story.)

Naval Militia men participating in cruises with Regular Navy.—"Until they are called into the service of the United States, Naval Militia men are, and remain, civilians, and consequently are not subject to punishment as such. The captain is charged with the safety, discipline, and well-being of his ship. He is not charged by law with the discipline of the passengers, except in so far as it affects the safety or discipline of his ship, and he is not authorized to administer any punishments on them. He is clothed with full authority in virtue of his position to use necessary force toward Naval Militia men who jeopardize the safety or discipline of the ship or refuse compliance with general or special orders. In effecting this he is authorized to use such ordinary methods as may be necessary. He would be justified in limiting offenders to certain parts of the ship or exercising other forms of restraint, or even, if circumstances demanded, confining the offender to a room, but always with the object of preserving the safety and discipline of the ship and not at all in the sense of inflicting a punishment, as such. * * * The naval commanding officer has supreme authority over all persons on board his ship, including members of militia organizations; and * * * while he can not try the latter by court-martial or impose punishments upon them under article 24 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy [section 1624, Revised Statutes], nevertheless he may, if necessary, place them in confinement or remove them from the vessel when circumstances demand, under lawful regulations to be adopted by the Department. It should, however, be distinctly understood that such action is not authorized as punishment, but only in so far as is necessary to maintain the discipline of the ship and the supreme authority of the commanding officer." (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915.)

Persons in constructive custody of civil courts.—An enlisted man arrested as a deserter while on parole for a civil offense will not be tried by court-martial, because constructively in the custody of the civil authorities, but should be discharged from the Navy as undesirable as of the date of his conviction in the civil courts. (File 4495-02, May 27, 1902; see also File 26283-281; In re Wall, 8 Fed. Rep., 85.)

An enlisted man released by Federal civil authorities on bail should not be placed under restraint upon his return to the Navy, unless it should develop that he is not to be tried in the civil court, in view of the fact that the civil court has adequate power to cause his appearance when required. (File 26283-281, June 27, 1911; see also 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 504.)

See cases noted above under "Persons subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial."

Offenses triable by court-martial.—It is not possible for an officer to do any act punishable by the known laws of the land, however foreign that act may be to his duties or immediate relation as a soldier, which shall not be cognizable by court-martial. To commit a crime of any sort is, to say the least of it, in general unofficerlike and ungentlemanly conduct. Undoubtedly cases may and do occur of assault or even homicide by an officer of the Army which constitute a technical crime at law, the facts of which when they come to be scrutinized by the eye of a court-martial would be held the reverse of criminal and highly honorable to the party accused. These are exceptional cases. The general proposition remains true, that it is the part of an officer and a gentleman to observe the laws of his country, and for not doing it he would in most cases be censurable and in all his conduct would be lawfully subject to military inquiry. His conviction or acquittal by the State court of the offense against the general law does not discharge him from responsibility for the military offense involved in the same facts. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, cited with approval in U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710, 712; see also In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428. As to double jeopardy, see note to Amendments, Art. V.)

"Wherever our Army or Navy may go beyond our territorial limits, neither can go beyond the authority of the President or the jurisdiction of Congress." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 141.)

"When the act charged as 'conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline' is actually a crime against society which is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, it seems to us clear a court-martial is authorized to inflict that kind of punishment. The act done is a civil crime, and the trial is for that act. The proceedings are had in a court-martial because the offender is personally answerable to that jurisdiction." (Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S., 696.)

"Under every system of military law, for the government of either land or naval forces, the jurisdiction of courts-martial extends to the trial and punishment of acts of military or naval officers which tend to bring disgrace and reproach upon the service of which they are members, whether those acts are done in the performance of military duties, or in a civil position, or in a social relation, or in private business." (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 168, 183.)

Offense committed by de facto civilian; see note to section 1426, Revised Statutes, "Revocation of discharge issued under illegal sentence of court-martial."

Court-martial can not convene in foreign jurisdiction.—No naval court or assembly of a judicial character shall be ordered or permitted to assemble or conduct any part of its proceedings in any place subject to foreign jurisdiction. When, however, United States forces have landed in foreign territory for military purposes, that part of the foreign territory actually occupied by such forces is not subject to foreign jurisdiction within the meaning of this section. (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 215, citing C. M. O. No. 42, 1915, p. 10, superseding Art. R-703, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Where naval court-martial was held in place subject to foreign jurisdiction, the proceedings were disapproved. (Harwood, p. 57). Compare file 26504-254, Oct. 26, 1915, C. M. O. No. 42, 1915, p. 10.)

See note to Article I, section 8, clause 11, under "IV. Discipline of Army."

Courts-martial other than naval can not convene on vessel of regular Navy.—Naval Militia officers can not convene State courts-martial on board a vessel of the regular Navy in the service of the United States; as the established policy of this Government, expressed in Navy Regulations which have been approved by Congress and are still in effect, does not permit any other than a naval court-martial to be held on board a naval vessel. (Citing Art. R-3845, Navy Regs., 1913; Art. 987, Navy Regs., 1870; sec. 1547, R. S.) This policy has its origin in the customs and regulations of the British Navy (citing McArthur on Courts-Martial, 1813, vol. 1, p. 205). (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915.) By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 598), naval militia courts-martial were authorized to convene on board naval vessels; this act was repealed by naval appropriation act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708), repealing all laws "relating to the Naval Militia and the National Naval Volunteers.")

"In the interest of the speedy administration of justice, the prompt disposal of public business, and the general efficiency of the armed forces," it was recommended by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy that article R-3845, Navy Regulations, 1913, be rescinded, in order that Army courts-martial might be permitted to convene on naval vessels. (File 26504-339, Sept. 7, 1918.)

V. JURISDICTION OF CIVIL COURTS.

Jurisdiction of civil authorities over persons in military and naval service.—Commanding officers of the Army, in time of peace, are required under certain conditions to deliver to the civil authorities for trial persons subject to military law for whom application has been duly made by such civil authorities. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 662, amending sec. 1342, R. S., art. 59.) [No similar statute relating to the Navy; as to naval orders and practice, see note to Article IV, section 2 clause 2.]

There can be no doubt of the power of Congress to govern the Army and Navy by bringing offenses committed in either under the cognizance of the courts of law. This power is fully executed in respect to the Army in the Rules and Articles of War [cited above]. But no such expression of intention is introduced in the naval code. Whether, then, the courts of law are to take cognizance of offenses committed in the naval forces depends entirely upon the true intent of Congress in that behalf, as expressed in the Crimes acts and in the naval code. (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313.)

authorizing an arrest by the executive with a view to the forcible surrender by him for the purposes of trial. However, advised that the accused be ordered by the Navy Department to surrender himself. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 244; see also note to Art. 1, sec. 8, clause 13, and Art. IV, sec. 2, clause 2. And see note to sec. 355, R. S.)

"Offenders in the land forces in certain cases were to be delivered over to the courts of law for trial and punishment. A similar provision is contained in the English mutiny act (2 McArthur, 229), without which it would seem to be thought that, under the general authority to try all cases not capital, courts-martial would have exclusive cognizance of that class of offenses when committed in the army * * *. But no such direction or authority is incorporated in the naval code, and the design of Congress, therefore, to give the entire jurisdiction over the offenses enumerated to the naval courts-martial would seem indubitable * * *. If Congress means its penal law shall apply to ships of war, those vessels will be specifically named." (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313.) [The Federal criminal code, approved Mar. 4, 1909, in terms extends to crimes committed upon the high seas or any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, on board any vessel "belonging in whole or in part to the United States." 35 Stat., 1142, 1148, secs. 272, 310.]

In the case of Commander Mackenzie "the act of killing an inferior by a superior, which came under inquiry charged as unlawful homicide, occurred on board a ship of war at sea; and the questions pertinent to the present subject were whether the act was cognizable exclusively by a naval court-martial or by that concurrently with the competent ordinary courts of the United States. The fact of the act having occurred on board a ship of war and at sea influenced materially the arguments on the question of jurisdiction. For this reason Ex-Chancellor Kent and Mr. Justice Betts of the Southern District of New York both inclined, the former positively, the latter less so, to the opinion that the jurisdiction of the naval authorities was exclusive, more especially as the act of Congress for the government of the Navy does not contain the same recognition of the civil authorities as that for the government of the Army * * *. At the same time each of those eminent jurisconsults maintained confidently the competency and legality of a naval court-martial, at least as having concurrent jurisdiction with the civil courts." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413.)

"Undoubtedly the general rule is that the jurisdiction of civil courts is concurrent as to offenses triable before courts-martial." (Franklin v. U. S., 216 U. S., 559, 568, citing 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, 419, U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710.)

"That a Government which possesses the broad power of war, which 'may provide and maintain a navy,' which 'may make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces,' has power to punish an offense committed by a marine on board a ship of war, wherever that ship may lie, is a proposition never to be questioned in this court." The inquiry respects not the extent of the power of Congress, but the extent to which that power has been exercised. (U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 336.)

A Federal statute providing for the punishment of murder committed on the high seas or on any river, haven, basin, or bay out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, does not apply to murder committed on board a warship while in waters within the jurisdiction of the State of Massachusetts. (U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 336.)

A Federal statute providing "that if any person or persons shall, within any fort, arsenal, dockyard, magazine, or in any other place or district of country under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, commit the crime of willful murder, such person or persons, on being thereof convicted, shall suffer death," did not include murder committed on a United States warship, as the word "place," the same as the words with which it was associated, was intended to apply to objects which are "in their nature fixed and territorial." (U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 336.)

"This construction [that the word "place" does not include a warship] is strengthened by the fact that at the time of passing this law the United States did not possess a single ship of war. It may, therefore, be reasonably supposed that a provision for the punishment of crimes in the Navy might be postponed until some provision for a navy should be made. While taking this view of the subject, it is not entirely unworthy of remark that afterwards, when a navy was created and Congress did proceed to make rules for its regulation and government, no jurisdiction is given to the courts of the United States of any crime committed in a ship of war, wherever it may be stationed." (U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 336.)

The word "place" within the Revised Statutes punishing homicide embraces a United States battleship moored at Cob Dock, in the waters of Wallabout Bay, in the East River, these waters being included in the cession of jurisdiction by the State of New York to the Federal Government. "In the Bevans case the defendant was indicted and convicted for murder on board the United States ship of war Independence while lying in the waters of Boston Harbor and while such vessel was in commission and in the actual service of the United States. In this case the Supreme Court held that it was not the offense committed but the place in which it was committed that determined the question of jurisdiction. It appeared that the United States had no jurisdiction over the waters of Boston Bay, in which the gunboat Independence was lying when the murder was committed, but that such waters were within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the State of Massachusetts. The very opposite is true in the case at bar * * *. While the facts of these two cases are very similar, yet they are entirely different and the direct opposite of each other in the matter of jurisdiction * * *. We must, therefore, hold that * * * the battleship Indiana was a 'place' within the meaning of the United States statutes." (U. S. v. Carter, 84 Fed. Rep., 622.)

The courts of the Philippine Islands have no jurisdiction over offenses committed on board a naval vessel at Cavite, notwithstanding the provision in act No. 1457 of the Philippine Commission that "the jurisdiction of the city of Manila for police purposes only shall extend to 3 miles from the shore into Manila Bay," etc. The laws for the government of the Navy, the Navy Regulations, and lawful orders of superior naval authority, embody the only police regulations in force on board naval vessels. (File 26524-19, Oct. 26, 1910.)

Article 6 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.) does not vest exclusive jurisdiction in a naval court-martial of the crime of murder. The general rule is that jurisdiction of civil courts is concurrent as to offenses triable before courts-martial. Accordingly, held that homicide committed on a naval hospital ship at Olongapo, Philippine Islands, by a civilian may be tried by a Federal court in the first judicial district of the United States to which the offender is brought. Courts of the Philippine Islands did not have jurisdiction in this case, as the offense, if any, was against the United States, and the Philippine courts only have jurisdiction of offenses against Philippine Government. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 24.)

Public ships of war of the United States "are exempt even from a foreign jurisdiction; and when lying in the domains of another nation are not subject to its courts, but all civil and criminal causes arising on board of them are exclusively cognizable in the courts of the United States. This is a principle of public law which has its foundation in the equality and independence of sovereign States, and in the fatal inconveniences and confusion which any other rule would introduce. * * * Every argument by which this exemption is sustained as to foreign States applies with equal force as to the United States and every particular State of the Union; and it is fortified by other arguments drawn from the peculiar nature and provisions of our own municipal Constitution." (Argument of Attorney General, U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 373, 374.)

"The principle that every power have exclusive jurisdiction over offenses committed on board their own public ships wherever they may be is also demonstrated in a speech of the present Chief Justice of the United States [Marshall], delivered in the House of Representatives in the celebrated case of Nash alias Robins, which argument, though made in another forum and for another object, applies with irresistible force to every claim of jurisdiction over a public ship that may be set up by any sovereign power other than that to which such ship belongs (Bee 266 n). All jurisdiction is founded on consent; either the consent of all the citizens implied in the social compact itself, or the express consent of the party or his sovereign. But in this case, so far from there being any consent implied or express, that the State courts should take cognizance of offenses committed on board of ships of war belonging to the United States, those ships enter the ports of the different States under the permission of the State governments, which is as much a waiver of jurisdiction as it would be in the case of a foreign ship entering by the same permission. A foreign ship would be exempt from the local jurisdiction; and the sovereignty of the United States on board their own ships of war can not be less perfect while they remain in any of the ports of the Confederacy than if they were in a port wholly foreign. But we have seen that when they are in a foreign port they are exempt from the jurisdiction of the country. With still more reason must they be exempt from the jurisdiction of the local tribunals when they are in a port of the Union." (Argument for United States, U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat., 352-355.) [In this case the Supreme Court held that it was "unnecessary to decide the question respecting the jurisdiction of the State court." The Attorney General argued that "if the offense in question be not cognizable by the circuit court [of the United States] it is entirely dispensable," [the State courts being without jurisdiction, and the naval courts-martial's jurisdiction not including this crime, under the Articles for the Government of the Navy]. The Supreme Court, however, merely decided that the Federal circuit court did not have jurisdiction.]

Whether, if murder should be committed on board a ship of war lying within the body of any county, the courts of the State might not interpose, may well be doubted. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413; compare Ex parte Tatem, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 1759; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 647.)

A naval court-martial has jurisdiction to try an enlisted man of the Navy for fatally wounding another enlisted man on board a ship of war in the Thames River, opposite the city of New London, Conn. The civil authorities of Connecticut decided that the case "should be dealt with by the authorities of the United States." The Attorney General stated, among other things, that the State authorities "might probably" have tried the man for manslaughter. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 578.)

Murder committed by an enlisted man on board a naval vessel at the navy yard, Philadelphia, may be dealt with by naval court-martial as manslaughter. (G. C. M. Rec. No. 16098; file 6674-10, Mar. 8, 1910.)

"The charge of Mr. Justice Betts [in U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313] is legal authority to the point that a court-martial having lawfully entered upon cognizance of a case, the civil magistrate can not lawfully interrupt or disturb its jurisdiction and right of complete and final action." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413.)

"In any case in which the delivery of a person in the Navy or Marine Corps for trial is desired by the civil authorities, Federal or State, and such person is a naval prisoner (which includes any person serving sentence of court-martial or in custody awaiting trial by court-martial or disposition of charges against him), he will not in general be delivered to the Federal or State authorities until he has served the sentence of the naval court-martial, or his case has otherwise been finally disposed of by the naval authorities." (G. O. No. 121, Navy Department, Sept. 17, 1914; Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 29 (15).)

As to jurisdiction of civil authorities over persons in military service, see further, note to Article I, section 8, clause 11, "Jurisdiction over persons in military service during war," and note to Article I, section 8, clause 13, "Exemption of Federal officers and subordinates from arrest by State authorities."

VI. APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTION TO THE NAVY.

Whether constitutional limitations restrict Congress in legislating for Navy.—The requirement as to presentment or indictment by grand jury as a prerequisite to trial for criminal offenses, does not extend to "cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger." (Art. V of the amendments, Runkle v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 410, 411.) [As to trials by consular courts, see In re Ross, 140 U. S., 453.]

The Sixth Amendment, entitling the accused to be confronted with the witnesses against him, has no application to the proceedings of courts-martial: nevertheless the principles enumerated by the civil courts are persuasive in giving effect to a legislative enactment to accomplish a similar intent in proceedings of courts-martial. (Mullan v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 157, 176; affirmed 212 U. S., 516.)

The right of trial by jury, guaranteed to persons accused of crime (Art. III, sec. 2, clause 3, and Art. VI, amendments) does not apply to persons in the Army and Navy, as this right was evidently intended to be limited to persons who were subject to presentment or indictment by grand jury, and also trial by court-martial was the mode which prevailed in England and in the colonies, at the time the Constitution was framed, for the punishment of persons in the military and naval service. (See note above, under this clause, "Trials by jury not required in the Navy.")

"The Constitution itself provides for military government as well as for civil government. And we do not understand it to be claimed that the civil safeguards of the Constitution have application in cases within the proper sphere of the former * * *. It is not denied that the power to make rules for the government of the Army and Navy is a power to provide for trial and punishment by military courts without a jury. It has been so understood and exercised from the adoption of the Constitution to the present time. Nor in our judgment does the fifth or any other amendment abridge that power * * *. We think, therefore, that the power of Congress in the government of the land and naval forces and of the militia is not at all affected by the fifth or any other amendment." (Concurring opinion of Chief Justice Chase and three other justices in Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 137; see also In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596.)

"Aside from constitutional provisions, it is a plain dictate of common justice that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Accordingly, the proceedings of a court-martial are illegal where one member was detached and another substituted by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation without authority from the Secretary of the Navy who convened the court. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

"If it be desirable or necessary that the prisoner in a civil court be present at every proceeding after indictment, it seems to be still more so that a prisoner before a court-martial should be present, for he ordinarily is not represented by counsel learned in the law and watchful of his interests, but (as in this case) by some naval officer acting from a humane motive." (Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 236. See further note to Amendments, Art. V, "Proceedings in absence of accused.")

"The Constitution does apply, and is universally admitted to apply, with the same force and effect to military courts as to other tribunals." (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 230.) [It was held by the same Attorney General that an article of war "authorized 'depositions taken in accordance with it to be read in cases not capital,' although the Constitution provides that the accused in criminal prosecutions shall have the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 30, citing 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 311, 312.)]

"Let us see if the sentence [of an Army court-martial] was void because in violation of the fifth amendment. That amendment declares: 'Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb.' The Government objects in the outset that the fifth amendment is not applicable in proceedings by court-martial. * * * Reserving, however, the determination of these questions, it is nevertheless clear that the system under which the accused was tried, and his status as an officer of the Army, must be borne in mind in deciding whether the amendment, if applicable, was or was not violated by this sentence. * * * The result is that we are of opinion that the sentence can not be invalidated on any of the grounds so far considered." (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365.) [It was not decided in this case whether the prohibition against double jeopardy, in the fifth amendment, applies to Army courts-martial. But see Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 352, noted below.]

Courts-martial are "courts authorized by law in the enforcement of a system of government for a separate community recognized by the Constitution," and "it is difficult to see why" the finality of their sentences should not be determined by the same rule which has been applied to the courts of the District of Columbia. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365. For decisions as to whether constitutional limitations restrict Congress in legislating for the District of Columbia and for the Territories, see note to Art. IV, sec. 3, clause 2.)

The fact that Congress is given power by the Constitution "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces" does not enable it to control the President's discretion in respect of those appointments which the same supreme law [Const., Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2] requires him to make. The general power to regulate such forces can not be taken to nullify the specific mandate to the President to appoint to offices where Congress has made no other provision. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177; see also note to Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

"Congress, by express constitutional provision, has the power to prescribe rules for the government and regulation of the Army, but those rules must be interpreted in connection with the prohibition against a man's being put twice in jeopardy for the same offense. The former provision must not be so interpreted as to nullify the latter." (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 352.)

A board of officers organized under an act of Congress for the reduction of the Army is "not a court of any kind," and it is unnecessary to consider "how far its irregularities extended," although it is contended by an officer mustered out of the service pursuant to the board's finding that its proceedings "were in many respects irregular, illegal, and in violation of his constitutional rights." (Duryea v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 24; see also file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

See In re Ross (140 U. S., 453), holding that "By the Constitution of the United States a government is ordained and established 'for the United States of America,' and not for countries outside of their limits; and that Constitution can have no operation in another country"; and accordingly that Congress is empowered to authorize the trial of a capital offense by a consular court in China, etc., without indictment by grand jury, and without a jury on the trial.

[CLAUSE 15. Calling forth of the Militia.] ¹⁵ To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

Naval Militia.—Congress has provided "that in the event of war, actual or threatened, with any foreign nation involving danger of invasion, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, or whenever the President is, in his judgment, unable with the regular forces at his command to execute the laws of the United States, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the Naval Militia of a State, or of the States, or Territories, or of the District of Columbia, as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, suppress such rebellion, or to enable him to execute such laws, and to issue his orders for that purpose, through the governor of the respective State or Territory, or through the commanding officer of the Naval Militia of the District of Columbia, from which State, Territory, or District such Naval Militia may be called, to such officers of the Naval Militia as he may think proper." (Sec. 3, act Feb. 16, 1914, 38 Stat., 284, repealed by naval appropriation act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708.)

"The authority to decide whether the exigencies contemplated in the Constitution of the United States, and the act of Congress * * * in which the President has authority to call forth the militia, to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, have arisen, is exclusively vested in the President, and his decision is exclusive [conclusive] upon all other persons." (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19; Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1.)

"It is obvious that there are two ways by which the militia may be called into service; the one is under State authority, the other under authority of the United States. * * * But the possession of this power, or even the passing of laws in the exercise of it, does not preclude the General Government from leaning upon the State authority, if they think proper, for the purpose of calling the militia into service." (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 36.)

"The power to provide for repelling invasions includes the power to provide against the attempt and danger of invasion, as the necessary and proper means to effectuate the object. One of the best means to repel invasions is to provide the requisite force for action before the invader himself has reached the soil." (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19.)

"The Constitution, which enumerates the exclusive purposes for which the militia may be called into the service of the United States, affords no warrant for the use of the militia by the General Government, except to suppress insurrection, repel invasions, or to execute the laws of the Union, and hence the President has no authority to call forth the Organized Militia of the States and send it into a foreign country with the Regular Army as a part of an army of occupation." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 322.)

"As 'insurrection' is necessarily internal and domestic, within the territorial limits of the Nation, this portion of the sentence can afford no warrant for sending the militia to suppress it elsewhere. And even if an insurrection of our own citizens were set on foot and threateningly maintained in a foreign jurisdiction and upon our border, to send an armed force there to suppress it would be an act of war which the President can not rightfully do." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 322.)

"The term 'to repel invasion' may be, in some respects, more elastic in its meaning. Thus, if the militia were called into the service of the General Government to repel an invasion, it would not be necessary to discontinue their use at the boundary line, but they might (within certain limits at least) pursue and capture the invading force, even beyond that line, and just as the Regular Army might be used for that purpose. This may well be held to be within the meaning of the term 'to repel invasion.' Then, too, if an armed force were assembled upon our border, so near and under circumstances which plainly indicated hostility and an intended invasion, this Government might attack and capture or defeat such forces, using either the Regular Army or the militia for that purpose. This, also, would be but one of the ways of repelling an invasion. But this is quite different from and affords no warrant for sending the militia into a foreign country in time of peace and when no invasion is made or threatened." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 322.)

"The only remaining occasion for calling out the militia is 'to execute the laws of the Union.' But this certainly means to execute such laws where, and only where, they are in force and can be executed or enforced. * * * Outside of our own limits 'the laws of the Union' are not executed by armed force, either regular or militia. * * * What is certainly meant by this provision is, that Congress shall have power to call out the militia in aid of the civil power, for the peaceful execution of the laws of the Union, wherever such laws are in force and may be compulsorily executed, much as a sheriff may call upon a posse comitatus to peacefully disperse a riot or execute the laws. Under our Constitution, as it has been uniformly construed from the first, the militia is subordinate and subservient to the civil power, and it can be called upon to execute the laws of the Union only in aid of the civil power and where the civil power has jurisdiction of such enforcement. Even the Regular Army can be thus called upon only on such occasions; and, certainly, the militia can not be thus called upon at any other." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 322.)

Congress has provided that the Naval Militia, when called into the service of the United States, shall be required to serve "either within or without the territory of the United States." (Act Feb. 16, 1914, sec. 4, 38 Stat., 284, Gen. Order No. 77, Feb. 25, 1914, repealed by naval appropriation act July 1, 1918; 40 Stat., 708.)

[CLAUSE 16. Power over the militia.] ¹⁸ To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

Naval Militia.—Congress made detailed provision for "organizing, arming, and disciplining" the naval militia and "for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States," by act February 16, 1914. (38 Stat., 283, G. O. No. 77, Feb. 25, 1914; repealed by naval appropriation act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat. 708.)

"Congress is thus expressly vested with the power to * * * provide for governing such part only of the militia of the several States as, having been called forth to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrections, or to repel invasions, is employed in the service of the United States." (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 114.)

"It is also too plain for argument that the power here given to Congress over the militia is of a limited nature and confined to the objects specified in these clauses, and that in all other respects and for all other purposes the militia are subject to the control and government of the State authorities." (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 50, dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Story.)

"Congress have no power and never had to subject a militiaman not in the military or naval

Such a provision "must be read in view of the constitutional power of Congress to call forth the militia only to suppress insurrection, repel invasions, or to execute the laws of the Union. Congress can not, by its own enactment, enlarge the power conferred upon it by the Constitution; and if this provision were construed to authorize Congress to use the Organized Militia for any other than the three purposes specified, it would be unconstitutional. This provision applies only to cases where, under the Constitution, said militia may be used outside of our own borders, and was, doubtless, inserted as a matter of precaution and to prevent the possible recurrence of what took place in our last war with Great Britain, when portions of the militia refused to obey orders to cross the Canadian border." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 322.)

Duty outside the United States under selective draft law.—The service which may be exacted of the citizen under the Army power, which includes the power to compel military service, is not limited to the specific purposes for which Congress is expressly authorized by the militia clause to call the militia; the presence in the Constitution of such express regulations affords no basis for an inference that the Army power, when exerted, is not complete and dominant to the extent of its exertion. (Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U. S., 366.)

service of the United States * * * to a trial by court-martial for any crime, especially one that is capital or infamous. This is plain enough upon the face of the Constitution." (Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas., 1076.)

The purpose of the naval militia law of February 16, 1914, "is to encourage on the part of the Government the development of a source from which the Nation in time of war may be supplied with a body of men trained in the handling of the weapons of marine warfare that may immediately be added to the Regular Navy for the efficient handling of vessels of war." Naval vessels loaned to State militia organizations may be used only for the training and instruction of the militia. "While it may perhaps be said that in a certain sense the use by the State of Maryland of the Montgomery for the purpose of quelling 'riots, insurrection, or defiance of civil law within the State limits' is such a use as may tend to promote the efficiency of the naval militia that may be aboard, it is nevertheless considered that such a use of a naval vessel, her armament and equipment, for what is in reality a purely local police work is a use entirely foreign to the promotion of the efficiency of the naval militia as contemplated by the act of February 16, 1914 * * *." (File 4570-194, Mar. 15, 1915.)

"So long as the militia are acting under the military jurisdiction of the State to which they belong, the powers of legislation over them are concurrent in the General and State Government. Congress has power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining them, and this power being unlimited, except in the two particulars of officering and training them, according to the discipline to be prescribed by Congress, it may be exercised to any extent that may be deemed necessary by Congress. But at State militia the power of the State governments to legislate on the same subjects having existed prior to the formation of the Constitution and not having been prohibited by that instrument it remains with the States, subordinate, nevertheless, to the paramount law of the General Government operating upon the same subject." (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 16.)

"After a detachment of the militia have been called forth, and have entered into the service of the United States, the authority of the General Government over such detachment is exclusive. This is also obvious. Over the national militia the State governments never had or could have jurisdiction. None such is conferred by the Constitution of the United States, consequently none such can exist." (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 17.)

Congress is empowered to fix the period when a portion of the militia, called forth by the President, shall enter the service of the United States and change their character from State to National militia. "That Congress might by law have fixed the period by confining it to the draft, the order given to the chief magistrate or other militia officer of the State, to the arrival of the men at the place of rendezvous, or to any other circumstance, I can entertain no doubt. This would certainly be included in the more extensive powers of calling forth the militia, organizing, arming, disciplining, and governing them." (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 17.)

Congress may provide for the punishment by court-martial of a militiaman who refuses or neglects to obey the order of the President calling forth the militia. "This flows from the power bestowed upon the General Government to call them forth, and consequently to punish disobedience to a legal order, and by no means proves that the call of the President places the detachment in the service of the United States." (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 18.)

"Although a militiaman who refused to obey the orders of the President calling him into the public service under the act of 1795 is not, in the sense of that act, 'employed in the service of the United States' so as to be subject to the rules and articles of war, yet he is liable to be tried for the offense under the fifth section of the same act, by a court-martial, called under the authority of the United States." (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19.) Under the same circumstances the militiaman might be tried by a court-martial of the State for refusing to respond to the call of the President. (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1.)

Members of the naval militia, participating with the Regular Navy in cruises for the purpose of training and instruction, are not employed in the service of the United States, but remain civilians and consequently are not subject to punishment under the Articles for the Government of the Navy. The naval officer in command has, however, full authority to enforce any orders which affect the discipline, safety, and well-being of the ship or any part of the armament, equipment, or crew of the vessel under his command, and to this end may, if necessary, place militiamen in confinement or remove them from the vessel under lawful regulations issued by the Navy Department, not as punishment, but merely to maintain discipline. (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915; see note to Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, concerning jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial.)

Naval militia officers can not impose punishments on men belonging to their organizations while cruising on board a vessel of the Regular Navy, nor can naval militia officers convene State courts-martial on such vessels. (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915.) By act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 598, naval militia courts-martial were authorized to convene on board naval vessels; this act was repealed by naval appropriations act July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708).

Naval militia officers cruising with the Regular Navy for training and instruction are authorized by law to perform duty and to exercise authority over the naval personnel of inferior rank, but can not impose punishments upon persons in the naval service. (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915.)

"A State statute providing that all able-bodied male citizens of the State between 18 and 45, except those exempted, shall be subject to military duty, and shall be enrolled and designated as the State militia and prohibiting all bodies of men other than the regularly organized volunteer militia of the State and the troops of the United States from associating together as military organizations or drilling or parading with arms in any city of the State without license from the governor, as to these provisions is constitutional and does not infringe the laws of the United States." (Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S., 252.)

Federal power dominant.—The militia power reserved to the States by the militia clause of the Constitution, while separate and distinct in its field, and while serving to diminish occasion for exercising the Army power, is subject to be restricted in, or even deprived of, its area of operation through the Army power, which includes the power to compel military service, according to the extent to which Congress, in its discretion, finds necessity for calling the latter into play. (Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U. S., 366.)

[CLAUSE 17. Power of exclusive legislation.] ¹⁷ To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And See note to section 355, Revised Statutes, as to jurisdiction over naval reservations and other places belonging to the United States.

[CLAUSE 18. General legislative power.] ¹⁸ To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

SECTION 9. [CLAUSE 1. Migration or importation of persons.] ¹ The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

[CLAUSE 2. Writ of habeas corpus.] ² The privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

Definition.—The writ of habeas corpus is a high prerogative writ known to the common law, the great object of which is the liberation of those who may be imprisoned without sufficient cause. It is in the nature of a writ of error to examine the legality of the commitment. (Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet., 202.) [The ordinary writ of habeas corpus, known as “habeas corpus ad subjiciendum,” is the written order of a judge or court of competent jurisdiction, addressed to a person who is alleged to restrain another of his liberty without authority of law, and requiring the speedy production in court of the person so alleged to be illegally restrained, together with a return or statement setting forth the true cause of such restraint. If satisfactory cause be shown at the hearing, the court will remand the prisoner into the custody of the respondent; otherwise his immediate release will be ordered.]

“For the meaning of the term habeas corpus, resort must unquestionably be had to the common law; but the power to award the writ by any of the courts of the United States must be given by the written law.” (Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75.)

Only “privilege” of writ may be suspended.—“Suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus does not suspend the writ itself. The writ issues as a matter of course; and on its return the court decides whether the applicant is denied the right of proceeding any further.” (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2; see also, In re Fagan, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4604.)

May be suspended only by authority of Congress.—“If at any time the public safety should require the suspension of the powers vested by this act in the courts of the United States [that is, the power to issue writs of habeas corpus], it is for the legislature to say so. The question depends on political considerations on which the legislature is to decide.” (Per Marshall, C. J., Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75, 101; followed by Taney, C. J., in Ex parte Merryman, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9487; see also Ex parte Benedict, 3 Fed. Cas., 1292; McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673; In re Kemp, 16 Wis., 359, 377; Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind., 383; 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 372; Warren v. Paul, 22 Ind., 277; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet., 619; Wright v. Johnson, 5 Ark., 687; In re Boyle, 6 Idaho, 609, 57 Pac., 706, 45 L. R. A., 832; Ex parte Moore, 64 N. C., 802.)

The President has power to declare martial law, and as a necessary consequence to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. Martial law and the privilege of this writ are wholly incompatible. The remark of Chief Justice Marshall in the Bollman case seems to have been an obiter dictum [a remark made by the way, or incidentally]; and at the time of Chief Justice Taney’s opinion, the President had not declared martial law; the case of Ex parte Benedict is to be distinguished for the same reason. (Ex parte Field, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4761; see also Ex parte Vallandigham, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16816.)

“There is a plain distinction between the suspension of the writ in the sense of the clause of the Constitution, and the right of a military commander to refuse obedience when justified by the exigencies of war, or the ipso facto suspension which takes place wherever martial law actually exists, which the Chief Justice seems to have overlooked. But this kind of suspension, which comes with war and exists without proclamation or other act, is limited by the necessities of war. It applies only to cases where the demands upon the officer’s time and services are such that he can not consistently with his superior military duty, yield obedience to the mandates of the civil authorities, and to cases arising within districts which are properly subjected to martial law. In cases of the latter description, it is probable that the civil magistrates would be bound to take judicial notice of the existence of martial law, by which their functions are so far suspended, but as to the former, it would seem that the military officer should, if practicable, make return of the facts showing his excuse." (In re Kemp, 16 Wis., 359.)

Only Congress can repeal all power to issue the writ; but the President has lawful power to suspend the privilege of persons arrested in case of a great and dangerous rebellion, for he is especially charged by the Constitution with the "public safety." (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 74; see also In re Dugan, 6 D. C., 139.)

By act of March 3, 1863, Congress authorized the President to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus "during the present rebellion," whenever in his judgment the public safety may require it. "This law was passed in a time of great national peril, when our heritage of free government was in danger. An armed rebellion against the national authority, of greater proportion than history affords an example of, was raging; and the public safety required that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus should be suspended. The President had practically suspended it, and detained suspected persons in custody without trial; but his authority to do this was questioned. It was claimed that Congress alone could exercise this power; and that the legislature, and not the President, should judge of the political considerations on which the right to suspend it rested. The privilege of this great writ had never before been withheld from the citizen; and as the exigence of the times demanded immediate action, it was of the highest importance that the lawfulness of the suspension should be established. It was under these circumstances, which were such as to arrest the attention of the country, that this law was passed." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, 115; see also, Matter of Dunn, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4171; Matter of Oliver, 17 Wis., 686.)

"It is essential to the safety of every Government that in a great crisis like the one we have just passed through [civil war] there should be a power somewhere of suspending the writ of habeas corpus." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2.)

When privilege of writ may be suspended.—Under the Constitution the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus may be suspended only in two cases, namely, "rebellion," and "invasion." (Matter of Keeler, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7637.)

Effect of suspension.—"A citizen not connected with the military service and resident in a State where the courts are open and in the proper exercise of their jurisdiction can not, even when the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is suspended, be tried, convicted, or sentenced otherwise than by the ordinary courts of law." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2; but see concurring opinion of four justices in this case; see also McCall v. McDowell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8673.)

"In the emergency of the times, an immediate public investigation according to law may not be possible; and yet the peril to the country may be too imminent to suffer such persons to go at large. Unquestionably, there is then an exigency which demands that the Government, if it should see fit, in the exercise of a proper discretion, to make arrests, should not be required to produce the person arrested in answer to a writ of habeas corpus. The Constitution goes no further. It does not say that after a writ of habeas corpus is denied a citizen, that he shall be tried otherwise than by the course of common law. If it had intended this result, it was easy by the use of direct words to have accomplished it." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2.)

A person making an illegal arrest, even when the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is suspended, is liable to damages in a civil suit for such arrest and to punishment in a criminal prosecution. (Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind., 372.)

Effect of President's proclamation suspending privilege of writ is to stop proceedings upon habeas corpus although commenced prior to date of proclamation. (Matter of Dunn, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4171.)

As to power of Congress to protect military officers against civil or criminal responsibility, see note to Article I, section 8, clause 13.

On general subject of habeas corpus, see sections 751, et seq., Revised Statutes.

[CLAUSE 3. Bills of attainder and ex post facto laws.]³ No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

"A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes, in the language of the textbooks, judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or otherwise; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense." (Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall., 277; see also In re Yung Sing Hee, 36 Fed. Rep., 437; In re De Giacomo, 7 Fed. Cas. No.

3747; Anderson v. Baker, 23 Md., 623; Drehman v. Stifle, 8 Wall., 601; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 138.)

The injustice and tyranny which characterize ex post facto laws consist altogether in their retrospective operation, which applies with equal force, although not exclusively, to bills of attainder. (Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat., 266.)

A provision that persons convicted of certain crimes shall not be permitted to vote or hold office is not in the nature of a bill of attainder, as it requires conviction before the penalties are made to attach. (Washington v. State, 75 Ala., 585.)

A federal statute, providing that deserters from the military and naval service shall forfeit their rights of citizenship and the right to become citizens, is not void as a bill of attainder, because it contemplates trial by a court-martial to enforce this penalty as well as the other penalties for desertion. (Gotcheus v. Matheson, 58 Barb. (N. Y.), 153, 61 N. Y., 425; see also State v. Symonds, 57 Maine, 148; Holt v. Holt, 59 Maine, 464; Severance v. Healy, 50 N. H., 448; Huber v. Reily, 53 Pa. St., 112; McCafferty v. Guyer, 59 Pa. St., 110; Kurtz v. Moditt, 115 U. S., 501; and see secs. 1996 and 1998, R. S.)

The following are examples of statutes held void as bills of attainder: A federal statute prescribing an oath that deponent had never voluntarily borne arms against the United States or given aid to its enemies, etc., as a qualification for admission as an attorney before the United States courts (Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 333); a similar requirement as a condition precedent to holding office or practicing law or ministry in a State (Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall., 277; see also In re Shorter, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12811); a statute making the nonpayment of taxes during the Civil War evidence of disloyalty, and providing for the forfeiture of lands without a judicial hearing (Martin v. Snowden, 18 Gratt., 100); providing castration upon conviction of second offense (Davis v. Berry, 216 Fed. Rep., 413, 419); a statute excluding from the United States Chinese citizens (In re Yung Sing Hee, 36 Fed. Rep., 437; compare In re Chae Chan Ping, 36 Fed. Rep., 431). [A provision that no person shall be civilly prosecuted for any act done by virtue of military authority was held not to be a bill of attainder. (Drehman v. Stifle, 8 Wall., 596; see also Clark v. Dick, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2818.)]

Ex post facto laws.—A statute belongs to this class “which by its necessary operation and ‘in its relation to the offense, or its consequences, alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage.’ * * * Of course a statute is not of that class unless it materially impairs the right of the accused to have the question of his guilt determined according to the law as it was when the offense was committed. And therefore it is well settled that the accused is not of right entitled to be tried in the exact mode, in all respects, that may be prescribed for the trial of criminal cases at the time of the commission of the offense charged against him.” (Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S., 343; see also Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S., 382; Medley, Petitioner, 134 U. S., 171.)

“The legislature may abolish courts and create new ones, and it may prescribe altogether different modes of procedure in its discretion, though it can not lawfully, we think, in so doing dispense with any of those substantial protections with which the existing law surrounds the person accused of crime.” (Cooley on Const. Lim., quoted with approval in Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S., 343; see also Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S., 221.)

No one has a vested right in mere modes of procedure. Statutes regulating procedure, if they leave untouched all the substantial protections with which existing law surrounds the person accused of crime, are not within the constitutional inhibition of ex post facto laws. But a statute which takes from the accused a substantial right given to him by the law in force at the time to which his guilt relates would be ex post facto in its nature and operation, and legislation of that kind can not be sustained simply because, in a general sense, it may be said to regulate procedure. (Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S., 343; see also Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S., 590; State v. Fourchy, 106 La., 749.)

“The difficulty is not so much as to the soundness of the general rule that an accused has no vested right in particular modes of procedure, as in determining whether particular statutes by their operation take from an accused any right that was regarded at the time of the adoption of the Constitution as vital for the protection of life and liberty and which he enjoyed at the time of the offense charged against him.” (Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S., 343.)

Ex post facto laws include: “First, every law that makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. Second, every law that aggravates a crime or makes it greater than it was when committed. Third, every law that changes the punishment and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed. Fourth, every law that alters the legal rules of evidence and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offender.” (Per Chase, J., Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall., 386.)

The above classification by Justice Chase, although obiter dictum, “has often been repeated by judges and text-writers in discussing the subject. Still it may not be presumptuous to say that doubts may be entertained whether his fourth class does not include cases outside of the prohibition; whether every law that alters the legal rules of evidence and receives different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offender, is an ex post facto law.” (Moore v. State, 43 N. J. L., 216.)

A statute is not void as ex post facto because it removes disability of witness, thereby enlarging the classes of persons who are competent to testify in criminal cases. (Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S., 589.)

A statute authorizing the comparison of disputed handwriting with any writing proved to be genuine is not ex post facto, although applicable to crimes committed prior to its enactment and altering the legal rules of evidence in existence at the time of the commission of the offense. (Thompson v. Missouri, 171 U. S., 380. This decision related to a State law. A similar statute was passed by Congress, Feb. 26, 1913, 37 Stat., 683.)

“We are not to be understood as holding that there may not be such a statutory alteration of the fundamental rules in criminal trials as might bring the statute in conflict with the ex post facto clause of the Constitution. If, for instance, the statute had taken from the jury the right to determine the sufficiency or effect of the evidence which it made admissible, a different question would have been presented. We mean now only to adjudge that the statute is to be regarded as one merely regulating procedure and may be applied to crimes committed prior to its passage without impairing the substantial guaranties of life and liberty that are secured to an accused by the supreme law of the land." (Thompson v. Missouri, 171 U. S., 380.)

A statute providing that "in all questions affecting the credibility of a witness his general moral character may be given in evidence," is not ex post facto as applied to trials for offenses committed before its passage. (Robinson v. State, 84 Ind., 453.)

A constitutional provision that a person convicted of certain offenses should not be permitted to hold office is not ex post facto, because it does not take away a legal right nor impose any legal burden, one of which is necessary to the infliction of a penalty; but merely withholds a constitutional provision which is grantable or revocable by the sovereign power of the State at pleasure. (Washington v. State, 75 Ala., 585; but see Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall., 277; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 333.)

Desertion from the military or naval service is a continuing offense, and therefore statutes increasing the penalties upon conviction are not ex post facto as applied to one in desertion at the time such statutes were enacted. (Huber v. Reily, 53 Pa. St., 115; Gotcheus v. Matheson, 58 Barb. (N. Y.), 153, reversed on other grounds, 61 N. Y., 425; see also Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 501; Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S., 42; and see secs. 1996 and 1998, R. S.)

A law which is not penal and does not interfere with the vested rights of individuals is within the constitutional power of Congress and is not objectionable as a retrospective law. (McNamara v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 416.) Retrospective laws which do not impair the obligation of contracts or partake of the character of ex post facto laws are not condemned or forbidden by any part of the Constitution. (Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet., 410.)

The constitutional prohibition applies to penal and criminal proceedings and not to civil proceedings which affect private rights retrospectively. (Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet., 110; In re Sawyer, 124 U. S., 219; Locke v. New Orleans, 4 Wall., 173; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall., 393; De Pass v. Bidwell, 124 Fed. Rep., 623.) Proceedings for recovery of penalties and forfeitures are included, as well as criminal laws and cases. (U. S. v. Hughes, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15416.)

[CLAUSE 4. Capitation and direct taxes.] ⁴ No capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

See Amendments, Art. XVI.

[CLAUSE 5. Export duties.] ⁵ No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

[CLAUSE 6. Freedom of commerce.] ⁶ No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

[CLAUSE 7. Appropriations and accounting of public money.] ⁷ No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

[CLAUSE 8. Titles of nobility and gifts from foreign States.] ⁸ No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

Acceptance of presents from foreign states, etc.—The provision of this clause applies as well to a titular prince as to a reigning one; and a simple remembrance of courtesy, even if merely a photograph, falls under the inclusion of "any present of any kind whatever." (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

"This prohibition expressly relates to official persons, and does not extend, under the circumstances outlined, to a department of the Government or to governmental institutions." (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

If the present is not to be given by any king, prince or foreign state, but by the citizens of Ponta Delgada, Azores, its acceptance by the commanding officer of a naval vessel without the consent of Congress, would not be a violation of this clause of the Constitution. (File 9644-43, Apr. 6, 1918.)

"A minister plenipotentiary from the United States to a foreign power can not, without the consent of Congress, accept a similar commission from a third power; though he is not prohibited from rendering a friendly service to a foreign Government, even that of negotiating a treaty, provided he does not become an officer thereof." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 537.)

"The marshal of the United States for the southern district of Florida can not at the same time hold the office of commercial agent of France." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 409.)

"The * * * clause as to the acceptance of any emoluments, title, or office from foreign governments is founded in a just jealousy of foreign influence of any sort. Whether, in a practical sense, it can produce much effect, has been thought doubtful. A patriot will not be likely to be seduced from his duties to his country by the accepting of any title or present from a foreign government. An intriguing or corrupt agent will not be restrained from guilty machinations in the service of a foreign state by such constitutional restrictions * * *." (File 3707, June 15, 1904, quoting Story on the Constitution, vol. 2, pp. 223, 224.)

"The reasons for the prohibition in question apply as well to enlisted men in the military service as to officers, the difference between the cases of officers and men in this respect being one of degree only; and there may be doubt as to whether such prohibition was not intended to apply to all persons in the service of the Government, and not to those only who are appointed to office in one of the modes mentioned in Article II, section 2, clause 2." (File 3707, June 15, 1904, citing 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 113, holding an enlisted man of the Army to be an "officer" within the meaning of section 750, Revised Statutes, allowing expenses incurred by witnesses for the Government; see also 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 468, 472; compare 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 320.)

"The question whether the provision of the Constitution above quoted includes within its terms any person occupying a position of trust or profit under the United States, such as an enlisted man in the Navy, is not free from doubt. There are decisions which have given the word 'officer' a very broad construction in other connections * * *." (File 9644-27, Jan. 24, 1913; see also file 7515-158, Sept. 27, 1917; file 1098-98, Aug. 9, 1918; but see 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 320.)

It is provided by law that "hereafter any present, decoration, or other thing, which shall be conferred or presented by any foreign government to any officer of the United States, civil, naval, or military, shall be tendered through the Department of State, and not to the individual in person, but such present, decoration, or other thing shall not be delivered by the Department of State unless so authorized by act of Congress." (Act June 31 1881, sec. 3, 21 Stat., 604.) "The within-named medals were tendered through the Department of State, and that department, which, under the act just cited, is charged with determining in what cases congressional authority for the delivery of things presented by foreign governments is necessary, holds that such authority is not required in this instance, on the ground that enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps are not officers of the United States within the constitutional prohibition and the act of 1881 above quoted. The forwarding of the medals to this department for distribution constitutes a delivery thereof so far as the Department of State is concerned." (File 3707, June 15, 1904, holding that the medals may properly be delivered by the Navy Department to the enlisted men for whom they were intended. See also, file 9644-27, Jan. 24, 1913.)

"No decoration or other thing, the acceptance of which is authorized by this act, and no decoration heretofore accepted, or which may hereafter be accepted, by consent of Congress, by any officer of the United States, from any foreign government, shall be publicly shown or exposed upon the person of the officer so receiving the same." (Act Jan. 31, 1881, sec. 2, 21 Stat., 604.)

"The public wearing of medals presented by foreign governments is not authorized by the Navy Regulations." (File 3707, June 15, 1904.)

Members of the "military forces" of the United States serving in the war with Germany were permitted and authorized to accept until one year after the war, decorations from certain foreign governments, and "to accept and wear any medal or decoration heretofore bestowed" by any of said governments, by the Army appropriation act approved July 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 872). This statute applies to the Navy and Marine Corps. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 445; see also id., 452.)

A clerk of class 4 in the Post Office Department is inhibited by this clause of the Constitution from accepting an insignia conferred by the German Emperor, unless the consent of Congress be first obtained. Section 3 of the act of January 31, 1881 (21 Stat., 604), does not authorize the delivery of decorations unless authority therefor be first obtained by act of Congress. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 219.)

Acceptance by officers and enlisted men of employment and compensation from the government of Brazil, the government of Haiti, and the government of the Dominican Republic, respectively, was authorized October 13, 1914 (38 Stat., 780), June 12, 1916 (39 Stat., 223), and February 11, 1918 (40 Stat., 437). See also act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 1056), applicable to all South American Republics.

SECTION 10. [CLAUSE 1. States not to make treaties, coin money, pass ex post facto laws, impair contracts, etc.] ¹ No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

Obligation of contracts.—"The United States can not, any more than a State, interfere with private rights except for legitimate governmental purposes. They are not included within the Constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but equally with the States they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law." (Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S., 700.)

"It is unnecessary to discuss the question whether Congress has unrestricted power to do what the States can not do in the impairing of contract obligations. It is probable it would be held that in some instances and for some purposes it can. Such an instance might be the enactment of a bankrupt law, which necessarily implies the impairment and even the entire discharge of contract obligations. It is not improbable, however, that an act of Congress which should provide for the repudiation of any substantial part of a valid contract would be obnoxious to those other provisions of the Federal Constitution which are intended to protect the citizen and his property against arbitrary seizure and confiscation." (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 194.)

"Congress has express power to enact bankrupt laws, and we do not say that a law made in the execution of any other express power, which incidentally only impairs the obligation of a contract, can be held to be unconstitutional for that reason. But we think it clear that those who framed and those who adopted the Constitution intended that the spirit of this prohibition should pervade the entire body of legislation * * *. In other words, we can not doubt that a law not made in pursuance of an express power, which necessarily and in its direct operation impairs the obligation of contracts, is inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution." (Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall., 623.)

"Nor can it be truly asserted that Congress may not, by its action, indirectly impair the obligation of contracts, if by the expression be meant rendering contracts fruitless or partially fruitless. Directly it may, confessedly by passing a bankrupt act, embracing past as well as future transactions * * *. So it may relieve parties from their apparent obligations indirectly, in a multitude of ways. It may declare war, or even in peace pass nonintercourse acts, or direct an embargo." (Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall., 457.)

[CLAUSE 2. States not to lay imposts or duties, except, etc.] ²No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing it's inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

[CLAUSE 3. States not to lay tonnage duty, make compacts, engage in war, etc.] ³No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. [CLAUSE 1. Executive power vested in President; terms of President and Vice-President.] ¹The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice-President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows:

Courts without power over President.—"The executive power is vested in a President, and as far as his powers are derived from the Constitution he is beyond the reach of any other department, except in the mode prescribed by the Constitution, through the impeaching power." (Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524.)

The courts are not empowered to enjoin the President from executing an act of Congress, even though such act had been vetoed by the President as unconstitutional and had become a law without his approval. "A bill praying an injunction against the execution of an act of Congress by the incumbent of the presidential office can not be received, whether it described him as President or as a citizen of a State. The motion for leave to file the bill is therefore denied." (Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall., 475.)

"A subpoena may issue to the President of the United States to compel his attendance as a witness, and an accused person is entitled to it of course." (U. S. v. Burr, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14692d.)

"A subpoena duces tecum may issue to the President of the United States, directing him to bring any paper of which the party praying it has a right to avail himself as testimony." (U. S. v. Burr, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14692d.)

"While a subpoena may be directed against the President to produce a paper, or for some other purpose, in case of his refusal to obey the subpoena, the courts would be without power to enforce process." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326.)

Subordinate executive officers.—"The President's duty in general requires his superintendence of the administration; yet this duty can not require of him to become the administrative officer of every department and bureau, or to perform in person the numerous details incident to services which, nevertheless, he is, in a correct sense, by the Constitution and laws required and expected to perform. This can not be, because if it were practicable it would be to absorb the duties and responsibilities of the various departments of the Government in the personal action of the one chief executive officer. It can not be, for the strongest reason, that it is impracticable—nay, impossible.” (Williams v. U. S., 1 How., 290; 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 527.)

The heads of the executive departments, familiarly known as Cabinet officers, aid the President “in the performance of the great duties of his office and represent him in a thousand acts to which it can hardly be supposed his personal attention is called.” (In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1.)

The Constitution does not specify the subordinate administrative functionaries by whose agency or counsels the details of public business are to be transacted. It recognizes the existence of such official agents and advisers in saying that the President “may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer of each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices” (Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1); and these officers are again recognized by the Constitution in the clause which vests the appointment of certain inferior officers “in the heads of departments” (Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2), and it leaves the number and organization of those departments to be determined by Congress. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 326; see also note to sec. 158, R. S.)

“The President acts and speaks through the heads of the departments, and the acts of the head of an executive department must be presumed to be by the direction of the President. If the surrounding circumstances show that the act was that of the Secretary alone, the presumption may be otherwise.” (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.) So also, where the act to be done is judicial in character, such as the approval of the sentence of a court-martial, the personal judgment of the President is required, and can not be delegated to the head of a department. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, explained, U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 86; Id. v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 407, 150 U. S., 517; see also note to sec. 158, R. S.)

The order of the Secretary of War is the order of the President, within the terms of a statute providing that certain officers of the Army should not perform any duties beyond the line of their immediate profession “except by the special order of the President.” (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 465.)

“By the Constitution of the United States the President is invested with certain important political powers, in the exercise of which he is to use his own discretion, and is accountable only to his country in his political character, and to his own conscience. To aid him in the performance of these duties he is authorized to appoint certain officers who act by his authority and in conformity with his orders. In such cases their acts are his acts; and whatever opinion may be entertained of the manner in which executive discretion may be used, still there exists and can exist no power to control that discretion. The subjects are political. They respect the Nation, not individual rights, and, being intrusted to the executive, the decision of the executive is conclusive. The application of this remark will be perceived by adverting to the act of Congress for establishing the Department of Foreign Affairs [now Department of State]. This officer, as his duties were prescribed by that act, is to conform precisely to the will of the President. He is the mere organ by whom that will is to be communicated. The acts of such an officer, as an officer, can never be examined by the courts.” (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.)

“It is the general theory of departmental administration that the heads of the executive departments are the executors of the will of the President.” (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 527.)

“There are certain political duties imposed upon many officers in the executive department, the discharge of which is under the direction of the President. But it would be an alarming doctrine that Congress can not impose upon any executive officer any duty they may think proper, which is not repugnant to any rights secured and protected by the Constitution; and in such cases the duty and responsibility grow out of and are subject to the control of law and not the direction of the President. And this is emphatically the case where the duty enjoined is of a mere ministerial character.” (Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524.)

Legal responsibility of executive officers.—“If one of the heads of departments commits any illegal act, under color of office, by which an individual sustains an injury, it can not be pretended that his office alone exempts him from being sued in the ordinary mode of proceeding and being compelled to obey the judgment of the law.” (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.)

“The same general considerations of public policy and convenience which demand for judges of courts of superior jurisdiction immunity from civil suits for damages arising from acts done by them in the course of the performance of their judicial functions apply to a large extent to official communications made by heads of executive departments when engaged in the discharge of duties imposed upon them by law. The interests of the people require that due protection be accorded to them in respect of their official acts. As in the case of a judicial officer, we recognize a distinction between action taken by the head of a department in reference to matters which are manifestly or palpably beyond his authority and action having more or less connection with the general matters committed by law to his control or supervision. * * * Personal motives can not be imputed to duly authorized official conduct. In exercising the functions of his office the head of an executive department keeping within the limits of his authority should not be under an apprehension that the motives that control his official conduct may at any time become the subject of inquiry in a civil suit for damages.” (Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S., 483.)

in relation to which it is his duty to exercise judgment and discretion, even although an individual may suffer by his mistake. A contrary principle would, indeed, be pregnant with the greatest mischiefs." (Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How., 87. See also note to Art. I., sec. 8, clause 13, "Civil responsibility of persons in military service.")

Liability of Government for acts of executive officers.—"No government has ever held itself liable to individuals for the misfeasance, laches, or unauthorized exercise of power by its officers and agents. It does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of the officers whom it employs, since that would involve it in all its operations in endless embarrassments and difficulties and losses which would be subversive of the public interests." (Gibbons v. U. S., 8 Wall., 269. See note to sec. 236, R. S.; see also note to Art. I., sec. 8, clause 13, "Congress may protect officers against civil or criminal responsibility.")

Mandamus against heads of departments.—"It is not by the office of the person to whom the writ is directed, but the nature of the thing to be done, that the propriety or impropriety of issuing a mandamus is to be determined. Where the head of a department acts in a case in which executive discretion is to be exercised, in which he is the mere organ of the executive will, it is again repeated that any application to a court to control in any respect his conduct would be rejected without hesitation. But where he is directed by law to do a certain act affecting the absolute rights of individuals, in the performance of which he is not placed under the particular direction of the President and the performance of which the President can not lawfully forbid, and therefore is never presumed to have forbidden, as, for example, to record a commission or a patent for land which has received all the legal solemnities, or to give a copy of some record; in such cases it is not perceived on what grounds the courts of the country are further excused from giving judgment that right be done to an injured individual than if the same services were to be performed by a person not the head of a department." (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137. See also Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall., 347; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524; U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S., 378; Georgia v. Stanton, 6 Wall., 50; Riverside Oil Co. v. Hitchcock, 190 U. S., 316; Bates, etc., Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S., 106; Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S., 473; U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S., 40; U. S. v. Windom, 137 U. S., 636; Boynton v. Blaine, 139 U. S., 306; Dudley v. James, 83 Fed. Rep., 349; Taylor v. Kercheval, 82 Fed. Rep., 497; Brown v. Root, 18 App. D. C., 239. And see note to sec. 236, R. S., "Mandamus to compel payments" and note to sec. 417, R. S.)

A State court has no power to issue a writ of mandamus to a Federal officer. (See McClung v. Silliman, 6 Wheat., 598; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524; U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S., 378.)

Where a subordinate officer refuses to obey the order of the head of a department, any person aggrieved thereby may obtain a mandamus to enforce obedience by such subordinate. (U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S., 50; see also Knight v. U. S. Land Assn., 142 U. S., 161.)

Subpoena to head of department.—In the absence of specific authority on the subject, I am inclined to think that you are not legally bound to appear and testify in obedience to a subpoena of a court. This question, however, does not actually arise upon the facts which you submit, and is therefore at present hypothetical. Yet it is to be remembered that Attorney General Lincoln saw fit to respond to a subpoena to testify as a witness by appearance in court for that purpose. I would suggest that in this instance, inasmuch as it is purposed to take the testimony by commission, and you are thus not required to appear in court, but before a referee or commissioner, an arrangement might readily be made which would better comport with the dignity of your office, as the head of an executive department of the Government, whereby such testimony as you should deem proper and advisable to give could be taken at the Department of Commerce and Labor." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326. In this connection, see file 26276-173, May 12, 1917, and see note to sec. 871, R. S.)

Appeals to President and heads of departments.—It is competent for Congress to give finality to the determination of subordinate administrative officers, provided due process of law, that is, notice and a hearing, is provided. (Orchard v. Alexander, 157 U. S., 372.) Where Congress does not do this, the head of a department may change the erroneous decision of a subordinate (U. S. v. Cobb, 11 Fed. Rep., 76); and appeals may be taken to the head of the department because of his supervisory powers over the whole business of the department. (Knight v. U. S. Land Assn., 142 U. S., 161.) In such cases the appeal should be to the head of the department and not to the President. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 526.)

As a general rule, no appeal lies to the President from the head of a department, whose acts are presumed to be the acts of the President himself. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 462.) However, in the naval service appeals may be taken to the President from the orders or decisions of the Secretary of the Navy. (Art. 5323, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

"You have often declared that no appeal from the head of any department lies to you. Such appeals are irregular, for reasons which have often been given by this office and which need not now be repeated. An official act done by the Secretary of War is your act, and a demand made upon you to reverse it is no more than a remonstrance addressed to yourself against yourself." (Attorney General to the President, 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 463.)

[CLAUSE 2. Electors of President and Vice-President.] ² Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; A quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two-thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice-President.

This clause has been superseded by the twelfth amendment.

[CLAUSE 3. Time of choosing electors, and voting by.] ³ The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

[CLAUSE 4. Qualifications of President.] ⁴ No person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty-five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

[CLAUSE 5. Succession to duties of Presidency.] ⁵ In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

Succession to duties of President is provided for by act of January 19, 1886 (24 Stat., 1).

[CLAUSE 6. Compensation of President.] ⁶ The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

[CLAUSE 7. Oath of President.] ⁷ Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

SECTION 2. [CLAUSE 1. Commander in Chief; authority over heads of departments; pardoning power.] ¹ The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

I. POWERS OF COMMANDER IN CHIEF.

II. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

III. POWER TO PARDON OFFENSES AGAINST UNITED STATES.

I. POWERS OF COMMANDER IN CHIEF.

Powers of Congress and of the President.—"Congress has the power not only to raise and support and govern armies, but to declare war. It has, therefore, the power to provide by law for carrying on war. This power necessarily extends to all legislation essential to the prosecution of war with vigor and success, except such as interferes with the command of the forces and the conduct of campaigns. That power and duty belong to the President as Commander in Chief. Both these powers are derived from the Constitution, but neither is defined by that instrument. Their extent must be determined by their nature and by the principles of our institutions. The power to make the necessary laws is in Congress; the power to execute in the President. Both powers imply many subordinate and auxiliary powers. Each includes all authority essential to its due exercise. But neither can the President in war more than in peace intrude upon the proper authority of Congress, nor Congress upon the proper authority of the President. Both are servants of the people, whose will is expressed in the fundamental law." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 139; concurring opinion of four justices.)

"Congress may increase the Army, or reduce the Army, or abolish it altogether; but so long as we have a military force, Congress can not take away from the President the supreme command. It is true that the Constitution has conferred upon Congress the exclusive power 'to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces'; but the two powers are distinct; neither can trench upon the other; the President can not, under the disguise of military orders, invade the legislative regulations by which he, in common with the Army, must be governed; and Congress can not, in the disguise of 'rules for the government' of the Army, impair the authority of the President as Commander in Chief." (Swaim v. U. S., 28

Ct. Cls., 173, 221; affirmed, 165 U. S., 553; 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 274.

"No act of Congress, no act even of the President himself, can, by constitutional possibility, authorize or create any military officer not subordinate to the President." (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 465.)

An appropriation under the War Department was made "to be expended according to the plans and estimates of Capt. Meigs and under his superintendence: Provided, That the office of engineer of the Potomac waterworks is hereby abolished, and its duties shall hereafter be discharged by the chief engineer of the Washington Aqueduct." In answer to the contention that this appropriation was mandatory upon the President as to the character of duties to be performed by Capt. Meigs in connection with its expenditure, the Attorney General said: "As Commander in Chief of the Army it is your right to decide, according to your own judgment, what officer shall perform any particular duty, and as the supreme executive magistrate you have power of appointment. Congress could not, if it would, take away from the President or in anywise diminish the authority conferred upon him by the Constitution. This clause of the appropriation bill was not intended to appoint Capt. Meigs chief engineer of the aqueduct, nor was it meant to interfere with your authority over him or any other of your military subordinates. * * * If Congress had really intended to make him independent of you, that purpose could not be accomplished in this indirect manner any more than if it was attempted directly. Congress is vested with legislative power; the authority of the President is executive. Neither has a right to interfere with the functions of the other. Every law is to be carried out so far forth as is consistent with the Constitution and no further. * * * You are therefore entirely justified in treating this condition (if it be a condition) as if the paper on which it is written were blank." (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 462.)

"The first aspect in which this clause [see preceding paragraph] presented itself to my mind was that it interfered with the right of the President to be 'Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.' If this had really been the case there would have been an end to the question. Upon further examination I deemed it impossible that Congress could have intended to interfere with the clear right of the President to command the Army and to order its officers to any duty he might deem most expedient for the public interest. If they could withdraw an officer from the command of the President and select him for the performance of an executive duty, they might upon the same principle annex to an appropriation to carry on a war a condition requiring it not to be used for the defense of the country unless a particular person of its own selection should command the Army. It was impossible that Congress could have had such an intention, and therefore, according to my construction of the clause in question, it merely designated Capt. Meigs as its preference for the work, without intending to deprive the President of the power to order him to any other Army duty for the performance of which he might consider him better adapted.

* * * Under these circumstances I have deemed it but fair to inform Congress that whilst I do not consider the bill unconstitutional, this is only because, in my opinion, Congress did not intend by the language which they have employed to interfere with my absolute authority to order Capt. Meigs to any other service I might deem expedient. My perfect right still remains, notwithstanding the clause, to send him away from Washington to any part of the Union to superintend the erection of a fortification or any other appropriate duty. * * * It is not improbable that another question of grave importance may arise out of this clause. Is the appropriation conditional and will it fall provided I do not deem it proper that it shall be expended under the superintendence of Capt. Meigs? * * * I desire to express no opinion upon the subject. Should the question ever arise, it shall have my serious consideration." (Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 5, p. 597. As to invalidity of the condition in this case, see Attorney General's opinion quoted in preceding paragraph.)

An appropriation was made for the support and maintenance of the Marine Corps, with a condition attached that "no part of the appropriation herein made for the Marine Corps shall be expended for the purposes for which said appropriations are made unless officers and enlisted men shall serve as heretofore on board all battleships and armored cruisers, and also upon such other vessels of the Navy as the President may direct, in detachments of not less than eight per centum of the strength of the enlisted men of the Navy on said vessels." It was held by the Attorney General [without citing authorities] that the condition attached to this appropriation was valid and constitutional, and that if the President as Commander in Chief desired to employ the Marine Corps he must comply with the condition expressed. "Inasmuch as Congress has power to create or not to create, as it shall deem expedient, a marine corps, it has power to create a marine corps, make appropriation for its pay, but provide that such appropriation shall not be available unless the Marine Corps be employed in some designated way." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 259.)

fying its duties or where they should be performed, it was intended that the office should be clothed with the functions and duties which by established custom had been performed by such an officer in a military service. The duties of an adjutant are such as require that they be performed at headquarters of his organization. Accordingly, a regulation approved by the President, purporting to authorize or permit the detail of the adjutant and inspector of the Marine Corps to duty away from headquarters, and placing the office at headquarters in charge of a subordinate officer of the adjutant and inspector's department, is contrary to law and of no effect. The President may have the right to detail this officer temporarily away from headquarters, but this can not be established as a permanent system. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.) [In this case it had previously been held by the Navy Department that the law did not specify that the adjutant and inspector of the Marine Corps should be permanently stationed at headquarters; and, following the Meigs case and others above cited, that Congress was not empowered to limit the authority of the President in this respect; and accordingly that the matter was properly a subject for regulation by the President. File 26836-7:35, Feb. 13, 1913.]

"It is * * * no degradation of the position of the President to say, through the forms of judicial construction in passing on his executive acts with reference to the retired list, that his power is regulated alone by acts of Congress * * *. The retired list is of comparatively recent origin; and for years the Army endured through peace and survived in war, efficient in the hands of the President for the maintenance of the national honor, and the due enforcement of the law, without the existence of the retired list, so the regulation of that department of the service can in no wise interfere with the constitutional right and power of the President as Commander in Chief of the military forces of the United States. While the President is made Commander in Chief by the Constitution, Congress have the right to legislate for the Army, not impairing his efficiency as such commander in chief, and when a law is passed for the regulation of the Army, having that constitutional qualification, he becomes as to that law an executive officer, and is limited in the discharge of his duty by the statute." (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 540, 541.)

"The power of the Executive to establish rules and regulations for the government of the Army, is undoubted." (U. S. v. Eliason, 16 Pet., 291.)

Army regulations have the force of law "when founded on the President's constitutional powers as Commander in Chief of the Army." (In re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 459.)

For other cases, see Article I, section 8, clause 14; see also note to sections 161 and 1547, Revised Statutes.

Power of President over subordinates.— "A military officer can not be invested with greater authority by Congress than the Commander in Chief, and a power of command devolved by statute on an officer of the Army or Navy is necessarily shared by the President. The power to command depends upon discipline and discipline depends upon the power to punish; and the power to punish can only be exercised in time of peace through the medium of a military tribunal. If the President has no authority in matters pertaining to military tribunals unless it be 'expressly' granted by Congress, then Congress by the simple expedient of exclusively granting the authority to appoint courts-martial and approve sentences to a few officers of the Army, tacitly ignoring the President, could practically defeat the express declaration of the Constitution and strip the office of commander in chief of all real powers of command. The court can not ascribe any such purpose to the legislation of Congress." (Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173, 221; affirmed 165 U. S., 553; followed 28 Op. Att. Gen., 487.)

"As Commander in Chief the President is authorized to give orders to his subordinates, and the convening of a court-martial is simply the giving of an order to certain officers to assemble as a court, and when so assembled, to exercise certain powers conferred upon them by the Articles of War." (Runkle's case, 91 Ct. Cls., 396, 409, approved in Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 556, holding that "it is within the power of the President as Commander in Chief to convene a general court-martial," in the Army. In the Navy the President is expressly authorized by statute to convene general courts-martial. Sec. 1624 R. S., art. 38.)

"It is said that courts-martial are the creatures of statute law, but so also are regiments. There can be no standing army without statutory authority. Congress may place the command of a regiment in a colonel, a lieutenant colonel, a major, or any other officer; but when Congress so enact, they without words to that effect likewise place the command in the Commander in Chief. His name is to be understood as written in every statute which confers upon a military officer military authority." (Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173, 224; affirmed 165 U. S., 553.)

An order of the Secretary of War to an officer of the Army is the order of the President and should be obeyed as such. An appeal from such order to the President is no more than a remonstrance addressed to the President against himself. (9 Op. Att. Gen., 463, 465. For other decisions, see note to Art. II, sec. 1, clause 1; see also note to sec. 158, R. S.)

Militia.—The President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy at all times, and Commander in Chief of the militia only when called into the actual service of the United States. (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 115; 10 Op. Att. Gen., 17.)

II. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The "principal officer in each of the executive departments," referred to in this clause means the same as "heads of departments" in the next clause of this section relating to appointments to office. (U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S., 511.) See note to section 158, Revised Statutes, as to origin and growth of Executive Departments, and see note to Art. II, sec. 1, clause 1.

The President is authorized by this section to require the opinion of the Attorney General in any matter relating to the duties of his department, and his authority in this respect is not restricted by section 354, Revised Statutes, to obtaining the Attorney General's opinion only upon questions of law. (23 Op. Att. Gen., 360.)

The President has also required the opinion in writing of officers subordinate to the head of a department. (See veto message of President Roosevelt, Apr. 7, 1908, 42d Cong. Rec., pt. 5, p. 4503, 60th Cong., 1st sess., noted under Art. I, sec. 7, clause 2, with which there was transmitted a written opinion furnished by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, by direction of the President.)

III. POWER TO PARDON OFFENSES AGAINST UNITED STATES.

"A pardon is an act of grace by which an offender is released from the consequences of his offense, so far as such release is practicable and within control of the pardoning power, or of officers under its direction. It releases the offender from all disabilities imposed by the offense, and restores to him all his civil rights. In contemplation of law, it so far blots out the offense that afterwards it can not be imputed to him to prevent the assertion of his legal rights. It gives to him a new credit and capacity, and rehabilitates him to that extent in his former position. But it does not make amends for the past. It affords no relief for what has been suffered by the offender in his person by imprisonment, forced labor, or otherwise; it does not give compensation for what has been done or suffered, nor does it impose upon the Government any obligation to give it. The offense being established by judicial proceedings, that which has been done or suffered while they were in force is presumed to have been rightfully done or justly suffered, and no satisfaction for it can be required." (Knote v. U. S., 95 U. S., 149; Illinois Cen. R. Co. v. Bosworth, 133 U. S., 104.)

Pardoning power.—"A power to pardon seems, indeed, indispensable under the most correct administration of the law by human tribunals. Since, otherwise, men would sometimes fall a prey to the vindictiveness of accusers, the inaccuracy of testimony, and the fallibility of jurors and courts." (1 Kent, Com., Lec. XIII, p. 284.)

"Under the Constitution the power of the President to grant reprieves and pardons is plenary, absolute, and without limit or control as to the offense, the beneficiary, the time, or the nature or extent of his pardon." (27 Op. Att. Gen., 178.)

"The power of pardon in criminal cases has been exercised from time immemorial by the executive of that nation whose language is our language, and to whose judicial institutions ours bear a close resemblance. We adopt their principles respecting the operation and effect of a pardon, and look into their books for the rules prescribing the manner in which it is to be used by the person who would avail himself of it." (U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet., 160, per Marshall, C. J.; see also, Ex parte Wells, 18 How., 307; Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

This clause confers upon the President the power to pardon every offense known to the law, with the single exception stated (Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 333; Ex parte Wells, 18 How., 309); that exception, according to a well-known legal maxim [expressio unius est exclusio alterius],—the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another], strengthens the application of the provision to all offenses not excepted, “so that we can certainly say there can be no offense against the United States, except in cases of impeachment, over which the President has not an absolute pardoning power.” (U. S. v. Thomasson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16479.)

Contempt of court.—Contempts of the Federal courts are offenses against the United States, and therefore within the pardoning power of the President. “If we adopt, as the Supreme Court of the United States has decided we should, the principles established by the common law respecting the operation of a pardon, there can be no doubt it may embrace such a case.” (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 622; 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 458; In re Mullee, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9911.) So far as concerns the President’s power to pardon such contempts, “there need be no hesitation to act in the premises. Indeed, I know beyond question that the power exists.” (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 476.)

The power of the President to pardon for contempt of court is seriously doubted in any case, and upon principle and authority can not be held to exist in cases of civil contempt, where the proceeding is instituted to enforce the rights of private parties to suits, and to compel obedience to orders and decrees made to enforce the rights and administer the remedies to which the court has found them entitled. (In re Nevitt, 117 Fed. Rep., 448; see also Hendryx v. Fitzpatrick, 19 Fed. Rep., 811.)

[The Supreme Court has never passed definitely on the existence of the pardoning power in cases of contempt of court. In the case of The Laura, 114 U. S., 411, 413, it was stated: “It may be conceded that, except in cases of impeachment and where fines are imposed by a coordinate department of the Government, for contempt of its authority, the President, under the general, unqualified grant of power to pardon offenses against the United States, may remit fines, penalties, and forfeitures of every description arising under the laws of the United States.” In Ex parte Fisk, 113 U. S., 713, 718, after holding that under the laws then in force, “the exercise of the power of punishment for contempt of their orders by courts of general jurisdiction is not subject to review by writ of error or appeal to this court,” it was remarked: “Nor is there, in the system of Federal jurisprudence, any relief against such orders when the court has authority to make them, except through the court making the order, or possibly by the exercise of the pardoning power.”]

General courts-martial in the Navy are authorized to punish naval witnesses for contempt by article 42 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.); civilian witnesses guilty of contempt are punishable by information in the district court of the United States, which information it is the duty of the district attorney to file upon certification of the facts to him by the naval court. (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 12, 35 Stat., 622.)

When pardon may be granted.—The President “can pardon or relieve only when an offense against the law has been established by proof or the admissions of the party, and a penalty thereby incurred.” (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 485; see also Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79, in which this question was discussed but not decided.)

The power to pardon any offense “may be exercised at any time after its commission, either before legal proceedings are taken, or during their pendency, or after conviction and judgment.” (Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 333; see also 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 20; 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 687; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 275; 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 341; compare Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

The Navy Department has adopted the rule formulated by the Department of Justice and approved by the President, of declining to recommend the issuance of a pardon in any case prior to conviction. (File 26282-84; Mar. 27, 1912; see also file 26262-1344:5; but see file 26282-85, Apr. 8, 1912.)

In cases of enlisted men convicted of desertion from the naval service, the rule was adopted by the Navy Department of recommending that a pardon be issued, for the purpose of restoring rights of citizenship forfeited under sections 1996 and 1998, Revised Statutes, where the applicant had served sentence for the offense, and then only after two years from date of discharge from prison and provided the applicant produces satisfactory affidavits to the effect that he has lived an upright and industrious life since the date of his discharge. (File 26282-84; loss of the rights of citizenship do not now follow upon conviction of desertion except in time of war. Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 356.)

Where a naval prisoner has served sentence for an offense other than desertion, the Navy Department will not recommend that he be pardoned, as loss of the rights of citizenship does not attach in his case. (File 26282-214, Mar. 18, 1915. See also, 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 359; 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 360. As to conclusiveness of finding of court-martial, see note to Art. I, sec. 7, clause 2, “Veto of bill to annul the finding and sentence of a court-martial.”)

The President may exercise his pardoning power at any time, so long as any of the legal consequences of the offense remain. (Stetler’s case, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13380.) Thus, loss of numbers being a continuing punishment, the President may, by pardon, restore the officer to his original position. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 547; 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 656; see also 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 243. And see 17 Op. Atty. Gen. 31, file 26261-246:1, Mar. 18, 1914, and 26262-1794:1.) But the promotion of an officer completely executes a sentence of loss of numbers and a pardon issued thereafter can not restore him to his original position. (File 26261-246:1, Mar. 18, 1914; 26262-1794:1, Dec. 21, 1916. But see contra file 1208, Mar. 31, 1905, case of Maj. James E. Mahoney. See also 4 Op. Atty. Gen.,

8, and 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 419, as to effect of promotion upon sentence of suspension from rank and pay.)

"I have already, in the exercise of the pardoning power with which the President is vested by the Constitution, remitted the continuing penalty which had made it impossible for Fitz John Porter to hold any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States." (Veto message of President Arthur, July 2, 1884, noted under Art. I, sec. 7, clause 2.)

When the sentence of a court has been served, a pardon may be granted to remove the disability of the offender to testify as a witness which followed upon conviction of felony. (U. S. v. Jones, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15493; Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S., 453.)

After death of a deserter a pardon can not be issued at request of his representatives. (File 3846-98, June 10, 1898.)

"This power of the President is not subject to legislative control. Congress can neither limit the effect of his pardon, nor exclude from its exercise any class of offenders. The benign prerogative of mercy reposed in him can not be fettered by any legislative restrictions." (Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 333. See also, U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall., 147; 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 582; 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 281; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 668; 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 39; 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 360. But see act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 356, which provided that "the loss of rights of citizenship heretofore imposed by law upon deserters from the military or naval service may be mitigated or remitted by the President where the offense was committed in time of peace and where the exercise of such clemency will not be prejudicial to the public interests.")

The power of the President "can not be interrupted, abridged, or limited by any legislative enactment." (The Laura, 114 U. S., 411.)

"It is not within the power of Congress to impose or continue in force a penalty or punishment for an offense, or conviction thereof, that has been thus pardoned, nor impose or continue in force disabilities that have been thus removed." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.)

Power of Congress.—"Although the Constitution vests in the President power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, this power has never been held to take from Congress the power to pass acts of general amnesty." (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., 591.)

Power of other officers.—"Is that power [pardoning power of President] exclusive, in the sense that no other officer can remit forfeitures or penalties incurred for the violation of the laws of the United States? This question can not be answered in the affirmative without adjudging that the practice in reference to remissions by the Secretary of the Treasury and other officers, which has been observed and acquiesced in for nearly a century, is forbidden by the Constitution. That practice commenced very shortly after the adoption of the instrument, and was perhaps suggested by legislation in England, which, without interfering with, abridging, or restricting the power of pardon belonging to the Crown, invested certain subordinate officers with authority to remit penalties and forfeitures arising from violations of the revenue and customs laws of that country." (The Laura, 114 U. S., 411; see also 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 488.)

The powers of the President are not as broad as the powers of an English king. By the Constitution "the power to grant reprieves and pardons is given, in terms, to the President; but the power to remit forfeitures, fines, and penalties (as distinct from the pardon of crimes) is not given. Yet the king had both powers." (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 454. But see The Laura, 114 U. S., 411, in which it was stated: "It may be conceded that, except in cases of impeachment and where fines are imposed by a coordinate department of the Government for contempt of its authority, the President, under the general unqualified grant of power to pardon offenses against the United States, may remit fines, penalties, and forfeitures of every description arising under the laws of Congress.")

Article 112 of the Articles of War (sec. 1342, R. S.) provided, with reference to the Army, that "Every officer who is authorized to order a general court-martial shall have power to pardon or mitigate any punishment adjudged by it, except the punishment of death or of dismissal of an officer. Every officer commanding a regiment or garrison in which a regimental or garrison court-martial may be held, shall have power to pardon or mitigate any punishment which such court may adjudge." (This article of war has been superseded by act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 658, amending sec. 1342, R. S., arts 50-53, which latter act was amended by act of July 9, 1918, 40 Stat., 882, 883. See 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 327; 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 444; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 124, 125; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 106; 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 656; see also People v. Bowen, 43 Cal., 441.)

By article 54 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.) it is provided that "Every officer who is authorized to convene a general court-martial shall have power, on revision of its proceedings, to remit or mitigate, but not to commute, the sentence of any such court which he is authorized to approve and confirm." (See 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 243; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 175; 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 31; 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 64; 17 Comp. Dec., 311; 13 Comp. Dec., 726; see also art. 33, A. G. N., as to sentences of summary courts-martial.)

It may be questioned whether section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 54, applies to the action of the President. (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

"It may be conceded that there is a technical difference between the commutation of a sentence and the mitigation thereof. The first is a change of a punishment to which a person has been condemned into one less severe, substituting a less for a greater punishment by authority of law. To mitigate a sentence is to reduce or lessen the amount of the penalty or punishment." (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

By act of February 16, 1909 (sec. 9, 35 Stat. 621), it is provided "That the Secretary of the Navy may set aside the proceedings or remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial convened by his order or by that of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps."

The Adjutant General of the Army has power, "by direction of the President of the United States," to sign a letter removing the disabilities resulting from the conviction of an officer, which letter will operate as a pardon by the President. (27 Op. Atty. Gen. 178; see below "Form of pardon.")

Constructive pardon.—The promotion of an officer of the Marine Corps is a constructive pardon of a previous sentence pronounced but not executed. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 123.) Similarly, as to the promotion of an officer under arrest on charges. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 124; 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 237.) The promotion of a passed midshipman to the office of lieutenant in the Navy, is an implicit pardon of sentence of suspension on half pay which he was under. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 8.) So also as to the appointment of a convicted deserter as a commissioned officer in the Navy. (File 5460-82, June 3, 1916.) But where steps have been taken with a view to the promotion of an officer, before the promotion is consummated he may be tried by court-martial for offenses previously committed. (G. C. M. records, Nos. 23553, 26451, 28681, and 28798.) And where an officer was nominated and confirmed for advancement in rank, after he has been recommended for trial by court-martial, but the commission was not signed by the President, the necessary steps for his trial were proceeded with until stayed by the acceptance of said officer's resignation "for the good of the service." (File 26251-2833, Mar. 31, 1910.)

An order of the Secretary of the Navy to an officer, while under sentence of suspension, to attend a court-martial as a witness does not operate as a constructive pardon. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 714.) Nor does the restoration of an accused person to duty without trial. Inasmuch as the Secretary of the Navy has no power to expressly pardon any offense—this being a power vested by the Constitution in the President, which can not be delegated—it follows that no action of the Secretary could amount to a constructive pardon. (File 26251-1963:1, Aug. 17, 1910, p. 13.)

A pardon by implication or construction is a thing not known to or recognized by the law. Accordingly, held that the temporary promotion of an officer of the Navy while under charges awaiting trial by general court-martial does not operate as a constructive pardon of the offenses charged against him. As to effect of permanent promotion upon execution of a sentence imposed in a lower grade, quære. (31 Op. Atty. Gen. 419, overruling opinions of Attorneys General above cited relating to constructive pardons.)

Conditional pardon.—The power of the President to grant conditional pardons is unquestioned, and is commonly exercised in practice. (See 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 482; 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 229; Waring v. U. S., 7 Ct. Cls., 502; In re Ruhl, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12124; U. S. v. Ground, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16299; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall., 142; U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet., 161; Semmes v. U. S., 91 U. S., 21; see also 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 368; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 124.)

Thus, a pardon has been granted to an enlisted man in the Marine Corps on condition that he reenlist. (Case of John L. Lennon, file 5945-19; see also file 3000-1898.) So also, an officer of the Navy, sentenced to loss of numbers, has been pardoned on condition that he take rank in a specified place in his grade, below his original position. (File 26282-26.)

"When a person convicted of murder accepts a 'commutation of sentence or pardon' upon condition that he be imprisoned at hard labor for the term of his natural life, there can be no question as to the binding force of the acceptance." (In re Ross, 140 U. S., 453.)

Partial pardon.—The President may by pardon remit disabilities resulting from conviction, without pardoning the offense. Thus he may issue pardons to deserters for the purpose of restoring their rights of citizenship (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 124), and such pardons have been frequently granted in practice (file 26282; Report of Judge Advocate General to President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, Nov. 28, 1910, file 28067; see also 3 Op. Atty. Gen., 418; 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 227; U. S. v. Lukins, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15638), and he may mitigate a sentence of dismissal in the case of an officer of the Navy to suspension for a term of years without pay. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 433; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 464; Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

General pardon and amnesty.—The President has power to grant general amnesty by proclamation, without legislative authority. (Armstrong v. U. S., 13 Wall., 154; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 330.) "Amnesty" is usually exercised in favor of classes of persons prior to conviction. (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., 601.)

A general pardon and amnesty, made by a public proclamation of the President, has the force of public law, and courts and officers must take notice of it, whether especially called to their attention or not. (Jenkins v. Collard, 145 U. S., 560.) In this respect, a general pardon is to be distinguished from an individual pardon, which is the private, though official, act of the Chief Executive, and will not be judicially noticed by the court, but must be specially pleaded. (U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet., 159; Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

Amnesty and pardon "are of different character and have different purposes. The one overlooks offense; the other remits punishment. The first is usually addressed to crimes against the sovereignty of the State, to political offenses, forgiveness being deemed more expedient for the public welfare than prosecution and punishment. The second condones infractions of the peace of the State. Amnesty is usually general, addressed to classes, or even communities—a legislative act or under legislation, constitutional or statutory—the act of the supreme magistrate. There may or may not be distinct acts of acceptance. If other rights are dependent upon it and are asserted, there is affirmative evidence of acceptance. * * * If there be no other rights, its only purpose is to stay the movement of the law. Its function is exercised when it overlooks the offense and the offender, leaving both in oblivion." (Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

Delivery and acceptance.—The pardon is a deed, to the validity of which delivery is essential, and the delivery is not complete without acceptance. It may be rejected by the person to whom it is tendered, and, if rejected, there is no power in the court to force it upon the individual. (U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet., 150; Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

A pardon must be accepted before a witness may be required to answer incriminating questions connecting him with matters for which the pardon grants him immunity. The witness has the right, if he desires to do so, to refuse the pardon and decline to testify. (Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

Procedure upon requests for pardon.—Pursuant to an understanding between the Department of Justice and the Departments of War and Navy, and by rules relating to applications for pardon adopted by the Attorney General and approved by the President, the Department of Justice will not consider applications for pardon for desertion or other offenses against the military and naval laws. When applications are received by the Department of Justice, they are referred to the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War for consideration. The Department of Justice does, however, issue the formal warrants of pardon in Army and Navy cases. (Letter of Department of Justice, Sept. 6, 1904, file 7466-04.)

In practice in Navy cases, where the Secretary of the Navy approves an application for pardon and transmits it to the President with favorable recommendation, if a pardon is to be granted, the Secretary's letter is returned with the President's approval indorsed thereon; the papers are then transmitted to the Department of Justice, where the formal warrant of pardon is prepared for the President's signature; when signed by the President, the warrant of pardon is sent by the Department of Justice to the Secretary of the Navy, to be transmitted to the beneficiary, together with a blank form of receipt and acceptance to be signed by the recipient of the pardon and returned by him to the Navy Department for file. (File 26282; Rept. of Judge Advocate General to President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, Nov. 28, 1910, file 28067.)

Form of pardon.—"Nor is the form which this pardon may assume at all important, or the manner of its promulgation. Whenever the President, as an act of grace or clemency, intervenes to condone, in whole or in part, an offense committed, or to prevent or remit the whole or a portion of a punishment ordered, or to commute the whole or a portion thereof by the substitution of another less severe, or to remove disabilities consequent upon conviction, and in whatever form this is done, whether by a formal pardon directed and delivered to the beneficiary, by Executive order through The Adjutant General, or by a proclamation of amnesty to a class of offenders, this is always and necessarily an exercise of the pardoning power vested in the President by the Constitution. In no other way can the President interfere to condone an offense, prevent or mitigate a punishment adjudged, or remove disabilities consequent upon conviction." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 178; but see above, "Delivery and acceptance.")

The following communication, addressed by The Adjutant General of the Army to the governor of Kansas, was held to constitute a pardon by the President: "By direction of the President of the United States, the disabilities resulting from the dismissal of Albert H. Campbell, formerly a captain in the Fourteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, by sentence of general court-martial promulgated in General Orders, No. 54, May 30, 1865, Department of Arkansas, are hereby removed, and he may be recommended should your excellency so desire." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.)

"That such pardon to be effective need not be addressed to the beneficiary is abundantly shown by the various proclamations of pardon and amnesty granted by different Presidents to large classes of offenders, and which have been uniformly upheld as effective by the Supreme Court. (See 1 Winthrop Mil. Law, 2d ed., 714-715.) In such cases all persons embraced in the proclamation are entitled to its benefits, although they may never before have heard of the amnesty. Indeed, the usual way of pardoning military offenders is by Executive order promulgated and entered in the records of the War Department. (1 Winthrop, 714.)" (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.)

The Constitution of the United States confers upon the President "power to grant pardons for offenses against the United States," thus assimilating a pardon to an express grant by deed, and the general constitutional provision is of this character. This was but an adoption of the English rule that a pardon was a grant under the great seal. Even an instrument granting a pardon under the sign manual of the King was not sufficient. All the courts in this country, construing the constitutional provision, hold that a pardon is an express act of the executive or legislature evidenced by something in the nature of a formal grant. Assent of the grantee is needed to make it complete, a meeting of the minds of the parties concerned being essential. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 419.)

Effect of pardon.—"A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender; and when the pardon is full it releases the punishment and blots out the existence of the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. * * * There is only one limitation to its operation; it does not restore offices forfeited or property or interests vested in others in consequence of the conviction of judgment." (Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall., 333. But see In re Spenser, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13234, noted below; 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 228; the latter holding that the acceptance of a pardon is a confession of legal guilt. See also Roberts v. State, 160 N. Y., 217.)

Where error has been committed, it is more benign to grant a new trial to an officer who has been convicted by court-martial than to grant him a pardon, which would be "most humiliating to the prisoner." "Is there any mode by which his honor can be rescued from the imputation thrown upon it by an improper sentence of a first court, except that of ordering a second?" (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 233; see note to amendments, Art. V.)

A pardon may involve "consequences of even greater disgrace than those from which it purports to relieve. Circumstances may be made to bring innocence under the penalties of the law. If so brought, escape by confession of guilt implied in the acceptance of a pardon may be rejected—preferring to be the victim of the law rather than its acknowledged transgressor; preferring death, even, to such certain ignominy. * * * The latter [pardon] carries an imputation of guilt; acceptance a confession of it." (Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

"Moneys once in the Treasury can only be withdrawn by an appropriation by law. However large, therefore, may be the power of pardon possessed by the President, and however extended may be its application, there is this limit to it, as there is to all his powers—it can not touch moneys in the Treasury of the United States, except expressly authorized by act of Congress. The Constitution places this restriction upon the pardoning power. Where, however, property condemned, or its proceeds, have not thus vested, but remain under control of the Executive, or of officers subject to his orders, or are in the custody of the judicial tribunals, the property will be restored or its proceeds delivered to the original owner upon his full pardon." (Knote v. U. S., 95 U. S., 149.)

"The test, then, is whether the proceeds of a fine, penalty, or forfeiture has passed into the Treasury of the United States. If not, the pardoning power of the President may act upon it * * *." (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 360, 363; see also 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 599; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 1; 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 281; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 329; 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 452; Vanderslice v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 481.)

"The effect of the pardon is prospective and not retrospective. It removes the guilt and restores the party to a state of innocence. But it does not change the past and can not annihilate the established fact that he was guilty of the offense." (In re Spenser, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13234.)

The President's pardon does not alter the fact that the service of an enlisted man convicted of desertion was not "honest and faithful" within the meaning of statutes relating to the Army. Congress has the right to prescribe qualifications and conditions for enlisted men and to forbid those not possessing such qualifications to enter the military service. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 39.)

"A pardon can not change existing or accomplished facts, although it may remove or prevent their consequences; and in this case the pardon can not change the fact that this officer has never been honorably discharged from the Army." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.) "The act is plain and unequivocal; it provides for a pension to those only who have been 'honorably discharged' from the Army or Navy. This officer has not been so discharged, and is therefore not within the terms of the grant." (Same case.)

The pardon of a convicted deserter from the Navy blots out his offense and he may legally be reenlisted, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1420 and 1624 (art. 19), Revised Statutes, prohibiting the enlistment of deserters in the naval service. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 617, overruled by 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225, noted below; see also 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 39, above noted.)

Section 1441, Revised Statutes, and the acts of February 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 283, 290), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 589), are rules relating to qualifications for office in the Navy, and for membership in the Naval Reserve Force, which do not impose a penalty as such on individual offenders, and the incidental disabilities which they may suffer by reason of these statutes are not removed by a pardon. Similarly, sections 1420 and 1624, article 19, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 356), are statutes relating to the general organization and efficiency of the Navy, which affect only incidentally particular classes of individuals, and are obviously not intended as punishment for offenses; they place deserters in the same category with minors, insane persons, and intoxicated persons as not qualified for the naval service; and a pardon does not remove the disqualification attached to the fact of desertion and render the deserter eligible for reenlistment in the naval service. On the other hand, section 1998, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 356), prescribes disabilities, not merely incidental to qualifications for service in the Navy, but in effect and by express avowal constituting punishment of offenses, which as such would of course be wiped out by an unconditional pardon. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225, overruling 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 617, noted above.)

By sections 4756, 4757, Revised Statutes, benefits are conferred on persons formerly in the naval service who have "not been discharged for misconduct." The recipient of a pardon is entitled to the benefits of these sections in the same manner and with the same force as if he had never been discharged for misconduct. (File 5789-99, Sept. 2, 1899.)

A pardon for desertion operates from its date to relieve from all further penalties and forfeitures consequent upon desertion, but a man is not entitled to arrears of pension or to relief covering the period during which he was not in a pensionable status; that is, prior to date of pardon. (File 2443-03.)

Congress has a constitutional right to prohibit the officers of the Government from paying persons who encouraged rebellion, and they can not consider such claims, although the claimants may have received an Executive pardon. (Hart v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 484; affirmed 118 U. S., 62; compare U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall., 147.)

A pardon can not restore an officer to the service after a sentence of dismissal has been executed (Vanderslice v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 481; 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 19); but it may restore an officer to his original position in his grade after a sentence of loss of numbers (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 547); and prior to execution of a sentence of dismissal the President may mitigate it to suspension from rank and pay. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 433.)

Where a convicted offender has been given an unconditional pardon, the President can not afterwards issue him a supplemental pardon for the specific purpose of relieving him of disabilities resulting from State laws. If such disabilities were not removed by the pardon already issued, they are a matter under the control of the State and not of the Federal pardoning power. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 760.) "As to the matter of incidental disabilities of conviction for crime, it has seemed to me that a pardon by the proper pardoning power of one jurisdiction does not affect disabilities imposed by another jurisdiction." (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 284.)

A pardon obtained by fraud is void and of no effect. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 227.)

A pardon issued to a deserter from the Navy does not authorize the Navy Department to remove the mark of desertion entered on its records, the entry being one of fact, which is not altered by the pardon. (File 26251-1963:1, Aug. 17, 1910; compare file 1768-D, 1902, case of Ezekiel Downey.)

A person convicted of an offense against the laws of the United States, which disfranchises him as a citizen, can be restored to his rights by a pardon issued before or after he has suffered the other penalties incident to his conviction. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 478; see also 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 124; compare 7 Op. Atty. Gen., 760.)

"There are two general classes of punishments for military offenses. First, those which directly affect the person or property of the offender, such as death, imprisonment, or dismissal; fines; the return or restoration of property or money wrongfully held, and the like. These are prescribed by law or established usage, and are imposed in the sentence itself. Second, certain disabilities, such as the deprivation of certain civil and political rights which persons otherwise similarly situated may have and enjoy—such as the rights of citizenship, the right to vote or to hold office, to be employed in the Government or to enlist or be appointed in the Army, and the like. These are prescribed by law or established usage, but are not imposed by the sentence and are rather consequences of the conviction. It is with these that we have to do here. From these considerations it is obvious that this communication * * * was necessarily an exercise of the pardoning power and as such was effective to the extent there expressed, namely, in the removal of all disabilities consequent upon the conviction of the officer." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.)

[CLAUSE 2. Treaty making power; appointment of officers.] ² He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

I. OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

III. POWER OF CONGRESS.

IV. STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS AND QUALIFICATIONS.

V. POWER OF SENATE.

VI. WHAT CONSTITUTES APPOINTMENT.

VII. PAY AND OATH OF OFFICERS.

VIII. POWER OF REMOVAL.

IX. RIGHT OF OFFICERS TO RESIGN.

I. OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Who are officers of the United States.—

"What is necessary to constitute a person an officer of the United States in any of the various branches of its service has been fully considered by this court in United States v. Germaine (99 U. S., 508). In that case it was distinctly pointed out that under the Constitution of the United States all its officers were appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, or by a court of law, or the head of a department; and the heads of departments were defined in that opinion to be what are now called the members of the Cabinet. Unless a person in the service of the Government, therefore, holds his place by virtue of an appointment by the President, or of one of the courts of justice or heads of departments authorized by law to make such an appointment, he is not, strictly speaking, an officer of the United States." (U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303; 4 Comp. Dec., 696.)

"This provision of the Constitution divides inferior officers into two classes, according to the source from which the power of appointment is derived"; namely, officers appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in accordance with the duty directly imposed on the President by the Constitution itself; and officers otherwise appointed in accordance with the direction of Congress. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177.)

"It would be impossible to define, except arbitrarily, the meaning of the words 'inferior officers,' in their application to officers of the different branches of the public service who have no official relation to each other, and it would not be easy to separate all the officers of the Government into two classes and draw a satisfactory line which would define the inferior, in the sense in which it is claimed that word is used, from those of the higher class, nor is it necessary to attempt to do either. In our opinion, the words as used in connection with the other language of the same clause, have a plain, definite, and intelligible meaning, capable of unmistakable application to effect the purposes of that provision of the Constitution. Having specified certain officers, ministers, consuls, and judges of the Supreme Court who shall be nominated by the President and appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate in all cases, the Constitution leaves it to Congress to vest in the President alone, the courts of law, or the heads of departments the appointment of any officer inferior or subordinate to them, respectively, whenever Congress thinks proper so to do." (Collins v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 568.)

"The word inferior is not here used in that vague, indefinite, and quite inaccurate sense which has been suggested—the sense of petty or unimportant; but it means subordinate or inferior to those officers in whom respectively the power of appointment may be vested—the President, the courts of law, and the heads of departments." (Collins v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 568; see also 23 Op. Att. Gen., 574, 578, 579.)

"Whenever, therefore, Congress thinks proper to vest in the President alone, in a court of law, or in the head of a department the appointment of any of their respective subordinate officers, other than those named in the clause under consideration, or whose appointment is otherwise provided for by the Constitution, it must be held that such officers are inferior officers within the meaning of the Constitution, whose appointment in that manner Congress has the power to authorize; and the act of Congress must be respected and enforced by the executive officers of the Government." (Collins v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 568; see also U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S., 508.)

"An office is a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of Government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties." (U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall., 385, holding that a clerk in the office of an Assistant Treasurer of the United States is a public officer within the meaning of a penal statute. For other cases, see note to act July 31, 1894, sec. 2. 28 Stat., 205.)

The clerks employed in the offices of the several departments of the Government are not liable to militia duty, being executive officers of the Government of the United States, under the terms of the statute exempting from such duty the Vice President, the officers, judicial and executive, of the Government of the United States, the members of both houses of Congress and their respective officers, all custom-house officers, with their clerks, all post officers and stage drivers employed in the care and conveyance of the mail, etc. (Ex parte Smith, 2 Cranch, C. C., 693, 22 Fed.

Cas. No. 12967, cited with approval in U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall., 385, 393.)

A person may be an officer within the meaning of statutory enactments, although not an officer of the United States in the constitutional sense. Thus, clerks to paymasters in the Navy, although not appointed in any of the methods provided for by the Constitution, were held officers of the Navy within the meaning of a statute providing for increased pay according to length of service (U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309, affirming 22 Ct. Cls., 134), but at the same time were held not to be officers in the constitutional sense (U. S. v. Monat, 124 U. S., 303). Later, when the appointment of these clerks was vested in the Secretary of the Navy by regulations issued in accordance with section 1547, Revised Statutes, it was held that they thus became officers of the United States in the constitutional sense, as well as in the popular meaning of the term. (27 Op. Att. Gen., 157; but see Ashton v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 65. Congress has now provided for the appointment of pay clerks in the constitutional manner; see act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 942.) Similarly, a midshipman at the Naval Academy, although appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, "by direction of the President," was held not to be an officer of the Navy within the meaning of article 36 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.), restricting dismissals from the Navy (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324); although held to be an officer within the meaning of various other statutes. (See sec. 1512, R. S. See further, Perkins v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 438, affirmed 116 U. S., 483; U. S. v. Moore, 95 U. S., 760; U. S. v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474, and sec. 1, R. S.)

II. CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

Who are to make appointments to office.—"When Congress creates an office, but does not vest the power of appointment thereto in any of the persons specified, then the Constitution operates, proprio vigore [of its own force], and immediately casts upon the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the duty of appointing thereto." (30 Op. Att. Gen., 177. See also note to sec. 169, R. S.)

In the absence of an express enactment to the contrary, the appointment of any officer of the United States belongs to the President and Senate. (29 Op. Att. Gen., 116, citing, 6 Op. Att. Gen., 1; 15 Op. Att. Gen., 3, 449; 17 Op. Att. Gen., 532; 18 Op. Att. Gen., 98, 298; 26 Op. Att. Gen., 627.)

"The appointing power here designated in the latter part of the section was no doubt intended to be exercised by the department of the Government to which the officer to be appointed most appropriately belonged." (Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet., 258; Collins v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 568, 575.)

Congress "may authorize the President or the head of the War Department to appoint an Army officer, because the officer to be appointed is inferior to the one thus vested with the appointing power." (Collins v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 568.)

"A statute which provides that 'the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate Maj. C., late of the United States Army, and to retire him in that grade, as of the date he was previously mustered out,' confers authority on the President alone to reinstate the officer, without the advice and consent of the Senate." (Collins v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 568, syllabus.)

"In Moore's case (95 U. S., 760) the Supreme Court has gone much further than we now go, or than this case requires, in upholding the validity of an appointment made without the advice and consent of the Senate. The statutes provided that * * * all appointments in the Medical Corps [of the Navy] should be with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Sec. 1369, R. S.) * * * Moore was an assistant surgeon who had successfully passed his examination for promotion and had been notified by the Secretary of the Navy that the report of the board of examiners was approved by the department, and from that date he would be regarded as a 'passed assistant surgeon.' It was held by the Supreme Court that 'the place of passed assistant surgeon is an office, and the notification by the Secretary of the Navy was a valid appointment to it.'" (Collins v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 568.)

An officer [deputy commissioner of fisheries] appointed by the head of a department without statutory authority was not legally appointed, and his status is therefore that of a de facto officer. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

When the President is authorized by statute to appoint certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, the advice and consent of the Senate is not required. "The appointments provided for by this legislation are not such as by the Constitution are required to be made in any particular way. It was within the province of Congress to prescribe by whom and how these additional officers should be chosen, appointed, and commissioned. Congress might have directed that they should be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but such was not the method actually provided for. The provision of the statute is that the President is authorized to appoint. I see no ground whatever for holding that the advice and consent of the Senate is requisite to a lawful appointment under this legislation. An examination of kindred enactments relating to appointments in the Navy as well as appointments in the Army indicates that Congress frequently discriminates between appointments to be made by the President alone and appointments to be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82.)

"The statutes appear to be entirely silent upon the subject as to who shall make the appointments of midshipmen at the Naval Academy, except that, if Members of Congress fail to nominate, such vacancies shall be filled by appointment of the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1514, R. S.) The appointment in this case was made 'by direction of the President,' and we understand that this is and has been the universal practice in the making of appointments with the exception above stated." (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, 336; see also 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 46.)

The only question to be solved here is whether there is provision for the appointment of a secretary to the Admiral by some one other than by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The expression of the statute is, that the Admiral "shall be allowed" a secretary. That on its face indicates that the appointment is to be personal to the Admiral and so suggests that he is to make the selection. On account of this and the provisions of the Navy Regulations in force when the law was passed providing for appointment of his secretary by the Admiral, held, that appointment in this case was not to be made with the advice and consent of the Senate. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

By section 169, Revised Statutes, Congress has vested in the heads of departments the appointment of clerks, laborers, and other employees in their departments. (See note of decisions under that section as to positions included therein.)

The following are examples of statutes in which Congress has in the past vested the appointment of naval officers in the President alone: Admiral of the Navy (act Mar. 2, 1899, 30 Stat., 995; act Mar. 3, 1899, 30 Stat., 1045); warrant officers (sec. 1405, R. S.; act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 891; etc.); ensigns, when appointed from warrant officers (act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1129); Commandant of the Marine Corps (act June 6, 1874, 18 Stat., 58); second lieutenants, Marine Corps (act Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 19, 30 Stat., 1008); Spanish War appointments (act May 4, 1898, 30 Stat., 369). See also 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 574, 578; 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 138.

Power of appointment limited by Constitution.—"Power of appointment under the United States can not be communicated by act of Congress to persons not named to that end by the Constitution." (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 41.)

"Congress has power to distribute at its pleasure the appointment of inferior officers between the President, courts of law, and heads of departments, or to vest such appointments exclusively in one or two of those depositories; but it has not power to vest appointments elsewhere directly or indirectly." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516, 521.)

Appointments made by heads of bureaus in accordance with statute are presumed to be made with approval of the head of the department and are made by the head of a department within the meaning of the Constitution. (Price v. Abbott, 17 Fed. Rep., 506; Frelinghuysen v. Baldwin, 12 Fed. Rep., 396; Stanton v. Wilkeson, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13299.)

"It was argued that the appointment of Hatch was illegal because it was made by the Secretary of the Treasury and should have been made by the superintendent of immigration. But the Constitution does not allow Congress to vest the appointment of inferior officers elsewhere than 'in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments;' the act of 1891 manifestly contemplates and intends that the inspectors of immigration shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and appointments of such officers by the superintendent of immigration could be upheld only by presuming them to be made with the concurrence or approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, his official head." (Elkin v. U. S., 142 U. S., 651.)

"Congress has at various times authorized appointments independently of the President, courts of law, or heads of departments in departmental bureaus, in the customs service, in the internal-revenue service, in the land office, and in some other branches of the civil service. Upon this legislation it may be observed: First, that in some of these cases, such as those of deputy marshals and deputy clerks, the persons appointed are representatives of the officers who appoint them and who in some particulars are responsible for their conduct; and perhaps it was considered by Congress that the office was substantially in the principal. Second, that it was no doubt considered by Congress that some of the persons whose appointments were thus provided for were not officers in the constitutional sense of the term. Many employments now universally held to be offices were not evidently such at the outset, but with the growth of the Government were raised to that rank. Thus the force of these legislative precedents is somewhat weakened. Yet it can not be denied that some of them take for granted that Congress is absolute in the matter of appointments. Such, however, is not the constitutional rule." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516, 521.)

"Congress has no power whatever to vest the appointment of any employee coming fairly within the definition of an inferior officer of the Government in any other public authority but the President, the heads of departments, or the judicial tribunals." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 522; 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 164.)

Where a customs officer is appointable by the collector with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, this approbation is really the appointment, or else the appointment "is null and void under the Constitution." (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 164; 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 522.)

"So the Supreme Court has held that a clerk appointed by the Assistant Treasurer with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, was 'appointed by the head of the department within the meaning of the constitutional provision on the subject of the appointing power.' (U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall., 393, 394.) Attorney General Speed thought that a provision in the internal revenue act of March 3, 1865, giving to assessors the appointment of assistant assessors (13 Stat., 469), was 'clearly unconstitutional' (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 212), and such appears to have been the opinion of Congress itself, when its attention was called to the subject, for the act of January 15, 1866, repealed that provision and gave the appointment of assistant assessors to the Secretary of the Treasury." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516.)

A statute providing for the appointment of certain officers by the commandant of the Marine Corps, "being in derogation of the Constitution, is to be literally construed and on its terms." Accordingly, held that said statute contemplated merely occasional and transitory appointments under exceptional conditions. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 77.)

The power of appointment, being discretionary, can not be delegated by the head of the department, though he may inquire, investigate, and determine by the aid of subordinates; but the final determination must be his act, and not theirs. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 355.)

The power of appointment, especially where fixed by statute in the head of the department, can not be delegated to subordinates without authority of Congress. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 273.)

III. POWER OF CONGRESS.

Congress may refuse appropriations.—

"The power of appointment [of an agent or commissioner to make certain investigations] results from the obligation of the executive department of the Government 'to take care that the laws be faithfully executed'; an obligation imposed by the Constitution [Art. II, sec. 3] and from the authority of which no mere act of the legislature can occasion a dispensation. Congress may, however, indirectly limit the exercise of this power by refusing appropriations to sustain it, and thus paralyze a function which it is not competent to destroy." (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 248; see also note to Art. II, sec. 3.)

Congress may change the rank or pay of an officer of the Army, or transfer him to the retired list, but it "can not appoint him to a new and different office, because the Constitution vests the appointing power in the President with the advice of the Senate, or in certain cases, in the President alone, the heads of the executive departments, or the courts of law." (Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 151; affirmed 107 U. S., 414; see also Moser v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 86.)

The rank of officers of the Navy is not to be changed except by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Act June 17, 1878, 20 Stat., 144, amending sec. 1506, R. S.)

Congress can not control appointing power.—"I entertain no doubt that the power of appointment of officers, the duty to appoint whom devolves directly on the President and Senate by virtue of the Constitution itself, is one involving a discretion not entirely to be controlled by Congress. This power is from a source above Congress, namely, the Constitution, and can not be destroyed by the inferior power." (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177, in which it was also stated: "In this opinion it is only necessary to consider appointments the duty to make which is directly imposed on the President by the Constitution itself; no discussion of the other class [where Congress designates the person or persons who are to appoint to a given office created by it] will be entered upon. That a difference exists between the two is intimated in U. S. v. Perkins, 116 U. S., 483, 485.")

"Nor does the fact that Congress is given power by the Constitution 'to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces,' enable it to control the President's discretion in respect of those appointments which the same supreme law requires him to make. The general power to regulate such forces can not be taken to nullify the specific mandate to the President to appoint to offices where Congress has made no other provision." (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

Conceding that Congress has power, under its constitutional authority to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, to regulate appointments to offices in the Army and Navy, such power can not be carried to the designation of particular individuals to fill such offices, without imposing an unconstitutional restriction upon the appointing power. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 18; see also 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516, holding that, "unless controlled by authority, I should not take this power to embrace the subject of appointments"; and see 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 231, 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254, to the same effect.)

"It may now be considered to be definitely settled by the practice of the Government, that the regulation and government of the Army include, as being properly within their scope, the regulation of appointment and promotion of officers therein. Hence, as the Constitution expressly confers upon Congress authority 'to make rules for the government and regulation of' the Army, that body may impose such restrictions and limitations upon the appointing power as it deems proper in regard to promotions or appointments to any and all vacancies in the Army, provided the restrictions and limitations be not incompatible with the exercise of the appointing power." (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 164.)

"A promotion in the Army is an appointment to a higher office therein. The custom, so far as I am aware, has always been to nominate the promoted officer to the Senate and subsequently to appoint and commission him anew." (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177.)

Promotion by seniority is provided for in the Army by section 1257, Revised Statutes, which is generally similar to section 1458, Revised Statutes, requiring that in the Navy "the next officer in rank shall be promoted to the place of a retired officer, according to the established rules of the service; and the same rule of promotion shall be applied successively to the vacancies consequent upon the retirement of an officer." Also, by act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562, sec. 3), it is provided that "if any officer [of the Army] fails to pass a satisfactory examination and is reported unfit for promotion, the officer next below him in rank, having passed said examination, shall receive the promotion;" and by section 1480, Revised Statutes, provision is made for promotion of staff officers of the Navy by seniority. (As to constitutionality of these statutes, see notes to secs. 1458 and 1480, R. S. By amendments to secs. 1458 and 1480, R. S., promotion by selection to certain grades in the Navy is provided for.)

"I do not think * * * that the act of October 1, 1890, makes it obligatory upon the President to promote the senior officer in the grade of major when a vacancy exists in the grade of lieutenant-colonel in the Quartermaster Corps, if in his opinion the record of the officer has been such as to indicate that he is disqualified for promotion." (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177. The Attorney-General expressly limited this opinion to the cases of officers appointed by the President with the concurrence of the Senate, under direct authority of the Constitution. See also Ray v. Garrison, 42 App. D. C., 34, and 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.

"Respecting promotions in the Army, I have been unable, after careful examination, to find a single instance where the power of Congress to prescribe the rule therefor has been even doubted." (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 164, Jan. 9, 1873.)

In view of section 1480, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 27, 1877, promotions of staff officers of the Navy should be made by seniority; accordingly, the claim of an assistant surgeon, who has passed the necessary examinations, to be promoted according to seniority, is well founded. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 48.)

"The rules which existed at the date of the act of 1866 concerning the subject of appointment and promotion in the Army [including provisions for promotion by seniority] became, as it were, fixed; and having the force of law they must be taken to control the appointing power in regard to that subject until Congress shall otherwise direct." (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 164. The act mentioned provided that the existing Army Regulations should "remain in force" until future action on the part of Congress.)

"In filling original vacancies or offices in the Army newly created, the opinion was advanced by President Monroe, in a message to the Senate dated April 12, 1822, that 'Congress had no right under the Constitution to impose any restraint by law on the power granted to the President, so as to prevent his making a free selection of proper persons for these offices from the whole body of his fellow-citizens.' The Senate, however, disagreed with that opinion, maintaining that, as the Constitution conferred upon Congress power to 'make rules for the government and regulation of' the Army, that body had a right to make any which it thought would benefit the public service and to fix the rule both as to promotions and appointments in the Army." (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 164; but see 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1458 and 1480, Revised Statutes.

Congress can not designate appointee.— A bill providing that "the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint" a designated person to the position of colonel in the Army, is beyond the power of Congress and should not be approved by the President for the following reasons: First. If the bill be viewed as making it imperative upon the President to appoint, Congress can not impose such requirement and thus virtually assume a power (that of making an appointment to office) which does not constitutionally belong to it; and if it be regarded as advisory only, it is without the essential element of a law, and Congress can enact nothing but that which is to have full vigor and effect of a law. Second. The authority of Congress to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, and "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers," can not be carried to the designation by law of a particular individual to fill a military office, without conflicting with the power of appointment expressly given the President. Third. By this bill Congress in effect creates an office only upon condition that it is to be filled by a particular individual named. If this principle were adopted generally in the creation of offices, it would obviously result in constraining the appointing power to accept the condition imposed and fill the offices with the individuals designated by Congress, thus frustrating the design of the Constitution, which is that officers must be alone selected according to the judgment and will of the person and body in whom the powers of nominating, advising, and consenting, and appointing are vested. "Regarding the bill as imposing, or attempting to impose, upon the President a duty to appoint the person designated therein, it is without any support in the Constitution. It is an assumption of an implied power which is not based upon any express power, and clearly invades the constitutional rights of the President." (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 18. See also U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 How., 40, holding unconstitutional a law which directed certain Federal judges to act as commissioners for adjudication of claims: "If they are to be regarded as officers, holding offices under the Government, the power of appointment is in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and Congress could not by law designate the persons to fill these offices." And see note to Art. I, sec. 7, clause 2.)

"It has been alleged, I think, without sufficient cause, that this clause is unconstitutional because it has created a new office and has appointed Capt. Meigs to perform its duties. If it had done this, it would have been a clear question, because Congress have no right to appoint to any office, this being specially conferred upon the President and Senate. It is evident that Congress intended nothing more by this clause than to express a decided opinion that Capt. Meigs should be continued in the employment to which he had been previously assigned by competent authority." (Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 5, p. 597. See further, as to this case, note to Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, "Powers of Congress and of the President.")

Restoration of dismissed officers.—"While affirming in the strongest terms its opinion of the general inexpediency of restoring dismissed officers, the department also relies for the protection of the service upon the unconstitutionality of legislation for such purposes, as set forth in the message of July 2, 1884, returning, without executive approval, a bill contemplating such action." (Annual Report Sec. Nav., 1884, p. 42; see note to Art. I, sec. 7, clause 2, for message cited; see also 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 297.)

"No more powerful influence for the demoralization of the naval service is to be found than that which results from the restoration of officers dismissed for drunkenness or other misconduct, or for demonstrated incapacity. Cases of restoration which have occurred in the past would hardly have been possible but for a lenient spirit in the service, which, although it may proceed from kindly motives, indicates an indifference on the part of officers themselves concerning the tone of the Navy, and a disregard of their imperative duty to contribute by every means in their power to the maintenance of a high standard of professional character. Public opinion should not only sternly condemn all officers who are guilty of such misconduct as to disqualify them from service on the active list of the Navy, but also those who, from whatever cause, lend themselves to efforts for the restoration of worthless and ejected members of their profession." (Ann. Rept. Sec. Nav., 1884, p. 42.)

Additional duties imposed on officer.—"It is pointed to as invalidating the act that while Congress may create an office it can not appoint the officer. As, however, the two persons whose eligibility is questioned were at the time of the passage of the act and of their action under it already officers of the United States who had been heretofore appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, we do not think that because additional duties germane to the offices already held by them were devolved upon them by the act it was necessary that they should be again appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It can not be doubted, and it has frequently been the case, that Congress may increase the power and duty of an existing office without thereby rendering it necessary that the incumbent should be again nominated and appointed." (Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S., 282. In this connection see secs. 255 and 1550, R. S., concerning the designation of officers as disbursing agents.)

While Congress can not appoint to office, it may authorize a particular person or official to perform certain acts. (Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How., 66, holding that Congress might authorize but not compel State officers to perform certain duties with reference to the interstate extradition of fugitives from justice; see also act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 15, 35 Stat., 622, authorizing arrest of deserters from the Navy by State officers.)

IV. STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS AND QUALIFICATIONS.

Competitive examinations for appointment.—"A rule, whether prescribed by Congress or by the President in pursuance of authority given by Congress, that a vacant civil office must be given to the person who is found to stand foremost in a competitive examination, in effect makes the judges in that examination the appointing power to that office and thus contravenes the constitutional provisions on the subject of appointments. * * * Viewing the appointing power conferred in the Constitution as a substantial, and not merely a nominal function, I can not but believe that the judgment and will of the constitutional depository of that power should be exercised in every appointment. The power was lodged where it is because the makers of the Constitution, after careful consideration, thought that in no other depositories of it could the judgment and the will to make proper appointments so certainly be found. * * * If Congress can compel the President to nominate a person selected by others, it can compel the Senate to advise and consent to the nomination. * * * Advice and consent imply an exercise of judgment and will. So does nomination. So does appointment. There is this difference, that the judgment and will of the Senate can regard only the person proposed by the President, while there is no similar constitutional limitation upon his judgment and will. But there is no right in Congress to constrain either to adopt the judgment and will of others. Such constraint frustrates the constitutional design, that the judgment of the Senate shall revise the judgment of the President, and that the judgment of both shall concur in filling the office." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516.)

Advisory board.—"The appointing power may avail itself of the judgment of others as one means of information. For want of personal knowledge of candidates, it has habitually done so from the foundation of the Government. But this has been done in its discretion. I see no constitutional objection to an examining board rendering no imperative judgments, but only aiding the appointing power with information. A legal obligation to follow the judgment of such a board is inconsistent with the constitutional independence of the appointing power." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516.)

Discretion of appointing power.—"The argument has been made that the unquestioned right of Congress to create offices implies a right to prescribe qualification for them. This is admitted. But this right to prescribe qualifications is limited by the necessity of leaving scope for the judgment and will of the person or body in whom the constitution vests the power of appointment. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516.)

"It has been suggested that the appointments now vested in the courts and heads of departments could be transferred by Congress to the President, and that he could appoint according to the result of a competitive test, certified by an examining board. To this mode of selection, if discretionary with the President, there is no constitutional objection, and the same mode, under a similar condition, could be used by the various appointing powers under present laws; it being always understood that the appointing power resorts to this test as a way of finding out the fittest person for the vacant office, and is not bound to abide by it if satisfied that the appointment of another would best serve the public interests. In short, the test of a competitive examination may be resorted to in order to inform the conscience of the appointing power, but can not be made legally conclusive upon that power against its own judgment and will." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516.)

Unconstitutional precedents.—"The legislation of the country from an early period has been supposed to authorize a different constitutional view from that which is herein expressed [see preceding paragraphs]. * * * But when a congressional construction is inconsistent with the plain meaning of the Constitution, as ascertained by authoritative canons, that meaning can not be overruled by such construction, how often soever repeated. * * * It more concerns us to ascertain what is the constitutional rule than to learn whether the rule has always been observed. Nineteen violations of the Constitution do not justify a twentieth. The present question, in its essence, is whether the appointing power belongs to Congress or to those named in the Constitution as the depositories of that power; for if Congress can ordain that an office shall be filled by the person whom the examiners pronounce the fittest, it can ordain that the office shall be filled by the person whom Congress judges the fittest, and may directly appoint its favorite. * * * An enactment that the President shall appoint to a certain office the person adjudged by the examiners to be the fittest is not different, in constitutional principle, from an enactment that he shall appoint John Doe to that office. In neither case are his judgment and will called into exercise." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516.)

Qualifications in general.—"Although the appointing power alone can designate an individual for an office, either Congress, by direct legislation, or the President, by authority derived from Congress, can prescribe qualifications and require that the designation shall be made out of a class of persons ascertained by proper tests to have those qualifications; and it is not necessary that the judges in the tests should be chosen by the appointing power. Attorney General Legare has given an opinion upon a question similar in principle. Discussing the subject of appointment of inspectors of customs by the Secretary of the Treasury, he considers that it would 'be a fair constitutional exercise of the power of Congress to require that the Secretary should make an appointment out of a certain number of nominees proposed by a collector.'" (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516, citing 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 164; see also, 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 502; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 341.)

"It has been argued that a right in Congress to limit in the least the field of selection implies a right to carry on the controlling process to the designation of a particular individual. But I do not think this a fair conclusion. Congress could require that officers shall be of American citizenship or of a certain age, that judges should be of the legal profession and of a certain standing in the profession, and still leave room to the appointing power for the exercise of its own judgment and will; and I am not prepared to affirm that to go further and require that the selection shall be made from persons found by an examining board to be qualified in such particulars as diligence, scholarship, integrity, good manners, and attachment to the Government would impose an unconstitutional limitation on the appointing power. It would still have a reasonable scope for its own judgment and will. But it may be asked, At what point must the controlling process stop? I confess my inability to answer. But the difficulty between drawing a line between such limitations as are, and such as are not, allowed by the Constitution, is not proof that both classes do not exist. In constitutional and legal inquiries right or wrong is often a question of degree. Yet it is impossible to tell precisely where in the scale right ceases and wrong begins. * * * In the matter now in question, it is not supposable that Congress or the President would require of candidates for office qualifications unattainable by a sufficient number to afford ample room for choice." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 516.)

A statute prescribing the qualifications necessary for appointment as an officer of the Navy, "being in derogation of the appointing power should be strictly construed and not extended by implication to include anything which does not clearly come within the meaning of the language used." (File 8622-2, Feb. 10, 1908.)

Nomination of ineligible.—The President is not authorized to nominate for office a person ineligible under Article I, section 6, clause 2, and such a nomination, although confirmed by the Senate, can not be made the basis of an appointment to the nominee, even when his disqualification ceases. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 522.)

Appointment of ineligible.—The qualifications of a candidate are presumed to have been ascertained and found satisfactory previous to his appointment to office; and a subsequent administration can not, in the absence of fraud, deprive the incumbent of his office, although evidence should be produced that he did not possess the statutory qualifications for appointment. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 180.)

"The law presumes that persons acting in a public capacity have been duly appointed, and their acts as de facto officers have in the interest of the public been upheld, though invalid as to them. (Ball v. U. S., 140 U. S., 118, 129; McDowell v. U. S., 159 ib. 596, and authorities therein cited.)" (Northrup v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 50.)

V. POWER OF SENATE.

"The Senate can not originate an appointment; its constitutional action is confined to a simple affirmation or rejection of the President's nominations; and such nominations fail whenever it disagrees to them. The Senate may suggest conditions and limitations to the President, but can not vary those submitted by him; for no appointment can be made except on his nomination, agreed to without qualification or alteration. In the case of John R. Coxe, jr., nominated for lieutenant in the Navy from date, and confirmed with the qualification that he shall take rank next after Lieut. Elisha Peck, a commission can not properly issue." (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 188; see also 4 Op. Att'y. Gen., 218.)

"The harmony of the two subordinate branches, the independence of the President, the just weight of the Senate, and the useful operation of the power itself, will no doubt be best secured by confining each branch to its peculiar function and not allowing either to deviate from the order of procedure prescribed by the Constitution." (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 188.)

The confirmation of an officer nominated for promotion may be made as well by the confirmation of his successor as in any other way provided it shows the assent of the Senate to such promotion. (23 Op. Att'y. Gen., 30.)

VI. WHAT CONSTITUTES APPOINTMENT.

"To constitute an appointment under this article, it is necessary, first, that the President should nominate the person proposed to be appointed; second, that the Senate should advise and consent that the nominee should be appointed; and, third, that in pursuance of such nomination and such advice and consent the appointment should be actually made." (4 Op. Att'y. Gen., 218.)

The Constitution seems to contemplate three distinct operations: First, the nomination. This is the sole act of the President and is completely voluntary. Second, the appointment. This is also the act of the President, and is also a voluntary act, though it can only be performed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Third, the commission. To grant a commission to a person appointed might, perhaps, be deemed a duty enjoined by the Constitution. "He shall," says that instrument, "commission all the officers of the United States." The acts of appointing the officer and commissioning the person appointed can scarcely be considered as one and the same, since the power to perform them is given in two separate and distinct sections of the Constitution. The appointment being the sole act of the President must be completely evidenced when it is shown that he has done everything to be performed by him. Should the commission, instead of being evidence of an appointment, even be considered as constituting the appointment itself, still it would be made when the last act to be done by the President was performed, or, at furthest, when the commission was complete. The last act to be done by the President is the signature of the commission. He has then acted on the advice and consent of the Senate to his own nomination. The time for deliberation has then passed. He has decided. His judgment on the advice and consent of the Senate concurring with his nomination has been made, and the officer appointed. This appointment is evidenced by an open, unequivocal act; and being the last act required from the person making it, necessarily excludes the idea of its being, so far as respects the appointment, an inchoate and incomplete transaction. (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.)

The appointment is the sole act of the appointing power; the acceptance is the sole act of the officer, and is, in plain common sense, posterior to the appointment. As he may resign, so he may refuse to accept; but neither the one nor the other is capable of rendering the appointment a nonentity. (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.)

Acceptance is not necessary to render the appointment complete; accordingly where a candidate was not above the maximum age for appointment when confirmed by the Senate, the statutory requirement was fulfilled, and he can legally be commissioned and accept the appointment after passing said age. (File 8622-2, Feb. 10, 1908.)

Acceptance is necessary to vest the office in the appointee, and a formal acceptance is the evidence which in the public service generally it has been customary to require. (12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 229.) But where a former officer of the Army asked the President in writing to reinstate him, under an act of Congress, and the President did so, no further formal acceptance was necessary. (Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 31.) Execution of the oath of office may be regarded as an acceptance of the appointment.

(8 Comp. Dec., 521; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 284.) An officer need not formally accept a promotion. Where he died before so doing acceptance is conclusively presumed. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 229.)

Date of appointment.—An appointment made to take effect at a prior date is inoperative prior to the date on which it was actually made and accepted. (8 Comp. Dec., 521; 20 Comp. Dec., 214, citing Morey v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cls., 603, Jackson v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 39, 17 Comp. Dec., 452. But see act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892, as to pay of officers of the Navy on promotion.)

VII. PAY AND OATH OF OFFICERS.

Pay of officers.—With some exceptions, Congress may at any time make alterations of the salaries of public officers, to take effect from the passage of the act. The only contract which arises upon a statute establishing a salary is to pay the incumbent of the office that salary while the law remains in force and unchanged. When the statute is repealed, superseded, or amended so as to alter the amount of the salary for the time being, the contract from that time forward is correspondingly changed. (Fisher v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 329, citing Patten's Case, 7 Ct. Cls., 362; Butler v. Penn., 10 How., 402; Territory v. Pyle, 1 Oreg., 151; Koontz v. Franklin, 76 Penn., 156.) The constitutional exceptions and limitations are that the compensation of the President shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected (Art. II, sec. 1), and that the judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. (Art. III, sec. 1.) (Fisher v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 329. See also note to sec. 167, R. S.)

To entitle an officer to recover pay claimed but not received, he must prove his case, as the compensation annexed to a public office is incident to the title to the office and not to the exercise of the functions of such office. (Northrup v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 50; as to right of Government to recover money paid by mistake of law to persons who were not officers of the United States, see note to sec. 236, R. S., "VIII. REOPENING OF ACCOUNTS.")

Pay of disbursing officer may commence prior to furnishing bond—that is, upon acceptance of appointment or entering upon duty—the same as other officers. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 38; U. S. v. Eaton, 169 U. S., 346; Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595; U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet., 343; U. S. v. Linn, 15 Pet., 290.)

Oath of office.—The fact that an officer is his own successor does not relieve him from the requirement of taking the oath of office prescribed by sections 1756 and 1757, Revised Statutes. The law "contemplates that the oath shall be taken at every new appointment before entering upon the duty." (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 219.)

A promotion in the Army is an appointment to a higher office therein. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 177.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1458 and 1757, Revised Statutes.

VIII. POWER OF REMOVAL.

May be removed by President.—"In the absence of a constitutional provision or statutory regulation it would seem to be a sound and necessary rule to consider the power of removal as incident to the power of appointment. This power of removal from office was a subject much disputed and upon which a great diversity of opinion was entertained in the early history of this Government. This related, however, to the power of the President to remove officers appointed with the concurrence of the Senate, both constituting the appointing power. No one denied the power of the President and Senate, jointly, to remove where the tenure of the office was not fixed by the Constitution, which was a full recognition of the principle that the power of removal was incident to the power of appointment. But it was very early adopted as the practical construction of the Constitution that this power was vested in the President alone, and such would appear to have been the legislative construction of the Constitution." (Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet., 230.)

Congress may be empowered to fix the term of an officer of the District of Columbia so that he would have a right to hold during said term independently of the Executive and without his appointment being revocable by the President, as was indicated by Chief Justice Marshall in Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 137). This power might be sustained under the authority of Congress to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever under the seat of government. (Art. I, sec. 8, clause 17.) A distinction, however, exists as to other officers appointed outside of such District. (Parsons v. U. S., 167 U. S., 324.)

The President has the power, without the concurrence of the Senate, to remove a United States attorney who was appointed for a fixed term prior to the expiration of such term. (Parsons v. U. S., 167 U. S., 324.)

By section 1767, Revised Statutes [repealed March 3, 1887], it was provided that any person appointed to office by and with the advice and consent of the Senate should be entitled to hold during the term for which appointed, "unless sooner removed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the appointment, with the like advice and consent, of a successor in his place." Under this section it was proper for the President to "execute a formal act" removing the officer, "pursuant to the resolution of the Senate advising and consenting to his removal." (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 468.) The repeal of this section was intended to restore to the President the power of removal without the advice and consent of the Senate, if indeed that power had ever been taken from him. (Parsons v. U. S., 167 U. S., 327.)

Military and naval officers.—"The various methods by which persons in the military or naval service of the United States may be involuntarily separated therefrom are embraced in the terms 'discharged,' 'dismissed,' and 'wholly retired.' The word 'discharged' is properly 'limited in its application to those who have enlisted for definite periods' (Emory v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 254, 262), and unless qualified by other words—as, for example, 'dishonorable' discharge, 'bad-conduct' discharge, discharge 'without honor'—it does not carry with it any stigma of disgrace or punishment. 'Dismissed' is a term peculiarly applicable to officers and is the equivalent of a dishonorable discharge. 'Wholly retired' is a phrase coined for the purpose of conveying, with reference to officers, the same idea as attaches to the word 'discharged' when applied to enlisted men. The meaning of these terms and the importance of distinguishing between them was discussed by the Court of Claims in the case last above cited. * * * It is evident that the term 'discharged' as used in the act of 1882, now under consideration [providing for the discharge of officers who fail morally on examination for promotion], was intended to be synonymous with the words 'wholly retired,' and it has been given that construction by the department and by Congress." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 25.)

Statutory restrictions upon President.—By section 1229, Revised Statutes, it was provided that no officer in the military or naval service shall be dismissed in time of peace except pursuant to the sentence of a court-martial. This provision is repeated in section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 36, as to officers of the Navy, and in section 1342, Revised Statutes, as to officers of the Army. These enactments have been held constitutional in so far as concerns officers whose appointments were not made with the advice and consent of the Senate, the court saying: "Whether or not Congress can restrict the power of removal incident to the power of appointment of those officers who are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, under the authority of the Constitution (Art. II, sec. 2), does not arise in this case and need not be considered. We have no doubt that when Congress by law vests the appointment of inferior officers in the heads of departments it may limit and restrict the power of removal as it deems best for the public interest. The constitutional authority in Congress to thus vest the appointment implies authority to limit, restrict, and regulate the removal by such laws as Congress may enact in relation to the officers so appointed. The head of a department has no constitutional prerogative of appointment to offices independently of the legislation of Congress, and by such legislation he must be governed, not only in making appointments but in all that is incident thereto." (Perkins v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 438; quoted and expressly adopted by the Supreme Court in U. S. v. Perkins, 116 U. S., 483; compare U. S. v. Andrews, 240 U. S., 90.)

Where an enlisted man was appointed by the President as a warrant officer in the Navy, without being discharged from his enlistment: Held, that it would not be legal to revoke his appointment, thereby restoring him to his former status as an enlisted man, and then discharge him from the Navy without sentence of court-martial. That this would be doing indirectly what the law does not allow to be done directly, and while "most desirable" in the case presented, was beyond the power of the President. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

tions 1229 and 1624 (art. 36) of the Revised Statutes, restricting dismissals from the Navy. "Whether Congress has the constitutional power of such restriction is not necessary to decide in this case." (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, distinguishing U. S. v. Perkins, 116 U. S., 483, which held that a cadet engineer who had graduated from the Academy and had served in the Navy two years under orders was an officer within the meaning of these statutes.) A cadet at West Point is not an officer within the meaning of section 1229, Revised Statutes. (Hartigan v. U. S., 196 U. S., 169, citing on general subject Mullan v. U. S., 140 U. S., 240; Shurtleff v. U. S., 189 U. S., 311.)

Whatever power the President may have to dismiss civil officers, it does not apply to officers of the Army and Navy, who, under Revised Statutes, section 1229, shall not in time of peace be dismissed except upon and in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial or in commutation thereof. (U. S. v. Andrews, 240 U. S., 90. See note to secs. 1229 and 1624, art. 36, R. S.)

It is well settled that in time of war the President has the authority, under the Constitution and laws, to dismiss an officer of the Army or Navy from the service for any cause which in his judgment either renders the officer unsuitable for, or whose dismissal would promote, the public service. (Brown v. Root, 18 App. D. C., 239.)

As to right of officer to trial by court-martial after dismissal, see section 1624, art. 37, Revised Statutes, and Wallace v. United States (55 Ct. Cls., 396.)

Power of President and Senate.—Section 1229, Revised Statutes, does not deprive the President of power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to remove a commissioned officer of the Army or Navy. Accordingly, the President has the power to remove such officers by the appointment of others in their places, with the concurrence of the Senate. (Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S., 227; McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S., 426; Keyes v. U. S., 109 U. S., 336, 339; Quackenbush v. U. S., 177 U. S., 25; 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 89; compare 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 463; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 203.)

A nomination made by the President to the Senate of A B in the place of C D, removed, operates to remove the incumbent upon confirmation of the Senate, notwithstanding that no letter of dismissal was previously addressed to C D. The removal takes effect upon notification to the incumbent by letter in the name of the President, or upon arrival of his successor to enter upon duty. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 379.)

Reduction of Army.—The President was authorized by act of July 15, 1870, providing for the reduction of the Army, to "muster out" officers reported unfit for duty; and this authority was not limited by the act of July 17, 1866, now embodied in section 1229, Revised Statutes. "The purpose of the act 17th July, 1866, was not to attach a life tenure or element of vested right to the office, but to save officers 'in time of peace' from the ignominy of a hasty and dishonorable dismissal. The practical results of that statute in connection with the other provisions of law bearing upon the subject are these: That in time of war the President may dismiss an officer from the service at any moment and for any cause; that in time of peace he may dismiss him for cause with the cooperation of a court-martial, or remove him without cause with the consent of the Senate. The acts of 1866 and 1870 are, therefore, neither in conflict nor in pari materia. They spring from different provisions of the Constitution. The one is an exercise of the legislative power 'to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces'; the other of the power 'to raise and support armies.' The former relates to the punishment or protection of the individual officer; the latter to the Army at large. It was the purpose of the one to secure to each officer a trial by court-martial in all cases 'in time of peace'; it was the purpose of the other to reduce the Army of the United States from 45 to 25 regiments." (Sherburne v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 491; see also Street v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 230; Duryea v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 24; and file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911.)

The courts will not grant an injunction to prevent the removal of an officer from the classified civil service (White v. Berry, 171 U. S., 366): "The appointment to an official position in the Government, even if it be simply a clerical position, is not a mere ministerial act, but one involving the exercise of judgment. The appointing power must determine the fitness of the applicant; whether or not he is the proper one to discharge the duties of the position. Therefore it is one of those acts over which the courts have no general supervising power. In the absence of specific provision to the contrary, the power of removal is incident to the power of appointment. * * * Unless, therefore, there be some specific provision to the contrary, the action of the Secretary of the Interior in removing the petitioner from office on account of inefficiency is beyond review in the courts, either by mandamus to reinstate him or by compelling payment of salary as though he had not been removed." (Keim v. U. S., 177 U. S., 290; see also Brown v. Root, 18 App. D. C., 239.)

"Under the former laws the courts had no power to review the action of the head of a department in discharging an employee for inefficiency. Keim v. United States, 177 U. S., 290; Taylor v. Taft, 24 App. D. C., 95." Whether that rule is changed by act August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. 413), not decided, as that act has not been made effective by the action of the Civil Service Commission as therein provided. (Persing v. Daniels, 43 App. D. C., 470.)

Where a statute specifies certain causes of removal from office, the incumbent is entitled to a hearing prior to his removal (Reagan v. U. S., 182 U. S., 419); however, the specific mention of certain causes for removal is not exclusive, and the incumbent of an office may accordingly be removed for other causes; and in the case of removal for causes not specified in the statute he can not demand a hearing. (Shurtleff v. U. S., 189 U. S., 311.)

IX. RIGHT OF OFFICERS TO RESIGN.

"The resignation of an officer of the Navy is not effective until it has been duly accepted by the President, who possesses the power of compelling the officer to remain in the service by declining to accept such resignation." (File 26505-21 and 28, citing Edwards v. U. S., 103 U. S., 471; sec. 1624, R. S., art. 10; file 26262-2146.)

[CLAUSE 3. Recess appointments.] ³The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Recess of Senate.—It was held by the Court of Claims, May 26, 1884, that there was "no doubt" that a vacancy occurring while the Senate was temporarily adjourned could be and was legally filled by appointment of the President in accordance with this clause of the Constitution, and that the appointee legally held the office until he was notified of his rejection by the Senate at its next regular session established by law, which began on the first Monday of the following December. (Gould v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 593, 595.) The Attorney General, thereafter (Dec. 24, 1901), expressly dissented from the Court of Claims decision, and advised the President that a vacancy occurring during a temporary adjournment of the Senate could not be filled by him as a recess appointment, but that such appointments could be made only when the Senate adjourned sine die. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 599; affirmed 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 602; modified, 33 Op. Atty. Gen., 20.)

Vacancies in heads of Departments, bureaus, etc.—The President has the right under the Constitution, and impliedly under section 181, Revised Statutes, to make a temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another in the case of a vacancy caused by death, disability, or otherwise during the recess of the Senate; and such temporary appointment, designation, or assignment is not limited by law to any particular period. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 258. See sec. 181, R. S., and note.)

Form of appointment.—A temporary appointment during a recess of the Senate need not be made in any prescribed form. A communication from the Secretary of War informing the recipient that he has been appointed an officer of the Army by the President is sufficient, and answers the purpose of a commission if a commission is necessary. (O'Shea v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 392.)

Effect of temporary appointment.—Where the term of an officer, such as the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, is limited by law to four years (see sec. 421, R. S.), the period during which the appointee serves under an ad interim appointment by the President is not counted, but the four years do not commence to run until the appointment has been made with the advice and consent of the Senate, even though the nomination is worded to take effect from the date of the ad interim appointment. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 648.)

Temporary appointment not accepted.—A recess commission which was not accepted, and was therefore never of any practical effect, should not be accepted after the appointment has been confirmed by the Senate, but should be disregarded and a permanent commission issued in the usual manner. (File 8622-2, Feb. 10, 1908; see also 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 336; U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., 721.)

Vacancy may be filled during recess, although it existed while Senate was in session.—"If we interpret the word 'happen' as being merely equivalent to 'happen to exist' (as I think we may legitimately do), then all vacancies which, from any casualty, happen to exist at a time when the Senate can not be consulted as to filling them, may be temporarily filled by the President; and the whole purpose of the Constitution is completely accomplished." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 631; see also Matter of Farrow, 3 Fed. Rep., 115.) Accordingly, the President has power to fill not only vacancies which originated in the recess of the Senate, but also vacancies which existed while the Senate was in session. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 522; see also 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 449.)

"Mr. Wirt in 1823, Mr. Taney in 1833, and Mr. Legare in 1841, concur in opinion that vacancies first occurring during the session of the Senate may be filled by the President in the recess." (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 33.)

"If the question were new, and now for the first time to be considered, I might have serious doubts of your constitutional power to fill up the vacancy, by temporary appointment, in the recess of the Senate. But the question is not new. It is settled in favor of the power, so far at least as a constitutional question can be settled, by the continued practice of your predecessors, and the reiterated opinions of mine, and sanctioned, as far as I know or believe, by the unbroken acquiescence of the Senate." (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 356.)

Where an office was created by Congress, to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but was not filled during the session in which it was created, the President has power to make a recess appointment thereto after the Senate adjourns. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 234; see also 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 261; In re Yancey, 28 Fed. Rep., 445; compare file 6288-2, Mar. 29, 1907.)

Where the Senate fails or refuses to confirm the President's nominee, and the President during the next recess of the Senate makes an appointment thereto, such appointment is valid. (Matter of Farrow, 3 Fed. Rep., 112; 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 32.)

"No money shall be paid from the Treasury, as salary, to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate." (Sec. 1761, R. S.; 26 Op. Atty. Gen. 234; 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 314; 21 Comp. Dec., 722; but see 17 Comp. Dec., 95.)

A commission issued by the President during a recess of the Senate continues in force until the end of the next session, even though the President's appointee is in the meantime rejected by the Senate. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 30; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 336; In re Marshalsip, etc., 20 Fed. Rep., 382.)

A vacancy having occurred during the session of the Senate and the Senate having failed to confirm an appointment, the President may then appoint the nominee or any other person to fill the vacancy by temporary commission to expire at the end of the next session of the Senate. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 314, citing 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 631; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 525; 3 Op. Atty. Gen., 673; 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 523; 7 Op. Atty. Gen., 186; 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 356; 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 32; 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 453; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 562, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 522; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.) "As several of the opinions to which I have just referred discuss the entire subject with marked thoroughness, I have concluded to simply state the conclusion at which my predecessors arrived. These opinions announce, as a doctrine of administrative law, that the expression in the Constitution, 'all vacancies that may happen during the recess,' signifies 'all vacancies that may happen to exist during the recess.' Furthermore, these opinions concur in the general conclusion that howsoever a vacancy happens to exist it may be filled by temporary appointment of the President, and they agree that it is the true spirit and meaning of the Constitution to have all the offices, which Congress indicates to be needful for the ends of government by creating them, filled provisionally rather than that they remain vacant or that a special call of the Senate be required for the purpose of confirmation." (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 314.)

"When an office is created and takes effect during a session of the Senate and a subsequent session of Congress passes without the same being filled, the President can not make a valid appointment to such office during a recess of the Senate." (Schenck v. Peay, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12451.)

Revocation of commission.—A commission as lieutenant commander in the Navy, issued during a recess of the Senate, can not, after acceptance, be revoked. (File 4389, Nov. 18, 1907.)

SECTION 3. [Messages to Congress; execution of laws; commissioning of officers; etc.] He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

- I. DUTY TO SEE THAT LAWS ARE EXECUTED.
- II. DUTY TO COMMISSION OFFICERS.

I. DUTY TO SEE THAT LAWS ARE EXECUTED.

Execution of laws.—"The Constitution, section 3, Article II, declares that the President 'shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed,' and he is provided with the means of fulfilling this obligation by his authority to commission all the officers of the United States, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint the most important of them, and to fill vacancies. He is declared to be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. The duties which are thus imposed upon him he is further enabled to perform by the recognition in the Constitution, and the creation by acts of Congress, of executive departments. * * * These aid him in the performance of the great duties of his office, and represent him in a thousand acts to which it can hardly be supposed his personal attention is called, and thus he is enabled to fulfill the duty of his great department, expressed in the phrase that 'he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.' * * * We can not doubt the power of the President to take measures for the protection of a judge of one of the courts of the United States, who, while in the discharge of the duties of his office is threatened with a personal attack which may probably result in his death, and we think it clear that where this protection is to be afforded through the civil power, the Department of Justice is the proper one to set in motion the necessary means of protection." (In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1.)

The duty of the President under this clause is not limited to the enforcement of acts of Congress or of treaties of the United States according to their express terms, but includes the rights, duties, and obligations growing out of the Constitution itself, our international relations, and all the protection implied by the nature of the government under the Constitution. (In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1.)

The Secretary of War is authorized by this section to appoint an agent or commissioner to conduct certain investigations, although such agent or commissioner can not be paid for his services but must await the action of Congress, in view of a statute prohibiting any payments to agents or commissioners thereafter appointed, except out of specific appropriations to be made by law. "The power of appointment results from the obligation of the executive department of the Government 'to take care that the laws be faithfully executed,' an obligation imposed by the Constitution and from the authority of which no mere act of the legislature can occasion a dispensation. Congress may, however, indirectly limit the exercise of this power by refusing appropriations to sustain it, and thus paralyze a function which it is not competent to destroy. This would seem to be the purpose of the act of August 26, 1842, which may be regarded as an exposition of the legislative will, and to which, except in cases of commanding exigency, I think the executive action should be conformed; for whilst it is quite clear that the power of appointment is unimpaired by the acts of Congress referred to, it is equally obvious that the intention of those by whom they were passed was to discountenance its ordinary execution." (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 248.)

It is one of the highest duties of the President to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and consequently that they may not be abused by any officer under his authority or control, to the grievance of any citizen. Accordingly, the President has constitutional power to order the discontinuance of a suit by the Attorney General or his subordinates. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 53.)

If a district attorney should refuse to obey the President's order, the prosecution, while he remained in office, would still go on; in such case the removal of the disobedient officer and the substitution of one more worthy in his place would enable the President, through him, faithfully to execute the law; and it is for this, among other reasons, that the power of removing the district attorney resides in the President. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 482.)

"The only power, therefore, which the President possesses where the 'life, liberty, or property' of a private citizen are concerned, is the power and duty prescribed in the third section of the second article, which requires 'that he shall take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed.' He is not authorized to execute them himself, or through agents or officers, civil or military, appointed by himself; but he is to take care that they be faithfully carried into execution as they are expounded and adjudged by the coordinate branch of the Government to which that duty is assigned by the Constitution. It is thus made his duty to come to the aid of the judicial authority if it shall be resisted by a force too strong to be overcome without the assistance of the executive arm. But in exercising this power he acts in subordination to judicial authority, assisting it to execute the process and enforce its judgments." (Ex parte Merryman, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9487.)

"The President has, under the Constitution and laws, certain duties to perform, among these being to take care that the laws be faithfully executed; that is, that the other executive and administrative officers of the Government faithfully perform their duties; but the statutes regulate and prescribe these duties, and he has no more power to add to or subtract from the duties imposed upon subordinate executive and administrative officers by the law than those officers have to add or subtract from his duties." (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 686.)

"It was urged at the bar that the Postmaster General was alone subject to the direction and control of the President with respect to the execution of the duty imposed upon him by this law, and this right of the President is claimed as growing out of the obligation imposed upon him by the Constitution to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. This is a doctrine that can not receive the sanction of this court. It would be vesting in the President a dispensing power which has no countenance for its support in any part of the Constitution and is asserting a principle which, if carried out in its results to all cases falling within it, would be clothing the President with a power entirely to control the legislation of Congress and paralyze the administration of justice." (Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524.)

II. DUTY TO COMMISSION OFFICERS.

Commissioning officers.—"Hereafter the commissions of all officers under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall be made out and recorded in the respective departments under which they are to serve, and the department seal affixed thereto, any laws to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That the said seal shall not be affixed to any such commission before the same shall have been signed by the President of the United States." (Act Mar. 28, 1896, 29 Stat., 75.)

"The President is authorized to make out and deliver, after the adjournment of the Senate, commissions for all officers whose appointments have been advised and consented to by the Senate." (Sec. 1773, R. S.)

It is not necessary for the President personally to sign the commissions of officers appointed by him without the advice and consent of the Senate, but such commissions may be issued by the Secretary of the Navy. However, "it is proper" that the commission should declare the act to be an act of the President, performed by the head of the department as his representative. (22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 82; file 28687-22, June 14, 1917; 22724-34, July 28, Aug. 1, and Aug. 6, 1917.)

Form of commission, where appointment is made during recess of the Senate. (See note to Art. II, sec. 2, clause 3, "Form of appointment.")

To grant a commission to a person appointed might, perhaps, be deemed a duty enjoined by the Constitution. "He shall," says that instrument, "commission all the officers of the United States." (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.)

The commission is not necessarily the appointment, though conclusive evidence of it. (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137; see note to Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.) The acts of appointing the officer and commissioning the person appointed can scarcely be considered as one and the same, since the power to perform them is given in two separate and distinct sections of the Constitution. (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137; 25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 292; Quackenbush v. U. S., 177 U. S., 27.)

Appointments by the President are always evidenced by commissions. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 589, 592.)

Retired officers advanced in rank "shall be entitled to and shall receive commissions in accordance with such advanced rank." (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat. 1354; see file 26509-33, Mar. 24, 1910.)

Advancement in rank only.—An assistant paymaster advanced in rank from ensign to lieutenant (junior grade), without receiving an advancement in grade, need not be commissioned, as this is merely an advancement in rank, without change in office, which remains, as before, that of assistant paymaster. (File 26254-542; see also 19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 169, 173; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 358; 16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 652; 25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 185, 313; Cloud v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 69; 17 Comp. Dec., 255; 16 Comp. Dec., 662; sec. 1506, R. S., as amended; file 28687-4:1, Sept. 16, 1916; 4649-02, July 17, 1902, noted under sec. 421, R. S.; 28687-16, Dec. 30, 1916; 26254-2171, Jan. 16, 1917; 22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 480; but see file 1282-01, Mar. 19, 1901, in which the Secretary of the Navy directed that staff officers advanced in rank without advancement in grade or change of office, should be nominated, and after confirmation by the Senate, commissioned with the higher rank, thereby expressly changing the "long established custom of the department to advise officers of the staff corps of the Navy of the attainment of a higher rank in their grade by a letter of notification only." See also file 28687-4:1, Sept. 16, 1916, holding that former practice might legally be reverted to; and file 28687-22, June 14, 1917, to same effect. And see Op. Att'y. Gen., Dec. 27, 1916, file 28687-4:8, stating that rank may be conferred by mere notification without confirmation or commission.)

Governors of Guam and Tutuila.—Naval officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, as governors of the islands of Guam and Tutuila, may be issued commissions by the President in the usual form, such commissions being desirable "for administrative reasons," and merely evidence of appointments already made under the power of the President as Commander in Chief. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 292.)

Withholding commission.—"Even after confirmation by the Senate, the President may in his discretion withhold a commission from the applicant. And until a commission, signifying that the purpose of the President has not been changed, the appointment is not fully consummated." (4 Op. Att'y. Gen., 218, citing Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137; see also 12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 306; 13 Op. Att'y. Gen., 44; file 4996, June 1, 1906; file 26251-2833, Mar. 31, 1910.)

The President is not required to issue a commission to an officer who had been recommended for trial by general court-martial for shortages in his accounts and indebtedness, and who thereafter presented his resignation, which was accepted "for the good of the service," in the meantime having been nominated by the President for promotion, which nomination was confirmed by the Senate, but whose commission had not been signed by the President. (File 26251-2833.)

But if the commission be signed and sealed, and the officer be of a class not removable by the President, in that case the President's right over the office no longer exists. The right of the appointee thereto is vested, his commission irrevocable. (12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 304.)

A commission should not be issued for sentimental reasons where no services are to be rendered under it, the appointment having been declined after confirmation by the Senate. (4 Op. J. A. G., 443, Oct. 19, 1893; quoted, file 26251-2833, Mar. 31, 1910; see also file 8622-2, Feb. 10, 1908.)

When the Senate, in confirming the nomination of a candidate for lieutenant in the Navy, specifies that he shall take rank next after a designated officer, thus varying the terms of the nomination, a commission can not properly issue. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 188; see also 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 218; and see note to Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

When the President nominates for office a person ineligible thereto, under Article I, section 6, clause 2, although the Senate confirms the nomination, it can not be made the basis of an appointment even when his disqualification ceases. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 522.)

Erroneous commission.—A commission issued to an officer who had not qualified for promotion, but was nominated and confirmed through error, is null and void. (File 26260-1193:1, Jan. 11, 1912; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 43; file 26260-110:1, June 21, 1909; file 26260-132; file 26254-645, Comp. Dec., Feb. 21, 1911, 120 S. and A. Memo. 1684; file 26254-482, Comp. Dec., Sept. 15, 1910; file 26254-655, Comp. Dec., Feb. 28, 1911; file 26254-654, Comp. Dec., Feb. 27, 1911, 120 S. and A. Memo., 1687; 17 Comp. Dec., 611; and see file 5172-93, Apr. 16, 1907, file 26254-286½a, May 27, 1909; 15 Comp. Dec., 584.)

The President and Senate, by nomination and confirmation, may correct an error in the date of a military commission. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 307; 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223.)

Where a militia officer mustered into the service of the United States had been erroneously commissioned by the governor of his State, it was proper for the governor to issue him a second commission to correct the error, and such new commission being in accordance with the law of the State, would relate back to the time when he entered the service of the United States. (Nutt v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 368.)

Date of.—Where an officer is transferred from the retired list to the active list by special act of Congress, without stating the position he is to take on the active list, the only appropriate date which can be fixed for his restoration is the date of the act itself. (File 2871-7, Oct. 11, 1907.)

When naval officers are commissioned on the same date, the numbering of the commissions to determine the relative rank of the officers, is, in the absence of statutes, a matter of practice in the Navy Department, and not governed by law. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 325; file 28026-1209:4, Oct. 25, 1915; 11130-27, Aug. 26, 1915; Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls. 333.)

In cases where appointing power did not fill a vacancy at the time it was created, or the person at the time was ineligible for appointment, and the department acted promptly, it is not deemed advisable to antedate the commission. (File 9466-03.)

be made to date from the occurrence of the vacancy unless the appointing power so decides. (File 7151-03; see also file 3089-04, 9 Comp. Dec. 612.)

Where new offices are created by law, and it is provided therein that no person shall be appointed until he has been found qualified by examination, the commissions issued should not bear a date prior to that when the candidate qualified by examination. (File 5460-72:1, May 19, 1915; see also 14 Op. Atty. Gen. 192. On general subject of antedating commissions see 19 Ct. Cls. 145, 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 319, 19 Ct. Cls. 137.)

An ensign who failed on examination for promotion, was suspended, and after six months qualified and was promoted, should not be given in his commission the same date as that on which he would have been promoted had he been found qualified upon his first examination, as this would entitle him to pay for a period of six months during which he was not performing the duties of the higher grade and had demonstrated his incompetency therefor. (File 26266-475, May, 1915; see act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892.)

When the term of an officer, such as the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, is limited by law to four years (see sec. 421, R. S.), the period during which the appointee serves under an ad interim appointment by the President is not counted, but the four years do not commence to run until the appointment has been made with the advice and consent of the Senate, even though the nomination is worded to take effect from the date of the ad interim appointment. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 656.)

For other cases, see note to section 1458, Revised Statutes.

Changes in date.—See above, "Erroneous commission."

While an officer might have been promoted to the grade of captain in the Marine Corps when a vacancy in that grade occurred, such action was discretionary with the appointing power; and since such action was not taken, but the officer was promoted and commissioned as of a later date, there is no law or regulation entitling him to have his commission date from the occurrence of the vacancy. (File 2518-04.)

The statutes and regulations governing precedence having once been determined in any particular case, considerations of repose intervene and become important. Disturbance of the Navy lists is prejudicial to the service, and should not be sanctioned where doubt exists respecting the appropriate action, and where a considerable length of time has elapsed. (File 8171-03; file 9019-01; 13 Op. J. A. G., 127; see also file 1957-03, 7794-02; 26255-83:4, Aug. 4, 1911; 11130-35, Dec. 20, 1916.)

The action taken at the time an officer's commission was issued should be regarded as conclusive by subsequent administrations, and his case should not therefore be reopened. Opinions regarding doctrine of res judicata in administrative action considered and applied. (File 11130-6, Dec. 28, 1909; see also note to sec. 417, R. S.; and see file 2346-1, Aug. 23, 1905.)

SECTION 4. [Impeachment of civil officers.] The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. [Courts of United States; terms and compensation of judges.] The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

"Of all the courts which the United States may, under their general powers, constitute, one only—the Supreme Court—possesses jurisdiction derived immediately from the Constitution, and of which the legislative power can not deprive it. All other courts created by the General Government possess no jurisdiction but what is given them by the power that creates them, and can be vested with none but what the power ceded to the General Government will authorize them to confer * * *. The power which Congress possesses to create courts of inferior jurisdiction necessarily implies the power to limit the jurisdiction of those courts to particular objects * * *. The legislative authority of the Union must first make an act a crime, affix a punishment to it, and declare the court that shall have jurisdiction of the offense." (U. S. v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32.)

See note to Article I, section 8, clause 9, as to the judicial system of the United States, and the status of courts-martial.

SECTION 2. [CLAUSE 1. Extent of the judicial power.]¹ The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;—to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens, or Subjects.

Political questions.—"Those questions which respect the rights of a part of a foreign empire which asserts, or is contending for, its independence, and the conduct which must be observed by the courts of the Union toward the subjects of such section of an empire who may be brought before the tribunals of this country * * * are generally rather political than legal in their character. They belong more properly to those who can declare what the law shall be; who can place the nation in such a position with respect to foreign powers as to their own judgment shall appear wise, to whom are intrusted all its foreign relations, than to that tribunal whose power as well as duty is confined to the application of the rule which the legislature may prescribe for it. In such contests a nation may engage itself with the one party or the other—may observe absolute neutrality—or may make a limited recognition of it. The proceedings in the court must depend so entirely on the course of the Government that it is difficult to give a precise answer to questions which do not refer to a particular nation. It may be said, generally, that if the Government remains neutral, and recognizes the existence of a civil war, its courts can not consider as criminal those acts of hostility which war authorizes, and which the new Government may direct against the enemy. To decide otherwise, would be to determine that the war prosecuted by one of the parties was unlawful, and would be to array the nation to which the court belongs against that party. This would transcend the limits prescribed to the judicial department." (U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat., 610; see also The Divina Pastora, 4 Wheat., 52; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat., 283; and Kennett v. Chambers, 14 How., 38.)

"Can there be any doubt that when the executive branch of the Government, which is charged with the foreign relations, shall in its correspondence with a foreign nation assume a fact in regard to the sovereignty of any island or country, it is conclusive on the judicial department? And in this view, it is not material to inquire nor is it the province of the court to determine whether the Executive be right or wrong. It is enough to know that in the exercise of his constitutional functions he has decided the question. Having done this under the responsibilities which belong to him, it is obligatory on the people and Government of the Union. If this were not the rule, cases might often arise in which, on most important questions of foreign jurisdiction, there would be an irreconcilable difference between the executive and judicial departments. By one of these departments, a foreign island or country might be considered as at peace with the United States, whilst the other would consider it in a state of war. No well-regulated government has ever sanctioned a principle so unwise and so destructive of national character." (Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 13 Pet., 415.)

"Who is the sovereign de jure or de facto of a territory is not a judicial but a political question, the determination of which by the legislative and executive departments of any Government conclusively binds the judges, as well as all other officers, citizens, and subjects of the Government. All courts are bound to take judicial notice of the territorial extent of the jurisdiction exercised by the Government whose laws they administer, or of its recognition or denial of the sovereignty of a foreign power, as appearing from the public acts of the legislature and executive, although those acts are not formally put in evidence nor in accord with the pleadings." (Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S., 202.)

"If those departments which are intrusted with the foreign intercourse of the nation, which assert and maintain its interests against foreign powers, have unequivocally asserted its rights of dominion over a country of which it is in possession and which it claims under a treaty; if the legislature has acted on the construction thus asserted, it is not in its own courts that this construction is to be denied. A question like this, respecting the boundaries of nations, is, as has been truly said, more a political than a legal question, and in its discussion the courts of every country must respect the announced will of the legislature." (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet., 253; see also Ex parte Cooper, 143 U. S., 472.)

The ratification and existence of a treaty are political questions. (Doe v. Braden, 16 How., 635; Terlinden v. Ames, 184 U. S., 270.) Whether a particular individual is to be recognized as the accredited diplomatic representative of a foreign Government, is a political question. (In re Baiz, 135 U. S., 403.) As to which of two contesting factions is the de jure government of a State of the Union is a political question (Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1), as is the question of the necessity for calling out the militia (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19), and also the question when troops of the United States should be withdrawn from Cuba, which was presented during its military occupation. (Neely v. Henkel, 180 U. S., 109.)

With reference to a bill filed to restrain the Secretary of War and officers of the Army from executing certain acts of Congress providing for a military government in the State of Georgia, the court stated in its opinion: "That these matters, both as stated in the body of the bill and in the prayers for relief, call for the judgment of the court upon political questions and upon rights, not of person or property but of a political character, will hardly be denied. For the rights for the protection of which our authority is invoked are the rights of sovereignty, of political jurisdiction, of government, of corporate existence as a State with all its constitutional powers and privileges. No case of private rights or private property infringed or in danger of actual or threatened infringement, is presented by the bill in a judicial form for the judgment of the court." (Georgia v. Stanton, 6 Wall., 50.)

International law.—"International law is part of our law, and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice of appropriate jurisdiction as often as questions of right depending upon it are duly presented for their determination. For this purpose, where there is no treaty, no controlling executive or legislative act or judicial decision, resort must be had to the customs and usages of civilized nations; and as evidence of these to the works of jurists and commentators who, by years of labor, research, and experience, have made themselves peculiarly well acquainted with the subjects of which they treat." (The Paquete Habana, 175 U. S., 677.)

"International law, in its widest and most comprehensive sense, * * * is part of our law and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice as often as such questions are presented in litigation between man and man, duly submitted to their determination. The most certain guide, no doubt, for the decisions of such questions, is a treaty or a statute of this country. But when * * * there is no written law upon the subject, the duty still rests upon the judicial tribunals of ascertaining and declaring what the law is, whenever it becomes necessary to do so in order to determine the rights of parties to suits regularly brought before them. In doing this, the courts must obtain such aid as they can from judicial decisions, from the works of jurists and commentators, and from the acts and usages of civilized nations." (Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S., 113.)

"An act of Congress ought never to be construed to violate the law of nations, if any other possible construction remains." (The Charming Betsy, 2 Cranch, 64.)

"Until an act be passed, the court is bound by the law of nations, which is a part of the law of the land." (The Nereide, 9 Cranch, 388.)

A public vessel of war of a foreign sovereign at peace with the United States, coming into our ports and demeaning herself in a friendly manner, is exempt from the jurisdiction of the country. (The Exchange, 7 Cranch, 116.)

Admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.—"The general maritime law is only so far applicable as law in any country as it is adopted by the laws and usages of that country. In this respect it is like international law, or the laws of war, which have the effect of law in no country further than they are accepted and received as such." (The Lottawanna, 21 Wall., 558.)

The cession of all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction to the Federal Government can not be construed as a cession of the waters on which those cases may arise. This article was not intended for the cession of territory or of general jurisdiction. It was obviously designed for other purposes. It is in the eighth section of the second article that we are to look for cessions of territory and of exclusive jurisdiction. It is to be observed that the power of exclusive legislation (which is jurisdiction) is united with cession of territory which is to be the free act of the States. It is difficult to compare the two sections together without feeling a conviction, not to be strengthened by any commentary on them, that in describing the judicial power the framers of our Constitution had not in view any cession of territory, or which is essentially the same, of general jurisdiction. It is not questioned that whatever may be necessary to the full and unlimited exercise of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction is in the government of the Union. Congress may pass all laws which are necessary and proper for giving the most complete effect to this power. Still the general jurisdiction over the place subject to this grant of power adheres to the territory as a portion of the sovereignty of the State not yet given away. Accordingly, under a Federal law providing for the punishment of murder committed on the high seas, or in any river, haven, basin, or bay out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, it was held that murder committed on board a warship of the United States in Boston Harbor was not cognizable by the Federal courts, as the waters of the harbor were within the jurisdiction of the State of Massachusetts. (U. S. v. Bevens, 3 Wheat., 336.)

[CLAUSE 2. Jurisdiction of Supreme Court.]² In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

[CLAUSE 3. Jury trials; places of holding.]³ The trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

See note to Article I, section 8, clause 14, "Trials by jury not required in the Navy; and Amendments, Article VI, "Jury trial."

SECTION 3. [CLAUSE 1. Treason defined; evidence required to convict.]¹ Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or, in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

War must be actually levied against the United States.—"However flagitious may be the crime of conspiring to subvert by force the government of our country, such conspiracy is not treason. To conspire to levy war and actually to levy war are distinct offenses. * * * It is not the intention of the court to say that no individual can be guilty of this crime who has not appeared in arms against his country. On the contrary, if war be actually levied, that is, if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors. * * * It is, therefore, more safe, as well as more consonant to the principles of our Constitution, that the crime of treason should not be extended by construction to doubtful cases; and that crimes not clearly within the Constitutional definition should receive such punishment as the legislature in its wisdom may provide." (Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75; see also U. S. v. The Insurgents, 2 Dall., 335; U. S. v. Mitchell, 2 Dall., 348; U. S. v. Burr, 4 Cranch, 469, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14692; U. S. v. Hoxie, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15407.)

Foreigner may be guilty.—"As a foreigner domiciled in the country he was bound to obey all the laws of the United States not immediately relating to citizenship, and was equally amenable with citizens to the penalties prescribed for their infraction. He owed allegiance to the government of the country so long as he resided within its limits, and can claim no exemption from the statutes passed to punish treason, or the giving of aid and comfort to the insurgent states. The law on this subject is well settled and universally recognized." (Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S., 210; see also Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall., 147; U. S. v. Villato, 2 Dall., 370.)

Statutory definition.—"Whoever, owing allegiance to the United States, levies war against them or adheres to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason." (Sec. 1, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1088.)

[CLAUSE 2. Punishment of treason.]² The Congress shall have power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.

Punishment.—"Whoever is convicted of treason shall suffer death; or at the discretion of the court, shall be imprisoned not less than five years and fined not less than ten thousand dollars, to be levied on and collected out of any or all of his property, real and personal, of which he was the owner at the time of committing such treason, any sale or conveyance to the contrary notwithstanding; and every person so convicted of treason shall, moreover, be incapable of holding any office under the United States." (Sec. 2, Criminal Code, Act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1088; see also sec. 1624, R. S., art. 4.)

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1. [Full faith and credit between States as to public records, etc.] Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

SECTION 2. [CLAUSE 1. Privileges and immunities of citizens.] ¹ The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

[CLAUSE 2. Extradition between States.] ² A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

Persons in Navy.—There is no act of Congress authorizing a call by the governor of a State for the surrender of an officer of the Navy charged with having broken the peace of such State, nor any law authorizing an arrest by the Executive with a view to a forcible surrender by him for the purposes of trial. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 244. See also note to Art. I, sec. 8, clause 13, "Exemption of Federal officers and subordinates from arrest by State authorities;" Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, "Jurisdiction of civil authorities over persons in military and naval service;" and note to sec. 355, R. S.)

In the absence of legal provision for delivery to the civil authorities of a State of persons in the military service, on original demand made upon the President, it rests in "the discretion of the President in what cases he will exercise his military authority over the citizens composing the Army to constrain them to surrender themselves to the civil authorities of the States." The President in such cases may properly adopt, by analogy, the principle of the Constitution relative to the surrender of fugitives by the governors of the States, applying the details of the statute enacted thereunder, "so far as to require the demand to be made by the governor of the State or Territory to which the complainant belongs, on the copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made specifying the particular offense and authenticated as by that act is provided." (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 12.)

appropriate jurisdiction of a charge in its military relations, it would be the bounden duty of the military authorities to maintain their jurisdiction and to yield it only to an order of the President for good cause or to the ultimate decision of the law by the Supreme Court of the United States. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, 429.)

In cases where a person in the Navy is desired by State authorities for trial upon criminal charges the Secretary of the Navy in practice authorizes his surrender by the immediate commanding officer of the man upon presentation of warrant in due form and proper hands, provided that the man concerned is not a naval prisoner and satisfactory assurances are given as to his return without expense to the United States when the proceedings against him are completed, provided his return is then desired by the naval authorities. This applies to cases where the man is serving at a navy yard or other place within the limits of the State which desires his surrender. In other cases—that is, where the man is outside the State—"requisition for the delivery of the party must be made by the governor or chief executive of such State, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, showing that the party desired is charged with a crime in that State for which he could be extradited under the Constitution of the United States, the enactments of Congress, and the laws of the State desiring his delivery." (See G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914, which contains detailed instructions concerning the delivery of men to civil authorities; see also sec. 5278, R. S., as to interstate extradition of fugitives from justice.)

[CLAUSE 3. Persons held to service or labor.] ³ No Person held to Service or Labour in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labour, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labour may be due.

SECTION 3. [CLAUSE 1. Admission and formation of new States.] ¹ New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

[CLAUSE 2. Power of Congress over territory and other property.] ² The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

- I. POWER OF CONGRESS OVER TERRITORY.
- II. GOVERNMENT OF CEDED AND CONQUERED TERRITORY.
- III. MILITARY GOVERNOR'S POWER IN ABSENCE OF LEGISLATION.
- IV. STATUS OF INSULAR POSSESSIONS.
- V. APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTION TO TERRITORIES.
- VI. STATUS OF INHABITANTS OF INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

I. POWER OF CONGRESS OVER TERRITORY.

Sources of power to govern territories.—“The term territory as here used is merely descriptive of one kind of property and is equivalent to the word lands. And Congress has the same power over it as over any other property belonging to the United States; and this power is vested in Congress without limitation, and has been considered the foundation upon which the territorial governments rest.” (U. S. v. Gratiot, 14 Pet., 526.)

“The power of Congress to organize territorial governments and make laws for their inhabitants arises not so much from the clause in the Constitution in regard to disposing of and making rules and regulations concerning the territory and other property of the United States as from the ownership of the country in which its territories are, and the right of exclusive sovereignty which must exist in the National Government and can be found nowhere else.” (U. S. v. Kagama, 118 U. S., 375.)

The power to govern “is an authority which arises not necessarily from the territorial clause of the Constitution but from the necessities of the case and from the inability of the States to act on the subject.” (De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 1.)

“The power of governing and legislating for a territory is the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire and hold property. Could this possibly be contested, the Constitution of the United States declares that ‘Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States.’” (Sere v. Pitot, 6 Cranch, 332; see also American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet., 511.)

“The power of Congress over the territories of the United States is * * * general and plenary, arising from and incidental to the right to acquire the territory itself and from the power given by the Constitution to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States. It would be absurd to hold that the United States has the power to acquire territory and no power to govern it when acquired.” (Late Corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ v. U. S., 136 U. S., 1.)

“The power there given [Art. IV, sec. 3, clause 2], whatever it may be, is confined, and was intended to be confined, to the territory which at that time belonged to or was claimed by the United States, and was within their boundaries as stated by the treaty with Great Britain, and can have no influence upon a territory afterwards acquired from a foreign Government. It was a special provision for a known and particular territory and to meet a present emergency and nothing more. A brief summary of the history of the times, as well as the careful and measured terms in which the article is framed, will show the correctness of this proposition.” (Scott v. Sandford, 19 How., 393; opinion of Chief Justice Taney.)

“There is certainly no power given by the Constitution to the Federal Government to establish or maintain colonies bordering on the United States, or at a distance, to be ruled and governed at its own pleasure; nor to enlarge its territorial limits in any way except by the admission of new States. * * * But no power is given to acquire a territory to be held and governed permanently in that character. * * * It is acquired to become a State and not to be held as a colony and governed by Congress with absolute authority; and as the propriety of admitting a new State is committed to the sound discretion of Congress, the power to acquire territory for that purpose, to be held by the United States until it is in a suitable condition to become a State upon an equal footing with the other States, must rest upon the same discretion. It is a question for the political department of the Government and not the judicial; and whatever the political department of the Government shall recognize as within the limits of the United States the judicial department is also bound to recognize and to administer in it the laws of the United States so far as they apply, and to maintain in the territory the authority and rights of the Government and also the personal rights and rights of property of the individual citizens as secured by the Constitution. All we mean to say on this point is that, as there is no express regulation in the Constitution defining the power which the General Government may exercise over a person or property of a citizen in a territory thus acquired, the court must necessarily look to the provisions and principles of the Constitution and its distribution of powers for the rules and principles by which its decision must be governed." (Scott v. Sandford, 19 How., 393; opinion of Chief Justice Taney.)

II. GOVERNMENT OF CEDED AND CONQUERED TERRITORY.

Government of conquered territory during war.—See note to Article I, section 8, clause 11.

Government of conquered and ceded territory after war.—The government established by the military commanders, by authority of the President as Commander-in-Chief, in upper California, which was conquered by the United States forces during the War with Mexico, lawfully continued in existence after the treaty of peace by which the territory was formally annexed to the United States, and until Congress had legislated for its government. "The territory had been ceded as a conquest, and was to be preserved and governed as such until the sovereignty to which it had passed had legislated for it. That sovereignty was the United States, under the Constitution, by which power had been given to Congress to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, with power also to admit new States into this Union, with only such limitations as are expressed in the section in which this power is given. The government of which Col. Mason was the executive, had its origin in the lawful exercise of a belligerent right over a conquered territory. It had been instituted during the war by the command of the President of the United States. It was the government when the territory was ceded as a conquest, and it did not cease, as a matter of course, or as a necessary consequence of the restoration of peace. The President might have dissolved it by withdrawing the Army and Navy officers who administered it, but he did not do so. Congress could have put an end to it, but that was not done. The right inference from the inaction of both is, that it was meant to be continued until it had been legislatively changed. No presumption of a contrary intention can be made. Whatever may have been the causes of delay, it must be presumed that the delay was consistent with the true policy of the Government. And the more so as it was continued until the people of the territory met in convention to form a State government, which was subsequently recognized by Congress under its powers to admit new States into the Union." (Cross v. Harrison, 16 How., 164.)

"The opinion [Cross v. Harrison] which is a long one, establishes the three following propositions: (1) That under the war power the military governor of California was authorized to prescribe a scale of duties upon importations from foreign countries to San Francisco and to collect the same through a collector appointed by himself until the ratification of the treaty of peace. (2) That after such ratification duties were legally exacted under the tariff laws of the United States, which took effect immediately. (3) That the civil government established in California continued from the necessities of the case until Congress provided a Territorial government." (De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 1.)

"We have no doubt, however, that from the necessities of the case, the right to administer the government of Porto Rico continued in the military commander after the ratification of the treaty and until further action by Congress." (Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S., 222.)

"By the ratification of the treaty of peace, Porto Rico ceased to be subject to the Crown of Spain and became subject to the legislative power of Congress. But the civil government of the United States can not extend immediately and of its own force over conquered and ceded territory. Theoretically Congress might prepare and enact a scheme of civil government to take effect immediately upon the cession, but practically there always have been delays and always will be. Time is required for a study of the situation and for the maturing and enacting of an adequate scheme of civil government. In the meantime, pending the action of Congress, there is no civil power under our system of government, not even that of the President as civil executive, which can take the place of the government which has ceased to exist by the cession. Is it possible that under such circumstances there must be an interregnum? We think clearly not. The authority to govern such ceded territory is found in the laws applicable to conquest and cession. That authority is the military power under the control of the President as Commander in Chief." (Santiago v. Noguera, 214 U. S., 260.)

Guam and Tutuila.—"The political status of these islands is anomalous. Neither the Constitution nor the laws of the United States have been extended to them, and the only administrative authority existing in them is that derived mediately or immediately from the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. On December 23, 1898, the President placed the island of Guam under the control of the Department of the Navy with direction that the Secretary 'will take such steps as may be necessary to establish the authority of the United States and to give it the necessary protection and government'; and in pursuance of the authority thus conferred the then Secretary appointed a naval officer as 'naval governor of the island of Guam, this duty being in addition to your (his) duty as commander of a division of the Asiatic Fleet.' And on February 19, 1900, the President likewise turned over to your [Navy] department the control of the island of Tutuila and the other islands of the Samoan group belonging to the United States for the purposes of a naval station. A naval officer was detailed by the Secretary to assume command of such station, the order concluding as follows: 'Your position as commandant will invest you with authority over the islands in the group within the limits of the station.' In the one case, therefore, a naval governor was appointed, and in the other the commandant was invested with gubernatorial functions over the islands in the group embraced within the limits of the station." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 292, holding that commissions in the usual form may be issued by the President to the naval officers serving as governors of these islands; see also 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 59, 128, 242.)

"Guam is an unorganized territory of small extent, concerning which Congress has abstained from legislating almost wholly; * * * Congress will doubtless, at the proper time, take up the subject and legislate for Guam, either by special laws fitted to its situation and condition, or by extending to it, as it did in the case of Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, the general laws of the United States not locally inapplicable." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 128; see also Annual Report of Secretary of the Navy, 1907, pp. 25, 26, recommending that Congress by legislation provide a system of government for these islands.)

In Guam "a complete government has been instituted and conducted by the Navy Department through an officer of the Navy appointed as governor by the Secretary and commissioned by the President under an order of President McKinley * * *. This order was dated December 23, 1898, and of course was an exercise of the war power, and the executive government thus established seems to have survived and continued since the ratification of the treaty, with the silent acquiescence of Congress, in accordance with the doctrine that a temporary and provisional government of this nature continues ex necessitate rei until further action by Congress. (Dooley v. United States, 182 U. S., 222, citing Cross v. Harrison, 16 How., 164.) The Guam government did not grow out of a military reservation, but was a military government of the entire island in consequence of occupation and conquest from Spain." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction in a habeas corpus proceeding instituted against the Secretary of the Navy to inquire into the grounds of the detention of a person in the island of Guam pursuant to the sentence of the civil court established in that island. "We are compelled to give a negative answer to the question, notwithstanding it may possibly be that the party on whose behalf the petition is presented is restrained of his liberty under the order of a tribunal unknown to the Constitution and law, and is without certain remedy in any other court." (McGowan v. Moody, 22 App. D. C., 148.)

Guam having been ceded to the United States by the Treaty of Paris of December 10, 1898, was necessarily governed by the military power of this country because the island has never been organized as a Territory. Those acts of Congress which provide for the punishment of offenses not specially provided for by any law of the United States and which also provide for the trial of such offenses in courts of the United States Territories provided with organized Territorial government do not exclude the exercise of the military authority to punish offenders by virtue of the regulations. (Woog v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 80.)

The existing governments in Guam and Samoa have been recognized by Congress in various enactments, as, for example, the act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stat., 552), providing for the acknowledgment of deeds, etc., affecting lands in the District of Columbia or any territory of the United States.

III. MILITARY GOVERNOR'S POWER IN ABSENCE OF LEGISLATION.

Authority of military commander.—"It is a general rule of public law, recognized and acted upon by the United States, that whenever political jurisdiction and legislative power over any territory are transferred from one nation or sovereign to another, the municipal laws of the country—that is, laws which are intended for the protection of private rights—continue in force until abrogated or changed by the new government or sovereign. * * * As a matter of course, all laws, ordinances, and regulations in conflict with the political character, institutions, and constitution of the new government are at once displaced. Thus * * * the laws of a country in support of an established religion or abridging the freedom of the press, or authorizing cruel and unusual punishments and the like would at once cease to be of obligatory force, without any declaration to that effect; and the laws of the country on other subjects would necessarily be superseded by existing laws of the new government upon the same matters. But with respect to other laws, affecting the possession, use, and transfer of property and designed to secure good order and peace in the community and promote its health and prosperity, which are strictly of a municipal character, the rule is general that a change of government leaves them in force until by direct action of the new government they are altered or repealed." (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McGlimm, 114 U. S., 547.)

[The joint resolution of Congress providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands as a part of the territory of the United States contained a provision that "the municipal legislation of the Hawaiian Islands * * * not inconsistent with this joint resolution nor contrary to the Constitution of the United States, nor to any existing treaty of the United States, shall remain in force until the Congress of the United States shall otherwise determine." Held, that the laws of Hawaii continued in effect, which provided for the trial of criminal offenses without compliance with the requirements of the Federal Constitution as to presentment and indictment by grand jury and trial by jury. (Hawaii v. Mankichi, 190 U. S., 197.)]

"While his [military commander's] power is necessarily despotic, this must be understood rather in an administrative than in a legislative sense. While in legislating for a conquered territory he may disregard the laws of that country, he is not wholly above the laws of his own. For instance, it is clear that while a military commander during the Civil War was in occupation of a Southern port he could impose duties upon merchandise arriving from abroad, it would hardly be contended that he could also impose duties upon merchandise arriving from ports of his own country. His power to administer would be absolute, but his power to legislate would not be without certain restrictions—in other words, they would not extend beyond the necessities of the case.” (Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S., 222.)

An order issued by the officer in command of the forces of the United States in South Carolina during the period of reconstruction, wholly annulling a decree rendered by a court of chancery in that State in a case within its jurisdiction, was void. It was an arbitrary stretch of authority, needful to no good end that can be imagined. Whether Congress could have conferred the power to do such an act is a question not presented. “It is an unbending rule of law that the exercise of military power where the rights of the citizen are concerned shall never be pushed beyond what the exigency requires.” (Raymond v. Thomas, 91 U. S., 712.)

“The instructions to the governor [of Guam], dated January 12, 1899, prior to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain, contained the following: ‘Within the absolute domain of naval authority, which necessarily is and must remain supreme in the ceded territory until the legislation of the United States shall otherwise provide, the municipal laws of the territory, in respect to private rights and property and the repression of crime, are to be considered as continuing in force and to be administered by the ordinary tribunals as far as practicable. The operations of civil and municipal government are to be performed by such officers as may accept the supremacy of the United States by taking the oath of allegiance or by officers chosen as far as may be practicable from the inhabitants of the island.’ These instructions seem not to have been superseded in June and July, 1900. Their recognition of the continuance in force of the municipal laws of the territory was not intended as more than a recognition of what would have been presumed in the absence of instructions and can not be regarded as intended to deny the power of the governor to alter the laws. They were continued in force as to the inhabitants among themselves, but not to control the governor; that is to say, the government itself. His power as military governor was intended to be plenary. He had authority to do what the exigencies of military government required, and held the supreme legislative, executive, and judicial authority of the island. At that time, in that distant and little-known island, the President could not do otherwise than leave him a large discretion, and his acts should not be held void upon strictly technical reasoning.” (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 59.)

The naval governor of Guam “exercises plenary powers, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Navy and, of course, of the President, over all public affairs of the island of Guam, including the organization and procedure of the local courts in civil and criminal matters;” his authority extends “to the granting of reprieves and pardons, one of the highest prerogatives of sovereignty and executive power,” and includes “the modification of laws and the abolition and institution of courts;” he “has authority to prescribe the form of penal code to be administered and to modify said code at his pleasure, subject to the approval of his superiors.” (File 9351-976, Dec. 3, 1910.)

In a case in which an enlisted man of the Marine Corps was sentenced by the civil courts in Guam to “banishment for six months,” this being an undesirable punishment to impose upon members of the Government forces, the governor of Guam may be directed by the Secretary of the Navy to remit that portion of the sentence in the case presented and “to issue immediately the necessary order or decree abolishing the punishment of banishment as an appropriate sentence to be adjudged by the civil courts of said island in the cases of all persons in the naval or military service of the United States.” (File 9351-976, Dec. 3, 1910.)

In the absence of congressional legislation, authority of the naval governor of Guam is supreme. He is accordingly authorized to designate place of confinement for prisoner of the naval government of Guam, within territory under sovereignty of the United States. His action in designating a prison in the Philippine Islands as place of confinement meets with approval of the Secretary of the Navy in the case of a civilian convicted by the courts of Guam of misappropriation of public funds while postmaster at Guam. (File 9351-1436:4, June 3, 1915.)

IV. STATUS OF INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

Status of conquered and ceded territory after war.—Military possession of foreign territory is not of itself sufficient to change its foreign character. (See cases noted under Art. I, sec. 8, clause 11, “Power to acquire territory.”) “Nor is a treaty ceding such territory sufficient without a surrender of possession.” But there is no authority “for holding that a district ceded to and in the possession of the United States remains for any purpose a foreign country. Both these conditions must exist to produce a change of nationality for revenue purposes.” (De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 1, as to status of Porto Rico; see also Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S., 236; and Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 263.)

“The theory that a country remains foreign with respect to the tariff laws until Congress has acted by embracing it within the customs union presupposes that a country may be domestic for one purpose and foreign for another. It may undoubtedly become necessary for the adequate administration of a domestic territory to pass a special act providing the proper machinery and officers, as the President would have no authority, except under the war power, to administer it himself; but no act is necessary to make it domestic territory if once it has been ceded to the United States." (De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 1.)

"The Philippines, like Porto Rico, became by virtue of the treaty ceded conquered territory, or territory ceded by way of indemnity. The territory ceased to be situated as Castine was when occupied by the British forces in the War of 1812, or as Tampico was when occupied by the troops of the United States during the Mexican War, 'cases of temporary possession of territory by lawful and regular governments at war with the country of which the territory so possessed was a part.' * * *. The Philippines were not simply occupied, but acquired, and, having been granted and delivered to the United States by their former master, were no longer under the sovereignty of any foreign nation." (Fourteen Diamond Rings v. U. S., 183 U. S., 177; see also Lincoln v. U. S., 197 U. S., 427.)

A port in the island of Guam is not a "port of the United States" within the meaning of section 4347, Revised Statutes, as amended, prohibiting the transportation of merchandise in foreign bottoms from one port of the United States to another port of the United States. This legislation has not been expressly extended to include trade with Guam, which is an unorganized territory of small extent, concerning which Congress has abstained from legislating almost entirely; "and I do not think, in view of this inaction of the legislative body, that we should search among old statutes for fragments of law which we can, by construction, apply to the island." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 128.)

V. APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTION TO TERRITORIES.

Whether constitutional limitations restrict Congress in legislating for Territories.—"The people of the United States, as sovereign owners of the National Territories, have supreme power over them and their inhabitants. In the exercise of this sovereign dominion they are represented by the Government of the United States, to whom all the powers of government over that subject have been delegated, subject only to such restrictions as are expressed in the Constitution, or are necessarily implied in its terms, or in the purposes and objects of the power itself; for it may well be admitted in respect to this as to every power of society over its members, that it is not absolute and unlimited." (Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S., 15.)

"Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments; but these limitations would exist rather by inference and the general spirit of the Constitution, from which Congress derives all its powers, than by any express and distinct application of its provisions." (Mormon Church Case, 136 U. S., 1; American Publishing Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S., 464.)

"While, therefore, there is no express or implied limitation on Congress in exercising its power to create local governments for any or all of the Territories, by which that body is restrained from the widest latitude of discretion, it does not follow that there may not be inherent, although unexpressed, principles which are the basis of all free governments, which can not be with immunity transcended.

* * * But this does not suggest that every express limitation of the Constitution which is applicable has not force, but only signifies that even in cases where there is no direct command of the Constitution which applies, there may nevertheless be restrictions of so fundamental a nature that they can not be transgressed, although not expressed in so many words in the Constitution." (Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 244.)

"Undoubtedly there are general prohibitions in the Constitution in favor of the liberty and property of the citizen, which are not mere regulations as to form and manner in which a conceded power may be exercised, but which are absolute denials of all authority under any circumstances or conditions, to do particular acts. In the nature of things, limitations of this character can not, under any circumstances, be transcended, because of complete absence of power." (Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 244.)

"There is a clear distinction between such prohibitions as go to the very root of the power of Congress to act at all, irrespective of time and place, and such as are operative only 'throughout the United States,' or among the several States. Thus, when the Constitution declares that 'no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed,' and that 'no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States,' it goes to the competency of Congress to pass a bill of that description. Perhaps the same remark may be applied to the fifth amendment, that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech; or of the press; or the right of the people to peacefully assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.' We do not wish, however, to be understood as expressing an opinion how far the Bill of Rights contained in the first eight amendments is of general and how far of local application. * * * We suggest, without intending to decide, that there may be a distinction between certain natural rights enforced in the Constitution by prohibitions against interference with them, and what may be termed artificial or remedial rights which are peculiar to our system of jurisprudence. Of the former class are the rights to one's own religious opinions and to a public expression of them, or, as sometimes said, to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience; the right to personal liberty and individual property, to freedom of speech and of the press; to free access to courts of justice, to due process of law, and to an equal protection of the laws; to immunities from unreasonable searches and seizures, as well as cruel and unusual punishments; and to such other immunities as are indispensable to a free government." (Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 244, opinion Mr. Justice Brown.)

To hold that the prohibitions of the fourth amendment, against unreasonable searches and seizures, is a restriction upon Congress and yet not a restriction upon a government created by Congress, would be a contradiction of terms. Accordingly, held that the fourth amendment is applicable to territorial governments. (Territory v. Cutinola, 4 N. Mex., 305, 14 Pac., 809.)

"Whatever may be finally decided by the American people as to the status of these islands and their inhabitants—whether they shall be introduced into the sisterhood of States or be permitted to form independent governments—it does not follow that in the meantime, awaiting that decision, the people are in the matter of personal rights unprotected by the provisions of our Constitution and subject to the merely arbitrary control of Congress. Even if regarded as aliens, they are entitled, under the principles of the Constitution, to be protected in life, liberty, and property. This has been frequently held by this court in respect to the Chinese, even when aliens, not possessed of the political rights of citizens of the United States. * * * We do not desire, however, to anticipate the difficulties which would naturally arise in this connection, but merely to disclaim any intention to hold that the inhabitants of these territories are subject to an unrestrained power on the part of Congress to deal with them upon the theory that they have no rights which it is bound to respect." (Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 244, opinion Mr. Justice Brown.)

"The Constitution speaks, not simply to the States in their organized capacities, but to all peoples, whether of States or Territories, who are subject to the authority of the United States." (Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 244, opinion Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting.)

"There is nothing in the history of the Constitution or of the original amendments to justify the assertion that the people of this district [District of Columbia] may be lawfully deprived of the benefit of any of the constitutional guaranties of life, liberty, and property—especially of the privilege of trial by jury in criminal cases." (Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S., 540; see also Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S., 5.)

See Rasmussen v. U. S. (197 U. S., 522), holding the provisions of the Constitution applicable to Alaska; Neely v. Henkel (180 U. S., 122), holding Constitution not applicable to Cuba during military occupation by United States; Hawaii v. Mankichi (190 U. S., 211), as to Hawaii, holding that "most, if not all, the privileges and immunities contained in the Bill of Rights of the Constitution were intended to apply from the moment of annexation;" see also Dorr v. U. S. (195 U. S., 138) as to Philippines; and Reynolds v. U. S. (98 U. S., 145) and Wilkerson v. Utah (99 U. S., 133) as to Territory of Utah.

By section 1891, Revised Statutes, it was provided that "The Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within all the organized Territories, and in every Territory hereafter organized, as elsewhere within the United States." ["Guam is an unorganized territory * * *."] (25 Op.

Atty. Gen., 128.) So also are the Virgin Islands of the United States, notwithstanding the act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., 1132), providing a temporary government therefor. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 118, construing sec. 1860, R. S., as amended.)

When the Constitution has once been formally extended by Congress to Territories, neither Congress nor the Territorial legislature can enact laws inconsistent therewith. (Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 270.)

For decisions as to whether constitutional limitations restrict Congress in legislating for the Navy, see note to Article I, section 8, clause 14.

VI. STATUS OF INHABITANTS OF INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

Citizenship in territories.—The treaty of peace with Spain, ceding to the United States Porto Rico, Guam, and the Philippine Islands, provided that "the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress." The inhabitants of the Philippine Islands were declared "citizens of the Philippine Islands and as such entitled to the protection of the United States." (Act July 1, 1902, 32 Stat., 691.) The inhabitants of Porto Rico were declared "citizens of Porto Rico and as such entitled to the protection of the United States." (Act Apr. 12, 1900, 31 Stat., 77.) The naturalization act of June 29, 1906, section 30 (34 Stat., 606), provided for the naturalization, upon compliance therewith, of persons "not citizens who owe permanent allegiance to the United States." Inhabitants of Guam desiring to become citizens of the United States may be naturalized by application to a court of competent jurisdiction in the United States, but can not be naturalized by any court in Guam. (File 26252-90, Feb. 27, 1914, see also file 26252-96, Feb. 10, 1915; compare 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 521, as to Porto Rico, and see note to amendments, Article XIV.) The citizens of Hawaii were made citizens of the United States by act of April 30, 1900 (31 Stat., 141).

A citizen of Porto Rico is not eligible for appointment as second lieutenant in the Marine Corps (file 6730-04; as to eligibility for employment at navy yards, see file 3194-3 and 3194-4; and see U. S. v. Bowyer, 25 App. D. C., 121.)

By act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat., 953, sec. 5), certain "citizens of Porto Rico" were declared citizens of the United States and provision was made for the naturalization of others.

Certain Danish citizens residing in the Virgin Islands of the United States were to be held "to have accepted citizenship in the United States," and provision was made for the naturalization of others by convention between the United States and Denmark, proclaimed January 25, 1917 (39 Stat. 1706, 1712). (See file 26252-143:3, July 14, 1919.)

Native inhabitants of island possessions are not "aliens."—"Citizens of Porto Rico, whose permanent allegiance is due to the United States; who live in the peace of the dominion of the United States; the organic law of whose domicile was enacted by the United States and is enforced through officials sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, are not 'aliens' and upon their arrival by water at the ports of our mainland are not 'alien immigrants' within the intent and meaning of the act of 1891" providing for detention and deportation under certain conditions. (Gonzales v. Williams, 192 U. S., 1.)

Naturalization of natives.—"Citizens of the Philippine Islands or of Porto Rico, while not citizens of the United States, are not aliens, and, prior to the passage of the act of 1906 [34 Stat., 596], were not capable of being naturalized for two reasons: First, the naturalization laws of the United States applied only to aliens; and, second, they required a renunciation of former allegiance * * *. The effect of section 30 [act of 1906] was to make applicable to citizens of the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico those provisions which had theretofore applied only to aliens * * *. Congress did not intend to extend the privilege of citizenship to those who had become citizens of the Philippine Islands under the act of 1902, unless they were free white persons or of African nativity or descent," as required by section 2169, Revised Statutes. Accordingly, held that "a citizen of the Philippine Islands who ethnologically was one-fourth white and three-fourths brown or Malay could not be naturalized," and the fact that he had service in the Navy did not affect his status under section 2169, Revised Statutes. (In re Alverto, 198 Fed. Rep., 688; see also note to amendments, Article XIV and see naturalization act of May 9, 1918.)

For other cases, as to citizenship in general, see note to amendments, Article XIV.

SECTION 4. [States guaranteed protection and republican form of government.] The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

Use of naval vessel loaned to State for training of naval militia.—"In accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and of the laws enacted in pursuance thereof, the President, in cases not affecting the execution of the laws or the protection of the property of the United States, may use the military or naval forces of the United States within the boundaries of the several States only on application of the legislature of the State, or, in case the legislature cannot be convened, on application of the governor. In other words, it is considered that the President, except as indicated, is not legally authorized to use, or permit to be used, the naval forces under his command to assist any particular State in the maintenance of law and order within its boundaries. As a naval vessel is one of the integral and most important units going to make up the naval forces of the United States, it would seem that this prohibition to the use of the naval forces would extend to such an important part thereof as a naval vessel that is armed and equipped for war. * * * Should occasion ever arise in the future making desirable the use of the Montgomery for the purposes referred to by the State, [to quell "riots, insurrection, or defiance of civil law within the State limits"] it is considered that the only lawful manner in which the vessel could be so used would be in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, upon 'application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened)' made to the President." (File 4570-194, Mar., 15, 1915.)

ARTICLE V.

[Procedure to amend Constitution.] The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE VI.

[CLAUSE 1. Validity of debts and engagements.] ¹ All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

[CLAUSE 2. Supreme law of the land.] ² This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

[CLAUSE 3. Oaths of public officers; no religious test.] ³ The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

ARTICLE VII.

[Ratification of Constitution.] The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

DONE in Convention by the Unanimous Consent of the States present the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the Twelfth. In Witness whereof We have hereunto subscribed our Names, ARTICLES IN ADDITION TO, AND AMENDMENT OF, THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PROPOSED BY CONGRESS, AND RATIFIED BY THE LEGISLATURES OF THE SEVERAL STATES, PURSUANT TO THE FIFTH ARTICLE OF THE ORIGINAL CONSTITUTION.

[ARTICLE I.]

[Freedom of religion, speech, and press; and right of assembly and petition.]

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

The Bill of Rights.—"The law is perfectly well settled that the first 10 amendments of the Constitution, commonly known as the Bill of Rights, were not intended to lay down any novel principles of government, but simply to embody certain guaranties and immunities which we had inherited from our English ancestors, and which had from time immemorial been subject to certain well recognized exceptions arising from the necessities of the case." (Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S., 275.)

"These securities in personal liberty, thus embodied, were such as wisdom and experience had demonstrated to be necessary for the protection of those accused of crime. * * * Time has proven the discernment of our ancestors. * * * Those great and good men foresaw that troublous times would arise when rulers and people would become restive under restraint and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish ends deemed just and proper; and that the principles of Constitutional liberty would be in peril unless established by irrevocable law. * * * The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace. * * * No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 3, 120. But see note to Art. I, sec. 8, clause 11, "Military jurisdiction over civilians in time of war," and Art. I, sec. 9, clause 2.)

[ARTICLE II.]

[The right to bear arms.] A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

"The provision of the Second Amendment to the Constitution, that 'the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed,' is a limitation only on the power of Congress and the National Government, and not of the States. But in view of the fact that all citizens capable of bearing arms constitute the reserved military force of the National Government, as well as in view of its general powers, the State can not prohibit the people from keeping and bearing arms, so as to deprive the United States of their rightful resource for maintaining the public security." (Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S., 252.)

[Quartering of soldiers in houses.] No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

[ARTICLE IV.]

[Security from unreasonable searches and seizures.] The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Unreasonable searches and seizures.—"The constitutional guaranties of the right of the people to be secure in their papers against unreasonable searches and seizures extends to their papers, thus closed against inspection, wherever they may be. Whilst in the mail they can only be opened and examined under like warrant, issued upon similar oath or affirmation and particularly describing the thing to be seized, as is required when papers are subjected to search in one's own household. No law of Congress can place in the hands of officials connected with the postal service any authority to invade the secrecy of letters and such sealed packages in the mail; and all regulations adopted as to mail matter of this kind must be in subordination to the great principle embodied in the fourth amendment of the Constitution." (Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S., 727.)

"Prison authorities have no right to open and inspect letters to or sent by prisoners without the consent of such prisoners. They may, however, retain unopened letters until the prisoner is released or the letters otherwise lawfully disposed of." (Art. 68, Manual for Government of United States Naval Prisons.)

The fourth and fifth amendments "throw great light on each other. For the 'unreasonable searches and seizures' condemned in the fourth amendment are almost always made for the purpose of compelling a man to give evidence against himself, which in criminal cases is condemned in the fifth amendment; and compelling a man 'in a criminal case to be a witness against himself,' which is condemned in the fifth amendment, throws light on the question as to what is an 'unreasonable search and seizure' within the meaning of the fourth amendment. And we have been unable to perceive that the seizure of a man's private books and papers to be used in evidence against him is substantially different from compelling him to be a witness against himself." (Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S., 633.)

"The security intended to be guaranteed by the fourth amendment against wrongful search and seizures is designed to prevent violations of private security in person and property and unlawful invasion of the sanctity of the home of the citizen by officers of the law, acting under legislative or judicial sanction, and to give remedy against such usurpations when attempted. But the English and nearly all of the American cases have declined to extend this doctrine to the extent of excluding testimony which has been obtained by such means, if it is otherwise competent." (Adams v. New York, 192 U. S., 597.) But one whose property has been illegally seized and is being held by officers of the law for the purpose of using same as evidence in a criminal prosecution, may recover the possession thereof by legal proceedings and thus prevent its being used against him. (Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S., 383. See further, note to Amendments, Art. V, "Self-Crimination.")

Arrest of military offenders.—"A deserter may be arrested by a military officer, or private duly authorized to make the arrest." (In re Fair, 100 Fed. Rep., 149, 152.)

An officer of the Army may lawfully arrest a deserter and hold him for trial by court-martial without a warrant. (Hutchings v. Van Bokkellen, 34 Me., 126; cited in Kurtz v. Mollitt, 115 U. S., 504.)

"Of course the right of military officers, whether of the Army or Navy, to apprehend and return deserters is interwoven in the very fabric of the organization and administration both of the Army and the Navy." (File 5621-1, Nov. 17, 1906, Attorney General to Secretary of the Navy.)

In the absence of legislation, "a police officer of a State, or a private citizen, has no authority as such, without any warrant or military order, to arrest and detain a deserter from the Army of the United States." (Kurtz v. Mollitt, 115 U. S., 487; compare file 5621, letters from Attorney General to Secretary of the Navy, Sept. 18 and Nov. 17, 1906.)

It has been provided by statute "that it shall be lawful for any civil officer having authority under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, or District to arrest offenders, to summarily arrest a deserter from the Navy or Marine Corps of the United States and deliver him into the custody of the naval authorities." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 15, 35 Stat., 622; see also act June 18, 1898, 30 Stat., 484, with reference to the Army.)

"Deserters may legally be arrested (1) by any officer or duly authorized enlisted man in the naval service; (2) by any civil officer having general or special authority to arrest offenders within any given jurisdiction; (3) by private detectives who are authorized to make arrests; and (4) by any person who is expressly authorized by the naval authorities to arrest deserters." (File 26516-92:1, Sept. 27, 1912; see also 26516-218.)

"When a deserter is delivered to the Navy, the fact that the person who arrested him was not authorized to make such an arrest is not legal ground for his discharge from naval custody * * *. This is a matter in which the Government has no concern, persons who assume to arrest deserters without legal authority therefor doing so at their peril." (File 26516-92:1, Sept. 27, 1912.)

"A reward for the arrest of a deserter or straggler with authorized expenses incurred in his return to the service may be paid to a private detective agency notwithstanding the prohibition in the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 591), against the employment in any Government service of an 'employee of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, or similar agency.'" (File 26516-38, Dec. 3, 1910; file 26516-92:1, Sept. 27, 1912.)

The Navy Department "desires that detective work in connection with the apprehension and delivery of deserters from the Navy in the United States shall be confined to recognized police officers. It is considered undignified and undesirable to encourage or employ the services of private detectives or agents for such purposes, and the practice will be discontinued." (File 24918, July 17, 1907.)

[ARTICLE V.]

[Indictment required; provision against double jeopardy and compulsory self-incrimination; protection of life, liberty, and property.] No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

I. INDICTMENT BY GRAND JURY.

II. PROTECTION AGAINST DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

III. COMPELLING PERSON TO BE WITNESS AGAINST HIMSELF.

IV. PROTECTION OF LIFE, LIBERTY, AND PROPERTY.

V. PRESENCE OF ACCUSED AT TRIAL.

VI. REMEDY WHEN DUE PROCESS DENIED.

I. INDICTMENT BY GRAND JURY.

Infamous crime.—A crime is "infamous" where it is punishable by imprisonment in a state prison or penitentiary, whether the accused is or is not sentenced or put to hard labor. "In determining whether the crime is infamous, the question is, Whether it is one for which the statute authorizes the court to award an infamous punishment, and not whether the punishment ultimately awarded is an infamous one." (In re Claasen, 140 U. S., 200.)

"What punishments may be considered as infamous may be affected by the changes of public opinion from one age to another. In former times, being put in the stocks was not considered as necessarily infamous. And by the first judiciary act of the United States whipping was classed with moderate fines and short terms of imprisonment in limiting the criminal jurisdiction of the District courts to cases 'where no other punishment than whipping, not exceeding thirty stripes, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months, is to be inflicted.' * * * But at the present day either stocks or whipping might be thought an infamous punishment. For more than a century imprisonment at hard labor in the State prison or penitentiary or other institution has been considered an infamous punishment in England and America." (Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S., 417.)

Grand jury.—The limitation, "When in actual service in time of war or public danger," in this article, refers only to the militia, and does not apply to the regular land and naval forces. In respect to these latter, the power of Congress is irrespective of the actual condition of the country, and the same in time of peace as in time of war or public danger. (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 114; In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596; see also Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S., 700.)

(As to trials by courts-martial, see note to Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14.)

II. PROTECTION AGAINST DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

Double jeopardy.—By the Articles of War it is provided that "No person [in the Army] shall be tried a second time for the same offense." (Art. 102, sec. 1342, R. S.) There is no similar statute with reference to the Navy. As to whether this amendment of the Constitution applies to the Army and Navy, see note to Article I, section 8, clause 14, "Whether Constitutional limitations restrict Congress in legislating for Navy."

By the Articles for the Government of the Navy it is provided that "it shall be his [convening authority's] duty either to remit any part or the whole of any sentence [of a summary court-martial] the execution of which would, in the opinion of the surgeon or senior medical officer on board, given in writing, produce serious injury to the health of the person sentenced; or to submit the case again, without delay, to the same or to another summary court-martial, which shall have the power, upon the testimony already taken, to remit the former punishment and to assign some other of the authorized punishments in the place thereof." (Art. 33, sec. 1624, R. S.)

"The jeopardy of the law means a real peril, originally of life or limb, and always of substantial punishment or penalty. The provision of the Constitution is (fifth amendment): 'Nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb.' Another fundamental idea is that there must be a trial upon an indictment for an offense, or upon some equivalent charge and presentment, as by court-martial, submitting a definite issue and involving conviction or acquittal. The person must be in danger of condemnation; a mere inquiry or other informal proceeding (informal in a judicial sense), ending in a reprimand, does not satisfy either element of the principle of second jeopardy. Of course, if there is a trial in some form which might result in conviction and punishment, the jeopardy is none the less complete and valid as a bar to another trial because, in fact, it issues in a simple rebuke; for absolute acquittal, if the peril is real, is equally a bar. These principles indicate the logic underlying the old common-law pleas of autrefois convict and autrefois acquit." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 623.)

An investigation by a board of inquest or by a court of inquiry is not a "trial" in any sense of an issue or of an accused person. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 623.)

The reprimand of an officer by the commander in chief of a fleet, or by the Secretary of the Navy, does not bar subsequent trial by court-martial of the same officer for the same offense. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 623; 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 622.)

Suspension of an officer from duty by his commanding officer, although imposed as punishment for an offense, does not bar subsequent trial by general court-martial for the same offense. (C. M. O. No. 7, 1914; C. M. O. No. 31, 1914.)

The commanding officer of a naval vessel in imposing punishment is not a court; his investigation of a charge is not a trial; his finding is not a conviction or acquittal; and the punishment which he decides to impose is not a sentence. (File 26251-6297:9, Dec. 28, 1914; C. M. O. 7, 1914; C. M. O. 31, 1914.)

A plea before a court-martial of a former arrest and discharge is bad; a former trial only is a defense under the Articles of War. Also, under this amendment, "a mere arrest, even in cases punishable in life or limb, is not considered as constituting this jeopardy. The principle is derived to us immediately from the common law. It is a maxim of this law, 'that a man shall not be brought into danger of his life more than once for the same offense;' but, to give the benefit of this maxim, it is necessary that he should have been actually acquitted or convicted on a former trial, and the record of this fact must be produced." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

While not a legal bar to trial, it is "not free from legal censure" to bring an officer of the Army to trial for a charge which has once been "knowingly passed over." In such case the charge "ought not, either in candor or in justice, to be in future brought into question." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

"The weight of authority, as well as decisions of this court, have sanctioned the rule that a person has been in jeopardy when he is regularly charged with a crime before a tribunal properly organized and competent to try him; certainly so after acquittal." (Kepner v. U. S., 195 U. S., 100, citing Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509; see also Ex parte Glenn, 111 Fed. Rep., 261.)

"Undoubtedly in those jurisdictions where a trial of one accused of crime can only be by a jury and a verdict of acquittal or conviction must be by a jury, no legal jeopardy can attach until a jury has been called and charged with the deliverance of the accused. But protection being against a second trial for the same offense, it is obvious that where one has been tried before a competent tribunal having jurisdiction he has been put in jeopardy as much as he could have been in those tribunals where a jury is alone competent to convict or acquit." (Kepner v. U. S., 195 U. S., 100.)

"This principle is derived to us immediately from the common law." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 294; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 204.) It embodies the common-law rule in criminal trials, as expressed in the pleas of "autres fois acquit," or a former acquittal, and "autres fois convict" or a former conviction. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 240.)

Court must have jurisdiction.—"We assume as indisputable, on principle and authority, that before a person can be said to have been put in jeopardy of life or limb the court in which he was acquitted or convicted must have had jurisdiction to try him for the offense charged." (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 345.)

Acquittal on defective indictment is bar to second trial.—"It is, then, the settled law of this court that former jeopardy includes one who has been acquitted by a verdict duly rendered, although no judgment be entered on the verdict, and it was found upon a defective indictment. The protection is not * * * against the peril of second punishment, but against being tried for the same offense." (Keppier v. U. S., 195 U. S., 100.)

"A general verdict of acquittal upon the issue of not guilty to an indictment undertaking to charge murder, and not objected to before the verdict as insufficient in that respect, is a bar to a second indictment for the same killing." (U. S. v. Ball, 163 U. S., 662.)

"As to the defendant who had been acquitted by the verdict duly rendered and received, the court could take no other action than to order his discharge. The verdict of acquittal was final and could not be reviewed on error or otherwise without putting him twice in jeopardy and thereby violating the Constitution. However it may be in England, in this country a verdict of acquittal, although not followed by any judgment, is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense." (U. S. v. Ball, 163 U. S., 662.)

"As the judgment [against an accused] stands before he appeals, it is a complete bar to any further prosecution for the offense set forth in the indictment or of any lesser degree thereof. No power can wrest from him the right to so use that judgment." (Trono v. U. S., 199 U. S., 521.)

Returning record of court-martial for revision of its findings or sentence does not constitute trying the accused a second time for the same offense, in violation of this article. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13; Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553; Carter v. McClaghry, 183 U. S., 365; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 204, 205.)

"Undoubtedly, errors are committed by courts-martial which a civil tribunal would regard as sufficient ground for a reversal for their judgments if it were sitting as an appellate court. But there is always this radical difference between an appellate court sitting for the correction of errors and a civil court into which the record of a court-martial is collateral; in the former there is not a failure of justice: the appellate court may reverse a judgment or prescribe another or award a new trial; in the latter the court must either give full effect to the sentence or pronounce it wholly void." (Swain v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 217.)

When a naval court-martial is ordered by the convening authority to revise its proceedings, new evidence shall not be admissible. (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 375.)

"A court-martial on reversal does not rehear the case; it only reconsiders the record for the purpose of correcting or modifying any conclusions thereon. The true analogy of such a reversal, to take an example from the practice of civil courts, is the case of a jury sent out by the court to reconsider the verdict. Such is the whole current of authorities, as well in the United States as in Great Britain." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 205.)

Offenses different in degree only.—An acquittal of murder may be pleaded in bar of an indictment for manslaughter based upon the same killing; "because the latter charge was included in the former, and if it had so appeared on the trial the defendant might have been convicted of the inferior offense;" and an acquittal of manslaughter will preclude a future prosecution for murder, "for if he were innocent of the modified crime he could not be guilty of the same fact, with the addition of malice and design." (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 333, 350, quoting Chitty Cr. L.)

Offenses violating both military and civil law.—"The subject of the civil responsibility of the Army was very carefully considered by Attorney General Cushing in Steiner's case (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413) and the conclusion reached that an act criminal both by military and general law is subject to be tried either by a military or civil court, and that a conviction or acquittal by the civil authorities of the offense against the general law does not discharge from responsibility for the military offense involved in the same facts. The converse of this proposition is equally true." (U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710, 712.) [Note: In the Steiner case the Attorney General's opinion related to the jurisdiction of military and State courts, in a case where the offense was cognizable by both.]

But where both courts derive their jurisdiction from the United States, an acquittal by one may be pleaded in bar of trial by the other for an offense substantially identical, although called by a different name. Thus the acquittal by court-martial of a person belonging to the Army upon a charge of homicide was a valid bar to a trial of the same person for the same homicide by the courts of the Philippine Islands. (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 333.)

"It may be difficult at times to determine whether the offense for which an officer or soldier is being tried is in every substantial respect the same offense for which he had been previously tried. We will not therefore attempt to formulate any rule by which every conceivable case must be solved." (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 355.)

"Undoubtedly the general rule is that the jurisdiction of civil courts is concurrent as to offenses triable before courts-martial." (Franklin v. U. S., 216 U. S., 559, 568, citing 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, 419, U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. Rep., 710.)

Offenses violating the laws of two governments.—"Every citizen of the United States is also a citizen of a State or Territory. He may be said to owe allegiance to two sovereigns, and may be liable to punishment for an infraction of the laws of either. The same act may be an offense or transgression of the laws of both. Thus, an assault upon the marshal of the United States, and hindering him in the execution of legal process, is a high offense against the United States, for which the perpetrator is liable to punishment; and the same act may be also a gross breach of the peace of the State, a riot, an assault, or a murder, and subject the same person to a punishment, under the State laws, for a misdemeanor or felony. That either or both may (if they see fit) punish such an offender can not be doubted. Yet it can not be truly averred that the offender has been twice punished for the same offense; but only that by one act he has committed two offenses, for each of which he is justly punishable." (Moore v. Illinois, 14 How., 20.)

"We do not call in question the correctness of the general doctrine * * * that the same act may in some instances be an offense against two governments, and that the transgressor may be held liable to punishment by both when the punishment is of such a character that it can be twice inflicted, or by either of the two governments if the punishment from its nature can be only once suffered. It may well be that the satisfaction which the transgressor makes for the violated law of the United States is no atonement for the violated law of Tennessee." (Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509.)

The trial and punishment of a naval officer by the court of a foreign country for violating the laws of that country is not a bar to his trial by naval court-martial for violating the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.) by the same acts. (File 26251-8144, Nov. 22, 1913.)

New trial upon motion of accused.—If the accused seeks a new trial, or appeals from the judgment against him and asks for its reversal, he can not thereafter plead former jeopardy if he is successful in obtaining a reversal of the judgment. And if the judgment convicted him of a lesser offense than that charged and thereby acquitted him of the greater offense, he can not avail himself even of that part of the judgment which contained an acquittal, but upon his new trial may be convicted of the greater offense. By seeking a new trial the accused waives his right to the plea of former jeopardy. (Trono v. U. S., 199 U. S., 521; U. S. v. Ball, 163 U. S., 662.)

Where an error has been committed in a trial by court-martial which is prejudicial to the accused, and the accused himself seeks to have the conviction disapproved and a new trial granted, he thereby waives his right to plead former jeopardy when brought to trial a second time for the same offense, and the court-martial is compelled to proceed with the trial. It was not the intention of the law to deny the accused the right to a new trial where prejudicial error has been committed and he himself seeks it. "Is there any mode by which his honor can be rescued from the imputation thrown upon it by an improper sentence of a first court, except that of ordering a second?" (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 233; see also 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 200.)

This principle is designed for the benefit of the accused, not for his prejudice; and "there is no principle in law better settled than that a party has the right to waive a rule designed merely for his own benefit." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 233.)

"This provision is in accordance with a well-known doctrine of the law of England to the same effect. That is to say, by the common law, as understood and administered both in England and the United States, there can not be a new trial at the instance of the Government, in a case of treason or felony, though there may be in a case of misdemeanor where a party is alleged to be improperly convicted, but not where he has been acquitted." (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 204, 205.)

"The granting of new trials after conviction and approval of sentence is not in accordance with the practice of military and naval courts. * * * It is to be noted that it is only upon and as an incident to a disapproval of a sentence that a new trial can be allowed; after approval there can legally be no such proceeding." Any newly discovered matter of defense deemed to be of such importance as in a proceeding before a civil court to be made the basis of an application for a new trial may, in a naval case, be presented for consideration in connection with an application for Executive clemency." (File 6674-38, Apr. 30, 1907; C. M. O. 92-1918, p. 16.)

"[The Secretary of the Navy may set aside the proceedings, or remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial convened by his order or by that of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat., 621.)]

Trial interrupted before completion.—"The law has invested courts of justice with the authority to discharge a jury from giving any verdict whenever in their opinion, taking all the circumstances into consideration, there is a manifest necessity for the act, or the ends of public justice would otherwise be defeated. They are to exercise a sound discretion on the subject; and it is impossible to define all the circumstances which would render it proper to interfere. * * * Such a discharge constitutes no bar to further proceedings, and gives no right of exemption to the prisoner from being again put upon trial." (U. S. v. Perez, 9 Wheat., 579.)

"This is the settled law of the Federal courts." (Keel v. Montana, 213 U. S., 135.)

III. COMPELLING PERSON TO BE WITNESS AGAINST HIMSELF.

Self-crimination.—The privilege granted by this article is not limited to the defendant on trial for crime, but includes all witnesses in criminal proceedings. (Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S., 562; U. S. v. Kimball, 117 Fed. Rep., 160.)

It is provided by statute with reference to naval general courts-martial and courts of inquiry "that no witness shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any question which may tend to incriminate or degrade him." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 12, 35 Stat., 622.)

In trials by court-martial and proceedings before courts of inquiry the accused or person charged "shall, at his own request but not otherwise, be a competent witness." (Act Mar. 16, 1878, 20 Stat., 30; Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, secs. 138, 512.)

Waiver of privilege.—When an accused person voluntarily testifies in his own behalf, he thereby waives his constitutional privilege as to the subject-matter of such testimony, and may be cross-examined thereon with the same latitude which is allowed in the cross-examination of ordinary witnesses. (Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 178 U. S., 304.)

If a witness waives his privilege by answering questions of a criminating character, it is then too late for him to stop and he may be required to make a full disclosure of the facts relating thereto regarding which he is interrogated. (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., 591.)

It is decided by an abundance of authority that the privilege of refusing to testify is a purely personal one; that the witness may waive it; that no objection from the parties, on the score of crimination of the witness, can be entertained; and that the counsel for the witness can only be heard in defense of his right. It would seem to follow that where this right has been violated, it is for the witness to complain, and not the defendant. If ordered to testify in a case where he is privileged, it is a matter exclusively between the court and the witness. The latter may stand out and be committed for contempt, or he may submit; but the party has no right to interfere or complain of the error. Accordingly, if a court-martial committed an error in requiring a witness to answer, the error is not such as to require a disapproval of the proceedings. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 616.)

Duty of court.—A witness can not avoid answering any question by the mere statement that the answer would tend to incriminate him, without regard to whether the statement is reasonable or not. It is for the judge before whom the question arises to decide whether an answer to the question may reasonably have a tendency to criminate the witness, or to furnish proof of an element or link in the chain of evidence necessary to convict him of a crime. (Ex parte Irvine, 74 Fed. Rep., 954.)

It is not sufficient to excuse the witness from testifying that he may, in his own mind, think his answer to the question might, by possibility, lead to a criminal charge against him, or tend to convict him of it if made. The court must be able to perceive that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer. (U. S. v. McCarthy, 18 Fed. Rep., 87.)

However, "if the question be of such a description that an answer to it may or may not criminate the witness, according to the purport of that answer, it must rest with himself, who alone can tell what it would be, to answer the question or not. If in such a case, he say upon his oath that his answer would criminate himself, the court can demand no other testimony of the fact." (U. S. v. Burr, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14692e, per Chief Justice Marshall; see also Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S., 547; In re Shera, 114 Fed. Rep., 207; In re Kanter, 117 Fed. Rep., 356.) But the court may compel an answer, if of opinion that no direct answer to the question could furnish evidence against the witness. (U. S. v. Miller, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15772; see also, In re Levin, 131 Fed. Rep., 388.)

When required to answer.—Where it clearly appears to the court that a witness contumaciously or mistakenly refuses to furnish evidence which can not possibly injure him, he will not be permitted to shield himself behind the privilege (In re Kanter, 117 Fed. Rep., 356); but the motive of the witness in pleading the privilege will not be inquired into "where, from the evidence and the nature of the question the court can definitely determine that the question, if answered in a particular way, will form a link in the chain of evidence to establish the commission of a crime by the witness. * * *

It is only where the criminating effect of the question is doubtful that the motive of the witness may be considered, for in such a case his bad faith would have a tendency to show that his answer would not subject him to the danger of a criminal prosecution or help to prove him guilty of crime." (Ex parte Irvine, 74 Fed. Rep., 964.)

"If the testimony relate to criminal acts long since past, and against the prosecution of which the statute of limitations has run, or for which he has already received a pardon or is guaranteed an immunity, the amendment does not apply. * * * The criminality provided against is a present, not a past criminality, which lingers only as a memory and involves no present danger of prosecution." (Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S., 43.)

Witness may be required to answer by a Federal court, if there is a Federal statute granting him immunity, although his answers may expose him to prosecution in the State courts to which the Federal statute has no application. (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., 591.)

By section 860, Revised Statutes, a general provision was enacted with reference to witnesses giving criminating testimony in judicial proceedings, under which it was claimed that witnesses might be compelled to answer criminating questions, as they were protected from prosecution therefor by said section. However, section 860 proved ineffective for this purpose, as it was held by the courts not to be as broad as the privilege conferred by the Constitution. (See Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S., 547.) It was repealed by act of May 7, 1910, (36 Stat., 352). By act of February 11, 1893 (27 Stat., 443), Congress passed an immunity statute applicable to testimony given before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was broader in its terms than section 860, Revised Statutes, and was upheld by the Supreme Court as requiring witnesses to answer. (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., 591; see also Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S., 43, upholding an immunity statute enacted Feb. 25, 1903, 32 Stat., 904, with reference to prosecutions under the antitrust act.)

A pardon must be accepted before a witness may be required to answer questions connecting him with matters for which the pardon grants him immunity. The witness has the right, if he desires to do so, to refuse the pardon and decline to testify. (Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.) [The President "can pardon or relieve only when an offense against the law has been established by proof or the admissions of the party, and a penalty thereby incurred." (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 485; see also Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79, in which this question was discussed but not decided.)]

"It is to be borne in mind that the power of the President under the Constitution to grant pardons and the right of a witness must be kept in accommodation. Both have sanction in the Constitution, and it should therefore be the anxiety of the law to preserve both—to leave to each its proper place. In this, as in other conflicts between personal rights and the powers of government, technical—even nice—distinctions are proper to be regarded.” (Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S., 79.)

“The seizure or compulsory production of a man’s private papers to be used in evidence against him is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself, and, in a prosecution for a crime, penalty, or forfeiture is equally within the prohibition of the fifth amendment.” (Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S., 616.)

“We have been unable to perceive that the seizure of a man’s private books and papers to be used in evidence against him is substantially different from compelling him to be a witness against himself.” (Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S., 633; compare Adams v. New York, 192 U. S., 585.)

“The fact that papers which are pertinent to the issue may have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered is not a valid objection to their admissibility. The court considers the competency of the evidence, and not the method by which it was obtained * * * and by the introduction of such evidence defendant is not compelled to incriminate himself.” (Adams v. New York, 192 U. S., 585, distinguishing Boyd v. U. S., on the ground that in that case it was attempted to compel defendant to produce his books and papers, on the pain of having statements of Government’s counsel as to the contents thereof taken as true and used as testimony for the Government, and that the law there held to be unconstitutional “virtually compelled the defendant to furnish testimony against himself.”)

“While an incidental seizure of incriminating papers, made in the execution of a legal warrant, and their use as evidence may be justified, and a collateral issue will not be raised to ascertain the source of competent evidence * * * that rule does not justify the retention of letters seized in violation of the protection given by the fourth amendment where an application in the cause for their return has been made by the accused before trial.” (Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S., 383.)

“Where letters and papers of the accused were taken from his premises by an official of the United States, acting under color of office but without any search warrant and in violation of the constitutional rights of accused under the fourth amendment, and a seasonable application for return of the letters and papers has been refused and they are used in evidence over his objection, prejudicial error is committed, and the judgment should be reversed.” (Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S., 383.)

“The tendency of those executing Federal criminal laws to obtain convictions by means of unlawful seizures and enforced confessions in violation of Federal rights is not to be sanctioned by the courts which are charged with the support of constitutional rights.” (Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S., 383.)

See note to section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 42.

Compelling witness to exhibit himself.—“The prohibition of compelling a man in a criminal court to be witness against himself is a prohibition of the use of physical or moral compulsion to extort communications from him, not an exclusion of his body as evidence when it may be material. The objection in principle would forbid a jury to look at a prisoner and compare his features with a photograph in proof. Moreover, we need not consider how far a court would go in compelling a man to exhibit himself. For when he is exhibited, whether voluntarily or by order, and even if the order goes too far, the evidence, if material, is competent.” (Holt v. U. S., 218 U. S., 253, citing Adams v. New York, 192 U. S., 585.)

“A question arose as to whether a blouse belonged to the prisoner. A witness testified that the prisoner put it on and it fitted him. It is objected that he did this under the same duress that made his statements inadmissible, and that it should be excluded for the same reasons.” Held, that this objection “is based upon an extravagant extension of the fifth amendment,” and that the testimony is admissible. (Holt v. U. S., 218 U. S., 245.)

“A confession freely and voluntarily made is evidence of the most satisfactory character. But the presumption upon which weight is given to such evidence, namely, that an innocent man will not imperil his safety or prejudice his interests by an untrue statement, ceases when the confession appears to have been made, either in consequence of inducements of a temporal nature held out by one in authority touching the charge preferred, or because of a threat or promise made by or in presence of such person in reference to such charge.” (Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S., 574.)

If the testimony may tend merely to degrade and not to incriminate the witness, he may be required to answer, unless the question is one which is not material to the issue and is intended to impair the credibility of the witness, in which case he may refuse to answer. (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., 591, and cases there cited; see also C. M. O., No. 29, 1914.)

IV. PROTECTION OF LIFE, LIBERTY, AND PROPERTY.

Due process of law.—The proposition has been uniformly accepted by American courts that the words “due process of law” are equivalent in meaning to the words “law of the land” contained in Magna Charta. (Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S., 78.)

“By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, and property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not law of the land.” (Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat., 518, argument of Webster; quoted in Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S., 516.)

The Supreme Court has always declined to give a comprehensive definition of this phrase, and has preferred that its full meaning should be gradually ascertained by the process of inclusion and exclusion in the course of the decisions of cases as they arise." (Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S., 78.)

"To those in the military or naval service of the United States the military law is due process. The decision, therefore, of a military tribunal acting within the scope of its lawful powers can not be reviewed or set aside by the courts." (Reaves v. Ainsworth, 219 U. S., 296, 304.)

"It is sufficient to say that by due process of law is meant one which, following the forms of law, is appropriate to the case and just to the parties to be affected. It must be pursued in the ordinary mode prescribed by law; it must be adapted to the end to be attained, and whenever it is necessary for the protection of the parties it must give them an opportunity to be heard respecting the justness of the judgment sought. The clause, therefore, means that there can be no proceeding against life, liberty, or property which may result in deprivation of either without the observance of those general rules established in our system of jurisprudence for the security of private rights." (Hagar v. Reclamation District, 111 U. S., 701.)

"Any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law." (Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S., 516.) And this expression is not, therefore, necessarily limited to "settled usages and modes of proceedings existing in the common and statute law of England before the emigration of our ancestors, and shown not to have been unsuited to their civil and political condition by having been acted on by them after the settlement of this country." (Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S., 78. See also Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S., 366.)

"If the laws enacted by a State be within the legitimate sphere of legislative power, and their enforcement be attended with the observance of those general rules which our system of jurisprudence prescribes for the security of private rights, the harshness, injustice, and oppressive character of such laws will not invalidate them as affecting life, liberty, or property without due process of law." (Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S., 512.)

"Due process of law * * * is secured if the laws operate on all alike and do not subject the individual to an arbitrary exercise of the powers of the Government." (Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S., 657.)

"Liberty" means "not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the engagement of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation; and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned." (Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S., 578.)

An officer of the Navy placed under arrest for trial by court-martial and ordered to confine himself to the limits of the city of Washington, is not deprived of his liberty so as to entitle him to a writ of habeas corpus on the allegation that he was unlawfully restrained by the Secretary of the Navy. "In the case of a man in the military or naval service, where he is, whether as an officer or a private, always more or less subject in his movements, by the very necessity of military rule and subordination, to the orders of his superior officer, it should be made clear that some unusual restraint upon his liberty of personal movement exists to justify the issue of the writ; otherwise, every order of the superior officer directing the movements of his subordinate, which necessarily to some extent curtails his freedom of will, may be held to be a restraint of his liberty, and the party so ordered may seek relief from obedience by means of a writ of habeas corpus." (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

Office is not "property."—"An officer in the Army or Navy of the United States does not hold his office by contract, but at the will of the sovereign power." (Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99.) "Whatever the form of the statute, the officer under it does not hold by contract. He enjoys a privilege revocable by the sovereignty at will; and one legislature can not deprive its successor of the power of revocation." (Same case.)

"An office created by statute is not the property of the incumbent. Being given by statute it can be taken away by statute, and therefore the rules of law applicable to proceedings to deprive a person of property lawfully acquired are not, in general, applicable to proceedings of examining boards in cases of promotion. The rules of procedure, even in civil cases, where rights of property are involved, are not applicable here except in so far as they are made so by statute and regulations adopted by the Navy Department in accordance with statute laws. * * * Neither can such examinations be assimilated in any manner to criminal proceedings, which they in no sense resemble. * * * The offices held by naval officers Congress creates, abolishes, and limits at will. Congress has complete power, if it wishes, not only to stop promotions but to abolish these offices. It might declare that no one should hereafter be promoted who was not over 6 feet high; or it might direct that all officers not of the required height should be discharged; and it can certainly pass an act like that of 1882 directing the discharge of officers whose unfitness arises from their own misconduct." (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, quoting Secretary of Navy's "General Instructions" of Dec. 14, 1894, in case of Frederick W. Crocker.)

However, "if the constitutional provision relating to due process of law applied" to the case of an officer discharged from the Navy for failing morally to qualify for promotion, "it would be more than satisfied by the procedure established;" under which "his case is heard by a board constituted in accordance with express provisions of law and sworn to 'honestly and impartially examine and report upon the case of _____, now before the board and about to be examined;’ all matters considered by the board, whether affecting the officer’s physical, mental, moral, or professional qualifications for promotion, are entered of record; the candidate, if his record shows him prima facie unfit for promotion, is so informed by the board and given an opportunity to be heard; the finding and recommendation of the board are expressly stated in all cases to be based upon matters recorded, and are so referred to the department and the President for review.” (File 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 31, citing In re Sing Lee, 54 Fed. Rep., 336; Turner v. Williams, 194 U. S., 289, 290; Murray v. Hoboken Land Company, 18 How., 274.)

Private property taken for public use.—See note to Article I, section 8, clause 11, “Authority of military commander to seize private property”; see also note to Article I, section 8, clause 8, “Right of Government to use a patent”; and see act of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat., 357), as to acquisition of lands for public uses by condemnation.

Court illegally constituted.—“Trial by a court [martial] not regularly constituted is not a trial which can be said to be ‘due process of law.’ I am of opinion, therefore, that the so-called court-martial, so far as the trial of Brown is concerned, must remain illegal, and its judgment ought not to be enforced.” (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 137. In this case, one member of a naval court-martial was detached and another substituted by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation without authority from the Secretary of the Navy, who convened the court.)

Court must have jurisdiction.—To constitute due process of law, the court which renders judgment in a case must have jurisdiction, both of the parties and of the subject-matter of the proceedings. (Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S., 714.) Consent of the accused can not confer jurisdiction upon a court not possessing it by virtue of statutory authority. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

Review not required.—“A review by an appellate court of the final judgment in a criminal case, however grave the offense of which the accused is convicted, was not at common law and is not now a necessary element of due process of law.” (McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S., 684; see also Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S., 505; Andrews v. Swartz, 156 U. S., 272; Fallbrook v. Bradley, 164 U. S., 112; Rogers v. Peck, 199 U. S., 425; Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

Use of depositions.—Due process of law does not require that the accused in a criminal case be confronted with the witnesses against him. The provision of the sixth amendment on this subject does not apply to State courts, and is not extended to them by the due process provision of the fourteenth amendment. Accordingly, held that the deposition of a witness may be admitted against an accused in a State court without violating the Federal Constitution: “We are of opinion that no Federal right of the plaintiffs in error was violated by admitting this deposition in evidence. Its admission was but a slight extension of the rule of the common law, even as contended for by counsel. The extension is not of such a fundamental character as to deprive the accused of due process of law * * *. The accused has, as held by the State court in such case, been once confronted with the witness, and has had opportunity to cross-examine him, and it seems reasonable that when the State can not procure the attendance of the witness at the trial, and he is a nonresident and is permanently beyond the jurisdiction of the State, that his deposition might be read equally as well as when his attendance could not be enforced because of death or of illness, or his evidence given by reason of insanity.” (West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S., 258.)

Self-incrimination.—Due process of law does not include exemption by witnesses from compulsory self-incrimination. (Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S., 78. That right is guaranteed witnesses in the Federal courts by another clause of this amendment. See above, “Self-incrimination.”)

Excessive bail, excessive fines, and cruel and unusual punishments are prohibited by the eighth amendment, and are not included in the due-process clause. (In re Kemmler, 136 U. S., 436.)

Errors of procedure.—“The due process of law guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment has regard to substance of right, and not to matters of form or procedure. * * * This familiar phrase does not mean that the operations of the State government shall be conducted without error or fault in any particular case, nor that the Federal courts may substitute their judgment for that of the State courts, or exercise any general review over their proceedings, but only that the fundamental rights of the prisoner shall not be taken from him arbitrarily or without the right to be heard according to the usual course of law in such cases.” (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

“If a trial is in fact dominated by a mob, so that the jury is intimidated and the trial judge yields, and so that there is an actual interference with the course of justice, there is, in that court, a departure from due process of law in the proper sense of that term. And if the State, supplying no corrective process, carries into execution a judgment of death or imprisonment based upon a verdict thus produced by mob domination, the State deprives the accused of his life or liberty without due process of law. But the State may supply such corrective process as to it seems proper. * * * Repeated instances are reported of verdicts and judgments set aside and new trials granted for disorder or mob violence interfering with the prisoner’s right to a fair trial. * * * The Georgia courts, in the present case, proceeded upon the theory that Frank would have been entitled to this relief had his charges been true, and they refused a new trial only because they found his charges untrue save in a few minor particulars not amounting to more than irregularities and not prejudicial to the accused. There was here no denial of due process of law." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

Prisoner unable to hear testimony.—"Where the prisoner was convicted of the crime of murder and sentenced to imprisonment for life, although he did not hear a word of the evidence given upon the trial because of his almost total deafness, his inability to hear being such that it required a person to speak through an ear trumpet close to his ear in order that such person should be heard by him, and the trial court having failed to see to it that the testimony in the case was repeated to him through his ear trumpet, this court said that this was 'at most an error, which did not take away from the court its jurisdiction over the subject matter and over the person accused.'" (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309, explaining Felts v. Murphy, 201 U. S., 123, 129.)

Failure to arraign.—"In Garland v. Washington, 232 U. S., 642, 645, it was held that the want of a formal arraignment, treated by the State as depriving the accused of no substantial right, and as having been waived, and thereby lost, did not amount to depriving defendant of his liberty without due process of law." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

V. PRESENCE OF ACCUSED AT TRIAL.

Proceedings in absence of accused.—It was provided by a statute of Utah that, "if the indictment is for a felony, the defendant must be personally present at his trial; but if for a misdemeanor, the trial may be had in the absence of the defendant." Held that, under this statute, the accused can not waive his right to be present at a trial for felony, even during the trial of challenges of jurors. "We are of opinion that it was not within the power of the accused or his counsel to dispense with the statutory requirement as to his personal presence at the trial. The argument to the contrary necessarily proceeds upon the ground that he alone is concerned as to the mode by which he may be deprived of his life or liberty, and that the chief object of the prosecution is to punish him for the crime charged. But this is a mistaken view, as well of the relations which the accused holds to the public as of the end of human punishment. * * * The public has an interest in his life and liberty. Neither can be lawfully taken except in the mode prescribed by law. That which the law makes essential in proceedings involving the deprivation of life or liberty can not be dispensed with or affected by the consent of the accused, much less by his mere failure to object to unauthorized methods. The great end of punishment is not the expiation or atonement of the offense committed, but the prevention of future offenses of the same kind. * * * Such being the relation which the citizen holds to the public, and the object of punishment for public wrongs, the legislature has deemed it essential to the protection of one whose life or liberty is involved in a prosecution for felony that he shall be personally present at the trial; that is, at every stage of the trial when his substantial rights may be affected by the proceedings against him. If he be deprived of his life or liberty without being so present, such deprivation would be without that due process of law required by the Constitution." (Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S., 574; distinguished in Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 458, and in Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

"The personal presence of the accused, from the beginning to the end of a trial for felony, involving life or liberty, as well as at the time final judgment is rendered against him, may be, and must be assumed to be, vital to the proper conduct of his defense, and can not be dispensed with." (Schwab v. Berggren, 143 U. S., 442, distinguished in Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 458.)

Due process of law does not require the presence of the accused in an appellate court at the time the judgment sentencing him to death is affirmed. (Schwab v. Berggren, 143 U. S., 442.)

"In trials for felonies, it is not in the power of the prisoner, either by himself or his counsel, to waive the right to be personally present during the trial. The making of challenges is an essential part of the trial of a person accused of crime, and it is one of his substantial rights to be brought face to face with the jurors when the challenges are made." (Lewis v. U. S., 146 U. S., 370; distinguished in Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 458.)

"It is the law of Kentucky that occasional absence of the accused from the trial from which no injury results to his substantial rights is not reversible error. And we think, in applying that rule to the case at bar, plaintiff in error was not deprived of due process of law within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States." (Howard v. Kentucky, 200 U. S., 164.) "It may be admitted that the words 'due process of law,' as used in the fourteenth amendment, protect fundamental rights. What those are can not ever be the cause of much dispute. In giving them protection, however, it was not designed, as was observed by the Chief Justice in In re Converse, supra (137 U. S., 624) 'to interfere with the power of the State to protect the lives, liberty, and property of its citizens; nor with the exercise of that power in the adjudication of the courts of the State in administering the process provided by the law of the State.'" (Howard v. Kentucky, 200 U. S., 164, 173.)

"While the rule may be otherwise in cases that are capital, or where the accused is in custody under the control of the court, or where special statutory provisions apply," nevertheless, "where the offense is not capital, and the accused is not in custody, his voluntary absence does not nullify what has been done in, or prevent the completion of, his trial, but operates as a waiver of his right to be present and leaves the court free to proceed." (Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442.)

"The accused was represented and heard by counsel at every stage of the proceedings. He also was present in person at all the proceedings preliminary to the trial and at the time it was begun and during the major part of it. But on two occasions, in the latter part of the trial, he voluntarily absented himself and sent to the court a message expressly consenting that the trial proceed in his absence, which was done. On these occasions two witnesses for the Government were both examined and cross-examined. No complaint grounded upon his absence was made in the trial court or in the Supreme Court of the Philippines; and the objection now made is, not that he did not voluntarily waive his right to be present, if he could waive it, but that it could not be waived, and that the court was therefore without power to proceed in his absence." Under these circumstances "held that the continuation of the trial during the voluntary absence of the accused in this case while it proceeded with his counsel present did not violate the provisions of section 5 of the Philippine act of July 1, 1902, giving him a right to be present and heard." (Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442.)

"In cases of felony our courts, with substantial accord, have regarded it [right of accused to be present] as extending to every stage of the trial, inclusive of the empaneling of the jury and the reception of the verdict, and as being scarcely less important to the accused than the right of trial itself. And with like accord they have regarded an accused who is in custody and one who is charged with a capital offense as incapable of waiving the right; the one, because his presence or absence is not within his own control, and the other, because, in addition to being usually in custody, he is deemed to suffer the constraint naturally incident to an apprehension of the awful penalty that would follow conviction." (Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 455.)

"But, where the offense is not capital and the accused is not in custody, the prevailing rule has been, that if, after the trial has begun in his presence, he voluntarily absents himself, this does not nullify what has been done or prevent the completion of the trial, but, on the contrary, operates as a waiver of his right to be present and leaves the court free to proceed with the trial in like manner and with like effect as if he were present." (Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 455.)

Where an accused who was at large on bail was present when his trial was begun and during the taking of a portion of the evidence for the Government, and then fled the jurisdiction, the trial proceeded in his absence, the remaining evidence being taken and a verdict of guilt returned. Subsequently he was apprehended, and sentence was then imposed, notwithstanding his objection that the trial had proceeded in his absence. On appeal the judgment was affirmed, the court stating: "It does not seem to us to be consonant with the dictates of common sense that an accused person, being at large upon bail, should be at liberty, whenever he pleased, to withdraw himself from the courts of his country and to break up a trial already commenced. The practical result of such a proposition, if allowed to be law, would be to prevent any trial whatever until the accused person himself should be pleased to permit it. For by the statute (Rev. Stat. of U. S., sec. 1015) he is entitled as a matter of right to be enlarged upon bail 'in all criminal cases where the offense is not punishable by death'; and, therefore, in all such cases he may by absconding prevent a trial. This would be a travesty of justice which could not be tolerated; and it is not required or justified by any regard for the right of personal liberty. On the contrary, the inevitable result would be to abridge the right of personal liberty by abridging or restricting the right now granted by the statute to be abroad on bail until the verdict is rendered. But we do not think that any rule of law or constitutional principle leads us to any conclusion that would be so disastrous as well to the administration of justice as to the true interests of civil liberty." (Falk v. U. S., 15 App. D. C., 446, 454, quoted approvingly in Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 457.)

"The question is one of broad public policy whether an accused person, placed upon trial for crime and protected by all the safeguards with which the humanity of our present criminal law sedulously surrounds him, can with impunity defy the processes of that law, paralyze the proceedings of courts and juries and turn them into a solemn farce, and ultimately compel society, for its own safety, to restrict the operation of the principle of personal liberty. Neither in criminal nor in civil cases will the law allow a person to take advantage of his own wrong. And yet this would be precisely what it would do if it permitted an escape from prison, or an absconding from the jurisdiction while at large on bail, during the pendency of a trial before a jury, to operate as a shield." (Falk v. U. S., 15 App. D. C., 446, 460, quoted approvingly in Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 458.)

"The right of a prisoner to be present at his trial does not include the right to prevent a trial by unseemly disturbance. The defendant had the opportunity to be present at the whole of his trial. He was, in fact, present while the jury were being empaneled and the evidence was being introduced. He was absent during a part of the opening, only because of his own disorderly conduct. It does not lie in his mouth to complain of the order which was made necessary by his own misconduct, and which he could at any time have terminated by signifying his willingness to avoid creating disturbance." (U. S. v. Davis, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14923, cited in Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 456.)

"If, after the trial of an indictment is commenced, the accused escapes from custody, and, for that reason, his further attendance can not be had, the trial may proceed in his absence." (U. S. v. Loughery, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15631; cited in Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S., 442, 456.)

"In cases where the prisoner's life or liberty is in peril he must be present during the whole of the trial and until final judgment. If absent, there is a want of jurisdiction of the person, and the court can not proceed with the trial or receive the verdict or pronounce the final judgment. A prisoner in custody is not a free agent; his being in court depends upon proper authority bringing him there; he can not waive anything by his absence. * * * But where the offense is trivial and life or liberty is not in jeopardy, the rule is to be relaxed." (Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 236.)

"If it is desirable or necessary that the prisoner in a civil court be present at every proceeding after indictment, it seems to be still more so that a prisoner before a court-martial should be present, for he ordinarily is not represented by counsel learned in the law and watchful of his interests, but (as in this case) by some naval officer acting from a humane motive." (Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 236.)

"The court will always require the presence of the prisoner in court during trial, if he be in close custody of the law, unless in case the prisoner expressly himself, and not by counsel, waives his right to be present, but the court may require it if it shall deem it advisable to do so." (State v. Kelly, 97 N. C., 404, quoting Falk v. U. S., 15 App. D. C., 457.)

The action of a naval court-martial, in permitting the accused upon a request made expressly by himself and not merely by counsel to be absent from the immediate presence of the court during the testimony of expert witnesses for the defense concerning the physical and mental condition of the accused, did not invalidate the proceedings, such action being due to humanitarian considerations based upon representations of counsel for the accused as to the latter's health, and that it would be "cruel" to require his personal attendance during specified portions of the trial. (G. C. M. Rec. 29422. See also Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S., 427, 435, explained in Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.) Nevertheless courts-martial are empowered to require the presence of the accused during the entire proceedings and should always exercise this power to avoid any possible irregularity. (C. M. O. 51, 1914.)

The presence of the judge-advocate when a naval court-martial is closed for deliberation and when the accused, his counsel, and spectators have consequently withdrawn, while a grave irregularity and a disregard of Navy Regulations, would not necessarily render the proceedings invalid. (C. M. O. 6, 1915; see also Ex parte Tucker, 212 Fed. Rep., 569.)

A distinction exists "between what the common law requires with respect to trial by jury in criminal cases and what the States may enact without contravening the 'due process' clause of the fourteenth amendment." Thus "in the Lewis case [above noted] which was a conviction of murder in a circuit court of the United States, the trial practice being regulated by the common law, it was held to be a leading principle, pervading the entire law of criminal procedure, that after indictment nothing should be done in the absence of the prisoner; that the making of challenges is an essential part of the trial, and it was one of the substantial rights of the prisoner to be brought face to face with the jurors at the time the challenges were made; and that in the absence of a statute, this right as it existed at common law must not be abridged;" while in Howard v. Kentucky (above noted) "this court, finding that by the law of the State an occasional absence of the accused from the trial, from which no injury resulted to his substantial rights, was not deemed material error, held that the application of this rule of law did not amount to a denial of due process within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment. In fact, this court has sustained the States in establishing a great variety of departures from the common-law procedure respecting jury trials." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

"The practice established in the criminal courts of Georgia that a defendant may waive his right to be present when the jury renders its verdict and that such waiver may be given after as well as before the event * * * is a regulation of criminal procedure that it is within the authority of the State to adopt. In adopting it the State declares in effect, as it reasonably may declare, that the right of the accused to be present at the reception of the verdict is but an incident of the right of trial by jury; and since the State may, without infringing the fourteenth amendment, abolish trial by jury, it may limit the effect to be given to an error respecting one of the incidents of such trial. The presence of the prisoner when the verdict is rendered is not so essential a part of the hearing that a rule of practice permitting the accused to waive it, and holding him bound by the waiver, amounts to a deprivation of 'due process of law.'" (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

"As to the 'due process of law' that is required by the fourteenth amendment, it is perfectly well-settled that a criminal prosecution in the courts of a State, based upon a law not in itself repugnant to the Federal Constitution, and conducted according to the settled course of judicial proceedings as established by the law of the State, so long as it includes notice and a hearing, or an opportunity to be heard, before a court of competent jurisdiction, according to established modes of procedure, is 'due process' in the constitutional sense." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

VI. REMEDY WHEN DUE PROCESS DENIED.

Habeas corpus proceedings where due process of law alleged to have been denied.—"It is clear that the civil courts are in no sense appellate tribunals for the revision of proceedings in courts-martial. It has been decided that in such cases the civil courts should not interfere if it appears that the court-martial has jurisdiction of the person and of the subject matter which was tried before it, and that errors of procedure in military courts can be corrected only by the proper military authorities. * * * It is true that Tucker's legal rights were disregarded by the court-martial when it allowed the judge advocate to be present, even for a short time, at the closed session; but I do not think it is the business of this court to correct the error. The statute in question relates to procedure, not to jurisdiction, and the nonobservance of it by military tribunals is a matter for the revising military authorities, not for the civil courts." (Ex parte Tucker, 212 Fed. Rep., 569, citing act July 27, 1892, sec. 2, 27 Stat., 277, relating to the Army; there is no similar statute relating to trials by naval court-martial.)

"If he is held in custody by reason of his conviction upon a criminal charge before a court having plenary jurisdiction over the subject matter or offense, the place where it was committed, and the person of the prisoner, it results from the nature of the writ itself that he can not have relief on habeas corpus. Mere errors in point of law, however serious, committed by a criminal court in the exercise of its jurisdiction over a case properly subject to its cognizance, can not be reviewed by habeas corpus. That writ can not be employed as a substitute for the writ of error." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

"Where it is made to appear to a court of the United States that an applicant for habeas corpus is in the custody of a State officer in the ordinary course of a criminal prosecution, under a law of the State not in itself repugnant to the Federal Constitution, the writ, in the absence of very special circumstances, ought not to be issued until the State prosecution has reached its conclusion, and not even then until the Federal questions arising upon the record have been brought before this court upon writ of error." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

"It is perfectly obvious that where such an appeal is provided for, and the prisoner has had the benefit of it, the proceedings in the appellate tribunal are to be regarded as a part of the process of law under which he is held in custody by the State, and to be considered in determining any question of alleged deprivation of his life or liberty contrary to the fourteenth amendment." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

"It is open to the courts of the United States, upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus, to look beyond forms and inquire into the very substance of the matter, to the extent of deciding whether the prisoner has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law, and for this purpose to inquire into jurisdictional facts, whether they appear upon the record or not." (Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S., 309.)

[ARTICLE VI.]

[Right to speedy and public trial by jury; to confront witnesses; to have counsel, etc.] In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

- I. SPEEDY TRIAL.
- II. PUBLIC TRIAL.
- III. JURY TRIAL.
- IV. IMPARTIAL TRIAL.
- V. RIGHT TO BE INFORMED OF ACCUSATION.
- VI. CONFRONTING WITNESSES.
- VII. COMPULSORY PROCESS FOR OBTAINING WITNESSES.
- VIII. ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL.

I. SPEEDY TRIAL.

In general.—"The right of a speedy trial is necessarily relative. It is consistent with delays and depends upon circumstances. It secures rights to a defendant. It does not preclude the rights of public justice." (Beavers v. Haubert, 198 U. S., 86.)

"The discipline necessary to the efficiency of the Army and Navy required other and swifter modes of trial than are furnished by the common law courts." (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 3, 123.)

Provisions to secure this right in the Navy.—No person shall be tried by naval court-martial for any offense committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for his trial, unless by reason of some manifest impediment he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period. (Art. 61, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 25, 1895, 28 Stat., 680. As to special provisions relating to trials for desertion, see same act, art. 62, A. G. N.) This legislation was intended "to require reasonable diligence on the part of public officers in apprehending offenders and bringing them to justice, and not to place a premium on the ingenuity of such offenders as succeeded in concealing their whereabouts and escaping apprehension for a limited period." (C. M. O. 27, 1913; file 26251-9538, Oct. 30, 1914.)

"Offenses shall not be allowed to accumulate in order that sufficient matter may thus be collectively obtained for a trial, without giving due notice to the offender." (Art. R-1411, Navy Regs., 1913.)

"The certainty of prompt punishment is more conducive to discipline than punishment deferred long after the offense." (Art. R-1404, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Whenever practicable, the trial by deck court of a person in the Navy shall take place "within 48 hours after the offense is committed" (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 480.) If it is decided by the competent officer that the accused shall be brought to trial before a courts-martial, "the court shall be assembled for that purpose as soon as the nature of the case and the interests of the public service will allow." (Art. R-1408, Navy Regs., 1913.)

"When the proceedings of any general court-martial have commenced, they shall not be suspended or delayed on account of the absence of any of the members, provided five or more are assembled; but the court is enjoined to sit from day to day, Sundays excepted, until sentence is given, unless temporarily adjourned by the authority which convened it." (Art. 45, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S.)

It should not be attempted to conduct a trial by general court-martial in undue haste and at unusual hours. The action of a naval court-martial, after completing a trial which had lasted several days, in immediately commencing another trial at 5.15 in the afternoon and completing it the same day, when the case was not one of extraordinary urgency, is not approved by the Navy Department. In this case, the court's findings and the errors made in the record strikingly exemplified the consequences of its action, and must be attributed to some extent to "overfatigue of the mind" and undue haste resulting from the unusual hour at which the proceedings were commenced and hurried to a conclusion. Had the accused been convicted and given a substantial punishment, counsel in his behalf might well have urged that the case had not been given the time and careful consideration to which it was entitled. (C. M. O. 27, 1913; Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 216.)

II. PUBLIC TRIAL.

In general.—"The sessions of courts-martial shall be public, and all persons except such as may be required to give evidence shall be admitted." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 217.)

All deliberation of a court-martial takes place with closed doors. "At other times [except as to those persons who have been summoned as witnesses] it is open to the public, military or otherwise, with such limitation as the capacity of the room or tent in which it is held, and the convenience of the court and parties before it, may dictate." (Simmons, 3d ed., 175.)

[By act of March 3, 1913 (37 Stat., 731), relating to the taking of evidence in equity proceedings under the Antitrust Act, it was provided that "the proceedings shall be open to the public as freely as are trials in open court; and no order excluding the public from attendance on any such proceedings shall be valid or enforceable."]

"A court of the United States ought never to sit with its doors of entrance closed, so as to prevent publicity in its proceedings, but its police must be maintained. Where the court has not prescribed any general rule or made any special or particular order on the subject, the specific duty of the marshal to maintain and regulate its police according to law is an incident of his general duty to attend the court. When, during the pendency of a particular proceeding, there is reason to believe that an unrestricted admission of persons of a known class or association would endanger the security of the administration of justice, or in any manner prevent the police of the court from being properly maintained, the marshal, without excluding absolutely such persons as a class, may adopt prudential measures to prevent their indiscriminate admission, regulating the exercise of his discretion so that their exclusion is not carried beyond the exigency of the particular occasion." (U. S. v. Buck, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14680.)

templation of Congress, these courts stand on the same footing as other judicial tribunals of the country. Their sittings, for example, are free to the attendance of the public, like those of other courts * * *." (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137, 141.)

"Whether a court-martial may technically within its legal right close its doors to the public during the trial of an accused, such a procedure is contrary to the authority of text writers on the subject, to the spirit of the Constitution, and to the usual practice of the Federal courts. To permit closed sessions would be to introduce a practice into the service that might be made an instrument of oppression contrary to the genius of our laws and institutions, to a sound public policy, and one which, while upon occasion might be of benefit to an accused, could be made in cases a most objectionable procedure." (File 26504-115, Jan. 24, 1911.)

"The exclusion of persons in certain cases [where the evidence is indecent], as above indicated [decisions of State courts], may have been allowed, but it seems to be contrary to the spirit if not to the letter of the Constitution; and in the case of courts-martial [Navy] it is certainly contrary to a practice that has extended uniformly, so far as precedents have been discovered, for very many years." (File 26504-115, Jan. 24, 1911.) As to the exclusion of certain classes of persons in trials by State courts, see State v. Hensley (75 Ohio Stat., 255, 9 Ann. Cas., 108); State v. Nyhus (19 N. D., 326, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.), 487).

"The sessions of a general court-martial shall be public, and in general all persons except such as may be required to give evidence shall be admitted. However, in cases where it may seem desirable that certain classes of spectators, such as women, children, and others, should be excluded during the trial, the court, when convened by the Secretary of the Navy or the convening authority in other cases, should communicate with the Secretary of the Navy requesting permission therefor and giving a full statement of the reasons." (C. M. O. 51, 1914.)

III. JURY TRIAL.

Special cases.—See note to Article I, section 8, clause 14, "Trials by jury not required in the Navy."

"The trial of all offenses committed upon the high seas, or elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of any particular State or district, shall be in the district where the offender is found, or into which he is first brought." (Act Mar. 3, 1911, sec. 41, 36 Stat., 1100.)

This legislation is not exclusive of the jurisdiction of a consular tribunal in China, etc., to try for a similar offense committed on board a private ship of the United States in a port of the country in which the tribunal is established, when the offender is not taken to the United States. (In re Ross, 140 U. S., 453.)

A homicide committed on a naval hospital ship at Olongapo, P. I., occurred "out of the jurisdiction of any particular State or district." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 24.)

IV. IMPARTIAL TRIAL.

Right of challenge.—In trials by naval general court-martial, "the accused and the judge advocate have the mutual right of challenge. It is the duty of the judge advocate to ask the accused if he objects to any member of the court appointed to try him, and a minute of this inquiry and the answer thereto is invariably to be entered on the record. As a general rule, whatever objection either party may make to any member shall be decided upon before the court is sworn, but at any stage of the proceedings prior to the findings challenges may be made, either by the judge advocate or the accused, for cause not previously known. * * * The objection, the cause assigned, the statement, if any, of the challenged member, and the decision of the court shall be regularly and specifically entered on the record." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 277.)

Members of a naval court-martial may testify as witnesses in a case and then resume their seats as members. (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 139.) "Under the settled law of evidence members of a jury are competent witnesses in a criminal case on trial before them, and it has been held that 'the analogy of a court-martial is that of a jury in the trial of a civil case, the approving power in the former occupying the relation of the judge in the latter.'" Furthermore, the practice of permitting the judge in a civil court to testify as a witness in a case before him is authorized by statute in at least one State, has been judicially upheld in other States, and has been practiced and upheld in the highest court of England. (File 26251-6020:11; see also Keyes v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 533; affirmed 109 U. S., 336.)

The objection to a member of a court-martial continuing to sit as such after testifying against the accused, goes to the propriety of his sitting under the circumstances, not to his legal capacity thus to sit. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 434.)

"The rules in regard to the competency of witnesses are the same in courts-martial as in the courts of the common law. Hence, as we have seen, the prosecutor is admissible as a witness, as also are the members of the court." Where a member testifies as a witness "he is not thereby disqualified from resuming his seat as a member of the court, but where there is a sufficient number of members without him to constitute the court, it is more in accordance with the usage in civil courts that he should withdraw." (Greenleaf on Evidence, 16th ed., sec. 487, p. 465.)

V. RIGHT TO BE INFORMED OF ACCUSATION.

Arrests in the Navy.—"The person accused shall be furnished with a true copy of the charges, with the specifications, at the time he is put under arrest; and no other charges than those so furnished shall be urged against him at the trial, unless it shall appear to the court that intelligence of such other charges had not reached the officer ordering the court when the accused was put under arrest, or that some witness material to the support of such charge was at that time absent and can be produced at the trial; in which case reasonable time shall be given to the accused to make his defense against such new charge." (Art. 43, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S. See note to said section for cases construing and applying this article.)

VI. CONFRONTING WITNESSES.

This constitutional provision does not apply to the Navy. (Mullan v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 157, 176; affirmed 212 U. S., 516.)

Use of depositions.—It is provided by statute that "the depositions of witnesses may be taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party, and when duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before naval courts, except in capital cases and cases where the punishment may be imprisonment or confinement for more than one year as follows: First, depositions of civilian witnesses residing outside the State, Territory, or district in which a naval court is ordered to sit; second, depositions of persons in the naval or military service stationed or residing outside the State, Territory, or District in which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders to go outside of such State, Territory, or District; third, where such naval court is convened on board a vessel of the United States, or at a naval station not within any State, Territory, or District of the United States, the depositions of witnesses may be taken and used as herein provided whenever such witnesses reside or are stationed at such a distance from the place where said naval court is ordered to sit, or are about to go to such a distance as, in the judgment of the convening authority, would render it impracticable to secure their personal attendance." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 16, 35 Stat., 622; see also art. 25 Articles of War, sec. 1342, R. S., as amended by act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 655, which contains broader provisions with reference to use of depositions before Army courts; and see 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 311, 312, and file 26260-1392, June 29, 1911, p. 30; see also 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 344.)

"In any case where it is necessary to use depositions at the trial thereof and depositions are so used, the maximum punishment under such circumstances shall in no case exceed imprisonment or confinement for one year." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 390.)

"The proceedings of courts of inquiry shall * * * in all cases not capital, nor extending to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, be evidence before a court-martial, provided oral testimony can not be obtained." (Art. 60, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S.; C. M. O. 46, 1917, p. 13; Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 198, Changes No. 1.)

"If, in the case of a commissioned or warrant officer, the maximum sentence, under the * * * limitations of punishment, extends to dismissal, and if, upon the trial, oral testimony can not be obtained, by reason of which fact the record of proceedings of the court of inquiry, upon whose findings such trial is wholly or partially based is used in evidence, the maximum punishment which may be imposed shall not extend to dismissal, but shall, instead, be limited not to exceed the loss of 100 numbers in rank." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 390.)

"All testimony before a summary court-martial shall be given orally, upon oath or affirmation, administered by the senior member of the court." (Art. 29, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S.)

In proceedings before courts of inquiry "the party whose conduct shall be the subject of inquiry, or his attorney, shall have the right to cross-examine all the witnesses." (Art. 59, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S.)

"The primary object of the constitutional provision in question was to prevent depositions or ex parte affidavits, such as were sometimes admitted in civil cases, being used against the prisoner in lieu of a personal examination and cross-examination of the witness in which the accused has an opportunity, not only of testing the recollection and sifting the conscience of the witness, but of compelling him to stand face to face with the jury in order that they may look at him, and judge by his demeanor upon the stand and the manner in which he gives his testimony whether he is worthy of belief." (Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S., 240.)

The admission of a deposition in evidence against an accused on trial in a State court does not violate any right which he possesses under the Federal Constitution. The provision of the sixth amendment relating to the subject does not apply to State courts, and the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him does not extend to the defendant in a State court under the provision of the fourteenth amendment that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property "without due process of law." The admission of the deposition "was but a slight extension of the rule of the common law, even as contended for by counsel. The extension is not of such a fundamental character as to deprive the accused of due process of law * * *. The accused has, as held by the State court in such case, been once confronted with the witness and has had opportunity to cross-examine him, and it seems reasonable that when the State can not procure the attendance of the witness at the trial and he is a nonresident and is permanently beyond the jurisdiction of the State that his deposition might be read equally as well as when his attendance could not be enforced because of death or of illness or his evidence given by reason of insanity." (West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S., 258.)

Dying declarations.—This provision of the Constitution does not prevent the admission of dying declarations in accordance with rules of evidence which were well established long before the adoption of the Constitution. (Kirby v. U. S., 174 U. S., 61.)

Witness absent by fault of accused.—"The Constitution gives the accused the right to a trial at which he should be confronted with the witnesses against him; but if a witness is absent by his own wrongful procurement he can not complain if competent evidence is admitted to supply the place of that which he had kept away. The Constitution does not guarantee an accused person against the legitimate consequences of his own wrongful acts. It grants him the privilege of being confronted with the witnesses against him, but if he voluntarily keeps the witnesses away he can not insist on his privilege. If, therefore, when absent by his procurement, their evidence is supplied in some lawful way, he is in no condition to assert that his constitutional rights have been violated." (Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S., 160.)

Admissions as to what witness would testify if present.—"Article 6 of the amendments * * * gives the accused a right to a trial by jury. But the same article gives him the further right to be confronted with the witnesses against him and to have the assistance of counsel. Is it possible that an accused can not admit and be bound by the admission that a witness not present would testify to certain facts? Can it be that if he does not wish the assistance of counsel and waives it the trial is invalid? It seems only necessary to ask these questions to answer them. When there is no constitutional nor statutory mandate and no public policy prohibiting, an accused may waive any privilege which he is given the right to enjoy." (Schick v. U. S., 195 U. S., 65, 71; Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516, 520.)

"A commissioned officer of the Navy can waive the provisions of article 60 of section 1624, Revised Statutes, and allow the proceedings of a court of inquiry to be evidence on a court-martial the sentence of which may extend to his dismissal; * * * and where, at the request of such an officer, the Secretary of the Navy convenes a court-martial to try him on matter which had already been the subject of a court of inquiry, on condition that the proceedings of such court of inquiry be evidence, each party having the privilege, however, of introducing other evidence, the accused is not deprived of any substantial right so that the sentence of the court-martial is invalidated." (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

VII. COMPULSORY PROCESS FOR OBTAINING WITNESSES.

A naval court-martial or court of inquiry has power to issue like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which United States courts of criminal jurisdiction within the State, Territory, or district where such naval court is ordered to sit may lawfully issue; and persons duly subpoenaed as witnesses before general courts-martial or courts of inquiry, who refuse to appear or to testify, may be punished by fine and imprisonment, except where such persons reside beyond the State, Territory, or district in which such naval court is held. (Act Feb. 16, 1909, secs. 11 and 12, 35 Stat., 621, 622.)

"The accused is, in general, entitled to have all the material witnesses for his defense summoned, except when their testimony would be merely cumulative and evidently add nothing to the strength of his case. As far as possible he should be allowed a full and free defense, as the least denial to him of any proper facility, opportunity, or latitude for it may serve to defeat the ends of justice." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 126.)

The Navy Department will not, at the expense of the United States, summon witnesses from a distance, either for the prosecution or the defense, who have no personal knowledge of the facts at issue. The best evidence of the character of the accused is his official record in the service, which is furnished the judge advocate; while members of the court-martial in this case, and officers who are on duty at the place of trial, have had service which should render them fully competent to qualify as experts and testify as such either for the prosecution or the defense. (File 26251-7777: 3, July 5, 1913; Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 125.)

[Medical experts are in practice employed and paid by the accused, and are not summoned by the Government as witnesses for the accused. G. C. M. Rec. Nos. 28613, 29422; Ct. of Inq. Rec. No. 5777; C. M. O. 20-1915, p. 6; see also note to sec. 848, R. S.]

As to right of compulsory process to compel Members of Congress to attend and testify before naval courts, see note to Article I, section 6, clause 1. Upon question of issuing process to secure the attendance of the President as a witness, see note to Article II, section 1, clause 1.

VIII. ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL.

Trials in the Navy.—In trials by naval court-martial the accused is entitled to counsel as a right, and the court can not properly deny him the assistance of a professional or other adviser. Enlisted men to be tried shall be particularly advised of their rights in the premises, and should be represented by counsel, if practicable, unless they explicitly state that they do not desire such assistance. When the accused has no legal adviser, the commandant of the navy yard or station, the commander in chief, or the senior officer present, within whose jurisdiction the court sits, shall, if the accused so requests, detail a suitable officer to act as his counsel. If there be no such officer available, the fact shall be reported to the convening authority for action. An officer so detailed shall perform such duties as usually devolve upon the counsel for the defense before civil courts in criminal cases. As such counsel he shall use all legal means to protect the interests of the accused and to present to the court such defense as the accused may have. (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917; secs. 265, 266.)

"The accused and his counsel have a right to the opinion of the judge advocate, in or out of court, upon any question of law arising out of the proceedings." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 254.)

"In the event that the accused has no counsel, the judge advocate shall protect his interests, having in mind, however, at all times his duties as prosecutor." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 255.)

"The complainant and all defendants or interested parties before a court of inquiry may be allowed to have friends or counsel present during open court." (Naval Courts and Boards, 1917, sec. 508.) "The party whose conduct shall be the subject of inquiry, or his attorney, shall have the right to cross-examine all the witnesses." (Art. 59, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S.)

When an enlisted man, while a prisoner at large awaiting trial by summary court-martial, was afforded ample time in which to secure civilian counsel, but at his trial requested a postponement, for such time as he would be permitted, to go in person to some city in the State for the purpose of engaging counsel, the court properly decided that this request was unreasonable. This action of the court did not deny the accused the right to be represented by civilian counsel, but decided in effect that, as he had had ample time and opportunity to secure counsel and had failed to do so, his demand that he be set at liberty for this purpose was unreasonable. The accused refused to allow any officer of the Navy on duty at place of trial to act as his counsel, whereupon the court properly decided that the accused "had denied himself the benefit of counsel," and proceeded with the trial. (File 26287-15:37, Apr. 7, 1913, S. C. M. Rec. No. 5131, 1913.)

"The courts have repeatedly decided that the defendant in a criminal case in which counsel is appointed for him by the Government has no choice in the matter and his wishes even are not to be consulted as to the individual who shall be designated to defend him." (File 26251-6020: 11, July 7, 1913.)

When it is contended by civilian counsel employed by the accused after completion of the trial, "that the accused was not properly represented by counsel," the commissioned officer appointed to defend him being incompetent, and at the same time it is asserted "that the accused should have been acquitted upon the evidence before the court," the contention is considered "as being wholly without merit." Such contentions have been many times urged in criminal cases, and likewise have been many times frowned down upon and discouraged by the courts. As stated by the supreme court of Missouri in such a case, with reference to counsel representing the accused at his trial, "if he did nothing else he seems to have convinced his successor, the present counsel in the case, that upon the facts disclosed he ought to have obtained an acquittal." (File 26251-6020:11, July 7, 1913.)

[ARTICLE VII.]

[Jury trial in suits at common law.] In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

[ARTICLE VIII.]

[Excessive bail or fines and cruel punishments prohibited.] Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Cruel and unusual punishments.—The imposition of a heavier punishment for a second offense is not prohibited by this article. (McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S., 311.)

"Punishments are cruel when they involve torture or a lingering death; but the punishment of death is not cruel within the meaning of that word as used in the Constitution. It implies something inhuman and barbarous, something more than the mere extinguishment of life." (Ex parte Kemmler, 136 U. S., 436. See also Wilkerson v. Utah, 99 U. S., 130, holding that death by shooting is not cruel and unusual within the meaning of this amendment.)

"Infamous" punishments within the meaning of the fifth amendment "can not be limited to those punishments which are cruel or unusual; because, by the seventh [eighth] amendment of the Constitution, 'cruel and unusual punishments' are wholly forbidden, and can not therefore be lawfully inflicted even in cases of convictions upon indictments duly presented by a grand jury. * * * What punishments may be considered as infamous may be affected by the changes of public opinion from one age to another. In former times, being put in the stocks was not considered as necessarily infamous. And by the first judiciary act of the United States, whipping was classed with moderate fines and short terms of imprisonment in limiting the criminal jurisdiction of the district courts to cases 'where no other punishment than whipping, not exceeding thirty stripes, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months, is to be inflicted.' * * * But at the present day either stocks or whipping might be thought an infamous punishment. For more than a century, imprisonment at hard labor in the State prison or penitentiary or other institution has been considered an infamous punishment in England and America." (Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S., 417.)

"In no case shall punishment by flogging, or by branding, marking, or tattooing on the body be adjudged by any court-martial or be inflicted upon any person in the Navy." (Art. 49, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S.)

"The use of irons, single or double, as a form of punishment in the Navy of the United States is hereby abolished, except for the purposes of safe custody or when part of the sentence imposed by a general court-martial." (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 132; see also act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 8, 35 Stat., 621.)

"It shall be the duty of a court-martial, in all cases of conviction, to adjudge a punishment adequate to the nature of the offense; but the members thereof may recommend the person convicted as deserving of clemency, and state, on the record, their reasons for so doing." (Art. 51, A. G. N., sec. 1624, R. S.)

"In interpreting the eighth amendment it will be regarded as a precept of justice that punishment for crime should be graduated and proportioned to the offense. * * * What constitutes a cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by the eighth amendment has not been exactly defined and no case has heretofore occurred in this court calling for an exhaustive definition. * * * The eighth amendment is progressive and does not prohibit merely the cruel and unusual punishments known in 1689 and 1787, but may acquire wider meaning as public opinion becomes enlightened by humane justice; and a similar provision in the Philippine bill of rights applies to long-continued imprisonment with accessories disproportionate to the offense." (Weems v. U. S., 217 U. S., 349.)

"In determining whether a punishment is cruel and unusual as fixed by the Philippine Commission, this court will consider the punishment of the same or similar crimes in other parts of the United States, as exhibiting the difference between power unrestrained and that exercised under the spirit of constitutional limitations formed to establish justice." (Weems v. U. S., 217 U. S., 349.)

"Where the minimum sentence which the court might impose is cruel and unusual within the prohibition of a bill of rights, the fault is in the law and not in the sentence, and if there is no other law under which sentence can be imposed, it is the duty of the court to declare the law void." (Weems v. U. S., 217 U. S., 349.)

[Rights reserved to the people.] The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

[ARTICLE X.]

[Powers reserved to the States.] The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

ARTICLE XI.

[Limitations upon judicial powers.] The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

ARTICLE XII.

[Election of President and Vice-President.] The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—The President of the Senate shall, in presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

ARTICLE XIII.

SECTION 1. [Slavery and involuntary servitude prohibited.] Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SECTION 2. [Power of Congress.] Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Involuntary servitude.—"It is clear * * * that the amendment was not intended to introduce any novel doctrine with respect to certain descriptions of service which have always been treated as exceptions—such as military and naval enlistments—or to the right of parents and guardians as to their minor children or wards. The amendment, however, makes no distinction between a public and a private service. To say that persons engaged in a public service are not within the amendment is to admit that there are exceptions to its general language, and the further question is at once presented, Where shall the line be drawn? We know of no better answer to make than to say that services which have from time immemorial been treated as exceptional shall not be regarded as within its purview. From the earliest historical period the contract of the sailor has been treated as an exceptional one and involving to a certain extent the surrender of his personal liberty during the life of the contract." (Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S., 275; see also Butler v. Perry, 240 U. S., 328.)

"Does the epithet 'involuntary' attach to the word 'servitude' continuously, and make illegal any service which becomes involuntary at any time during its existence; or does it attach only at the inception of the servitude, and characterize it as unlawful because unlawfully entered into? If the former be the true construction, then no one, not even a soldier, sailor, or apprentice can surrender his liberty even for a day; and the soldier may desert his regiment upon the eve of battle and the sailor abandon his ship at any intermediate port or landing, or even in a storm at sea, provided only he can find means of escaping to another vessel. If the latter, then an individual may, for a valuable consideration, contract for the surrender of his personal liberty for a definite time and for a recognized purpose, and subordinate his going and coming to the will of another during the continuance of the contract. * * * Not that all such contracts would be lawful, but that a service which was knowingly and willfully entered into could not be termed involuntary. Thus if one should agree, for a yearly wage, to serve another in a particular capacity during his life, and never to leave his estate without his consent, the contract might not be enforceable for the want of a legal remedy, or might be void upon the grounds of public policy, but the servitude could not be properly termed involuntary. Such agreements for a limited personal servitude at one time were very common in England, and by statute * * * it was enacted that if any servant in husbandry or any artificer, calico printer, hands-craftsman, miner, collier, keelman, pitman, glassman, potter, laborer, or other person should contract to serve another for a definite time and should desert such service during the term of the contract he was made liable to a criminal punishment. The breach of a contract for personal service has not, however, been recognized in this country as involving a liability to criminal punishment except in the cases of soldiers, sailors, and possibly some others, nor would public opinion tolerate a statute to that effect. But we are also of opinion that, even if the contract of a seaman could be considered within the letter of the thirteenth amendment, it is not, within its spirit, a case of involuntary servitude." (Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S., 275.)

The Supreme Court is unable to conceive upon what theory the exaction by government from the citizen of the performance of his supreme and noble duty of contributing to the defense of the rights and honor of the nation, as the result of a war declared by the great representative body of the people can be said to be the imposition of involuntary servitude in violation of the prohibitions of the Thirteenth Amendment, and is constrained to the conclusion that the contention to that effect is refuted by its mere statement. (Selection Draft Law Cases, 245 U. S., 366.)

A person in the military or naval service, whether an officer or a private, is always more or less subject in his movements, by the very necessity of military rule and subordination, to the orders of his superior officer; and unless it is clear that some unusual restraint upon his liberty of personal movement exists he can not claim that he is unlawfully deprived of his liberty; "otherwise every order of the superior officer directing the movements of his subordinate, which necessarily to some extent curtails his freedom of will, may be held to be a restraint of his liberty, and the party so ordered may seek relief from obedience by means of a writ of habeas corpus." (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

ARTICLE XIV.

SECTION 1. [Citizenship; privileges and immunities of citizens.] All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Citizenship.—"There can not be a nation without a people. The very idea of a political community, such as a nation is, implies an association of persons for the promotion of their general welfare. Each one of the persons associated becomes a member of the nation formed by the association. He owes it allegiance and is entitled to its protection. Allegiance and protection are in this connection reciprocal obligations. The one is a compensation for the other; allegiance for protection and protection for allegiance. For convenience it has been found necessary to give a name to this membership. The object is to designate by a title the person and the relation he bears to the nation. For this purpose the words 'subject,' 'inhabitant,' and 'citizen' have been used, and the choice between them is sometimes made to depend upon the form of the government. Citizen is now more commonly employed, however, and as it has been considered better suited to the description of one living under a republican government, it was adopted by nearly all of the States upon their separation from Great Britain and was afterwards adopted in the Articles of Confederation and in the Constitution of the United States. When used in this sense, it is understood as conveying the idea of membership of a nation and nothing more." (Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall., 162.)

"As appears upon the face of the amendment as well as from the history of the times, this was not intended to impose any new restrictions upon citizenship or to prevent any persons from becoming citizens by the fact of birth within the United States, who would thereby have become citizens according to the law existing before its adoption. It is declaratory in form and enabling and extending in effect. Its main purpose doubtless was, as has been often recognized by this court to establish the citizenship of free negroes, which had been denied in the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Taney in Dred Scott v. Sandford, 1857, and to put it beyond doubt that all blacks, as well as whites, born or naturalized within the jurisdiction of the United States, are citizens of the United States. * * * But the opening words, 'All persons born,' are general, not to say universal, restricted only by place and jurisdiction and not by color or race, as was clearly recognized in all the opinions delivered in the Slaughter House Cases above cited [16 Wall., 36]." (U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649.)

This amendment "declares that persons may be citizens of the United States without regard to the citizenship of a particular State * * * the distinction between citizenship of the United States and citizenship of a State is clearly recognized and established. Not only may a man be a citizen of the United States without being a citizen of a State, but an important element is necessary to convert the former into the latter. He must reside within the State to make him a citizen of it, but it is only necessary that he should be born or naturalized in the United States to be a citizen of the Union. It is quite clear then that there is a citizenship of the United States and a citizenship of a State, which are distinct from each other and which depend upon different characteristics or circumstances in the individual." (Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall., 36.)

Subject to jurisdiction thereof.—"The real object of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution in qualifying the words, 'all persons born in the United States,' by the addition, 'and subject to the jurisdiction thereof,' would appear to have been to exclude by the fewest and fittest words (besides children of members of the Indian tribes standing in peculiar relation to the National Government, unknown to the common law), the two classes of cases—children born of alien enemies in hostile occupation and children of diplomatic representatives of a foreign State—both of which, as has already been shown by the law of England and by our own law from the time of the first settlement of the English colonies in America, had been recognized exceptions to the fundamental rule of citizenship by birth within the country." (U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649, modifying as incorrect a remark in Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall., 36, that "the phrase, 'subject to its jurisdiction,' was intended to exclude from its operation children of ministers, consuls, and citizens or subjects of foreign States born within the United States.")

Indians.—"Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States, members of and owing immediate allegiance to one of the Indian tribes (an alien though dependent power), although in a geographical sense born in the United States, are no more 'born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof' within the meaning of the first section of the fourteenth amendment, than the children of subjects of any foreign government born within the domain of that government, or the children born within the United States of ambassadors or other public ministers of foreign nations. * * * Such Indians, then, not being citizens by birth, can only become citizens in the second way mentioned in the fourteenth amendment, by being naturalized in the United States, by or under some treaty or statute." (Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S., 94; file 9212-48, Aug. 3, 1914; see also, as to status of Indians, U. S. v. Hadley, 99 Fed. Rep., 437; U. S. v. Elm, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15048; Matter of Helf, 197 U. S., 504; 7 Op. Atty. Gen., 746; McKay v. Campbell, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8840; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 680.)

Special provision has been made for the naturalization of Indians by various acts of Congress. Thus by act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat., 390), after providing for the allotment of lands in Indian reservations to any Indian located thereon, it was provided by section 6, as amended by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1447): "That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every member of the respective bands or tribes of Indians to whom allotments have been made shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside; and no Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law. And every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States to whom allotments shall have been made under the provisions of this act, or under any law or treaty, and every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States who has voluntarily taken up, within said limits, his residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein, and has adopted the habits of civilized life, and every Indian in Indian Territory is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States, and is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, whether said Indian has been or not, by birth or otherwise, a member of any tribe of Indians within the territorial limits of the United States, without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the right of any such Indian to tribal or other property." [The words in italics were added by the amendatory act above cited. The original act provided (section 8) that its provisions should not extend to certain tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, "nor to any of the reservations of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians in the State of New York, nor to that strip of territory in the State of Nebraska adjoining the Sioux Nation on the south added by Executive order."]

By act of May 8, 1906 (34 Stat., 182), section 6 of the act of 1887, above quoted, was amended to read as follows: "That at the expiration of the trust period and when the lands have been conveyed to the Indians by patent in fee, as provided in section 5 of this act, then each and every allottee shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside; and no Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law. And every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States to whom allotments shall have been made and who has received a patent in fee simple under the provisions of this act, or under any law or treaty, and every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States who has voluntarily taken up within said limits his residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein, and has adopted the habits of civilized life, is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States, and is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, whether said Indian has been or not, by birth or otherwise, a member of any tribe of Indians within the territorial limits of the United States without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the right of any such Indian to tribal or other property: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, whenever he shall be satisfied that any Indian allottee is competent and capable of managing his or her affairs at any time to cause to be issued to such allottee a patent in fee simple, and thereafter all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land shall be removed and said land shall not be liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuing of such patent: Provided further, That until the issuance of fee-simple patents all allottees to whom trust patents shall hereafter be issued shall be subjected to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any Indians in the Indian Territory."

By section 1992, Revised Statutes, it was provided that, "All persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are declared to be citizens of the United States."

An Indian born in Indian Territory, and who had resided in Oklahoma after its admission as a State, was held to be a citizen of the United States by virtue of the above statutes, and accordingly eligible, if otherwise qualified, for appointment as an assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy. (File 26252-99, May, 1915. In this case the Secretary of the Interior reported: "Inasmuch as all allotments to members of the Cherokee Tribe have been completed and the Cherokee citizenship rolls have been closed as of March 4, 1907, it appears that * * * is now a citizen of the United States and of the State of Oklahoma, and is entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities of such citizens, as prescribed by section 6 of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887 (24 Stat., 390), as amended by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1447).")

An Indian who belonged to the Seneca Nation in the State of New York is prima facie not a citizen of the United States, and should be required to establish his citizenship by satisfactory evidence when he applies for enlistment in the Navy. Suggested, however, as there is no law making citizenship a condition precedent to enlistment, the Navy Department is authorized to enlist such Indians, regardless of citizenship, if considered desirable, this being a matter of departmental regulation. (File 9212-48, Aug. 3, 1914, citing, as to status of New York Indians, Hatch v. Luckman, 118 N. Y. S. 694, affirmed, 140 N. Y. S., 1123, holding that "the Indians of this State do not possess the rights of citizenship and are regarded as wards of the State"; compare 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 181.)

Chinese.—A person of the Chinese race, born in the United States of alien parents, subject to the jurisdiction of this country, is a citizen of United States by birth without regard to whether or not the laws permit the naturalization of persons of his race. "The fourteenth amendment, while it leaves the power where it was before, in Congress, to regulate naturalization, has conferred no authority upon Congress to restrict the effect of birth, declared by the Constitution to constitute a sufficient and complete right to citizenship. No one doubts that the amendment, as soon as it was promulgated, applied to persons of African descent born in the United States, wherever the birthplace of their parents might have been; and yet, for two years afterwards, there was no statute authorizing persons of that race to be naturalized. If the omission or the refusal of Congress to permit certain classes of persons to be made citizens by naturalization could be allowed the effect of correspondingly restricting the classes of persons who should become citizens by birth, it would be in the power of Congress at any time, by striking negroes out of the naturalization laws, and limiting those laws, as they were formerly limited, to white persons only, to defeat the main purpose of the constitutional amendment." (U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649.)

"This claim of American citizenship by a person of Chinese descent is one which can be easily fabricated, and which if fabricated is very difficult to be disproved by the Government. On the other hand, if it is true there are generally no witnesses who can prove it except Chinese witnesses. It is easy to decide such cases on the theory that all such claims are false. Probably many of them are false, but some of them must be true, for there must be a considerable number of persons of Chinese descent born here since Chinese immigration into this country began." (U. S. v. Len Jin, 192 Fed. Rep., 580; file 26252-68, June 19, 1912; file 26252-100, June 1, 1915.)

"In matters of this kind it is the duty of claimants to submit the best possible evidence. As there is no record evidence, the next best must be considered instead. That should contain the affidavit of the claimant, setting forth all he knows of his early life; where he lives, what he did before enlisting in the Navy; all about his parents, if he knows anything about them; when they came to this country; what business, if any, his father engaged in, particularly whether or not he was employed in any diplomatic or official capacity under the Emperor; when his parents left, and where they are at the present time; whether he himself has been out of the country, and if so, when and where, and how long a time he remained away. In other words, a detailed statement of facts tending to support his claim which may be the subject of an independent investigation as to their truth." (Comp. Dec., May 27, 1914, file 26252-84; see also, file 26252-100, June 1, 1915.)

It is the practice of the Navy Department, in cases of this character, after consideration of affidavits submitted by claimants, to refer the papers to the Department of Labor with request for a statement of such pertinent facts as it might be able to furnish. Then when papers are returned, with additional information, it is usually possible to determine whether the evidence is sufficient to establish citizenship. (File 26252-100, June 1, 1915.)

Japanese.—An alien born abroad of Japanese parents is not eligible to become a naturalized citizen of the United States; and where a certificate of naturalization was issued such alien by a court of competent jurisdiction, such certificate is null and void and does not entitle him to the benefits of citizenship. (File 26252, Apr. 9, 1908, 85 S. and A. Memo., 622.)

The son of a German father and a Japanese mother is not a "white person" within the meaning of section 2169, Revised Statutes, and therefore is not eligible to naturalization. (In re Young, 198 Fed. Rep., 714.)

For other cases, see below, "Persons who serve in the Navy or Marine Corps."

Children born on foreign vessel, although within the waters of the United States, are considered as born in the country to which the vessel belongs, and not within the jurisdiction of the United States. Accordingly, they are not citizens of this country by birth. (In re Look Tin Sing, 21 Fed. Rep., 906.)

Citizenship in insular possessions.—See note to Article IV, section 3, clause 2.

Children born abroad of citizen parents "are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States." (Sec. 1993, R. S.) In order for such children to receive the protection of the Government, if they continue to reside outside the United States, they are "required, upon reaching the age of 18 years, to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States," and "to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority." (Act Mar. 2, 1907, sec. 6, 34 Stat., 1229.)

Children born abroad of alien parents shall be deemed citizens of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the parent; provided such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such children. The citizenship of such children shall begin at the time such children begin to reside permanently in the United States. (Act Mar. 2, 1907, sec. 5, 34 Stat., 1229.)

Alien adopted by American parents.—See file 3194-1, October 17, 1906, recommending that rule forbidding the employment of aliens at navy yards be suspended in this case, without deciding question of citizenship.

Stepchildren born of foreign parents.—Should a minor's stepfather become naturalized during the lifetime of said minor's mother, the mother would become a citizen as the result of her husband's naturalization, and being a citizen, her son would also become a citizen. But naturalization of the stepfather after the death of the mother could not have the effect to make the minor child a citizen. (Comp. Dec., June 16, 1913, 148 S. and A. Memo. 2656; U. S. v. Rodgers, 144 Fed. Rep., 711; U. S. v. Keller, 13 Fed. Rep., 82.)

A minor son is not made a citizen by virtue of the fact that his stepfather took out his first citizenship paper prior to his death. (Comp. Dec., June 26, 1913, 148 S. and A. Memo., 2674.)

Any woman who marries a citizen of the United States, and who might herself be lawfully naturalized, is deemed a citizen. (Sec. 1994, R. S.) In such cases the woman shall be assumed to retain her American citizenship after the termination of the marital relation if she continues to reside in the United States, unless she makes formal renunciation thereof before a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, or if she resides abroad she may retain her citizenship by registering as such before a United States consul within one year after the termination of such marital relation. (Act Mar. 2, 1907, sec. 4, 34 Stat., 1229.)

Persons who serve in the Navy or Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or on board of any vessel of the United States Government, may be naturalized under special provisions contained in the act of May 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 542), amending the general naturalization act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 596). Special provisions as to aliens serving with Naval Reserve Force are contained in act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84).

The law providing specifically for naturalization of persons who have served as enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps does not extend the right of naturalization to persons who are excluded by section 2169, Revised Statutes, which is limited to "free white persons and to aliens of African nativity and to persons of African descent." That section of the Revised Statutes has not been repealed by subsequent naturalization laws, but is still in effect. Accordingly, "a citizen of the Philippine Islands who ethnologically was one-fourth white and three-fourths brown or Malay could not be naturalized," notwithstanding his service in the Navy. (In re Alverto, 198 Fed. Rep., 688; see, also, In re Buntaro Kumagai, 163 Fed. Rep., 922, and Bessho v. U. S., 178 Fed. Rep., 245, as to naturalization of Japanese; but see contra, as to Filipinos, 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 12; In re Monico Lopez, C. M. O. 49, 1915, p. 23, and In re Engracio Bawtista, C. M. O. 72, 1917, p. 16. The act of May 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 542), specifically provides for naturalization of Filipinos who serve in the Navy, Marine Corps, or Naval Auxiliary Service.

For general naturalization law, see acts of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 596), and May 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 542).

Forfeiture of citizenship.—"The power of naturalization vested in Congress by the Constitution, is a power to confer citizenship, not a power to take it away. 'A naturalized citizen,' said Chief Justice Marshall, 'becomes a member of the society, possessing all the rights of a native citizen, and standing, in the view of the Constitution, on the footing of a native. The Constitution does not authorize Congress to enlarge or abridge those rights. The simple power of the national legislature is to prescribe a uniform rule of naturalization, and the exercise of this power exhausts it, so far as respects the individual * * *.' Congress having no power to abridge the rights conferred by the Constitution upon those who have become naturalized citizens by virtue of acts of Congress, a fortiori [for stronger reasons], no act or omission of Congress * * * can affect citizenship acquired as a birthright, by virtue of the Constitution itself, without any aid of legislation." (U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649.)

Persons who desert from the military or naval service in time of war are deemed to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights of citizenship, as well as their right to become citizens; and such deserters shall be forever incapable of exercising any rights of citizenship. The same penalties apply to persons who leave the jurisdiction with intent to avoid the draft. (Secs. 1996 and 1998, R. S., as amended by act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 356. As to constitutionality of this enactment, see cases noted under Art. I, sec. 9, clause 3.)

Cancellation of certificate.—When a naturalized alien takes up permanent residence in any foreign country within five years after his naturalization, in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be deemed that it was not his intention to become a permanent citizen of the United States, and his certificate of citizenship may be canceled as fraudulent. (Act June 29, 1906, sec. 15, 34 Stat., 601.)

Expatriation.—The right of expatriation is expressly recognized by section 1999, Revised Statutes. But "no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself when this country is at war." (Act Mar. 2, 1907, sec. 2, 34 Stat., 1228; file 26252-105, Aug. 30, 1916.)

"Any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state." (Act Mar. 2, 1907, sec. 2, 34 Stat., 1228.)

"When any naturalized citizen shall have resided for two years in the foreign state from which he came, or for five years in any other foreign state, it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen, and the place of his general abode shall be deemed his place of residence during said years: Provided, however, That such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Department of State may prescribe." (Act Mar. 2, 1907, sec. 2, 34 Stat., 1228.)

"Any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband. At the termination of the marital relation she may resume her American citizenship, if abroad, by registering as an American citizen within one year with a consul of the United States, or by returning to reside in the United States, or, if residing in the United States at the termination of the marital relation, by continuing to reside therein." (Act Mar. 2, 1907, sec. 3, 34 Stat., 1228.)

Repatriation of citizens who were deemed to have expatriated themselves by service in foreign armies engaged in war with a country with which the United States was also at war, was provided for by act of October 5, 1917 (40 Stat., 340).

Right to vote not right of citizenship.—"Certainly, if the courts can consider any question as settled, this is one. For nearly ninety years the people have acted upon the idea that the Constitution, when it conferred citizenship, did not necessarily confer the right of suffrage." (Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall., 162. See also U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S., 214.)

"Sex has never been made one of the elements of citizenship in the United States. In this respect men have never had an advantage over women. The same laws precisely apply to both. The fourteenth amendment did not affect the citizenship of women any more than it did of men. In this particular, therefore, the rights of Mrs. Minor do not depend upon the amendment. She has always been a citizen from her birth and entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizenship. The amendment prohibited the State, of which she is a citizen, from abridging any of her privileges and immunities as a citizen of the United States; but it did not confer citizenship on her. That she had before its adoption. * * * The amendment did not add to the privileges and immunities of a citizen. It simply furnished an additional guaranty for the protection of such as he already had. No new voters were necessarily made by it. Indirectly it may have had that effect, because it may have increased the number of citizens entitled to suffrage under the constitution and laws of the States, but it operates for this purpose, if at all, through the States and the State laws, and not directly upon the citizen. It is clear, therefore, we think, that the Constitution has not added the right of suffrage to the privileges and immunities of citizenship as they existed at the time it was adopted." (Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall., 162.)

SECTION 2. [Apportionment of Representation.] Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

SECTION 3. [Disabilities resulting from disloyalty of officers.] No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

SECTION 4. [Validity of the public debt, etc.] The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

SECTION 5. [Power of Congress.] The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE XV.

SECTION 1. [Suffrage not to be abridged for race, color, etc.] The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude—

SECTION 2. [Power of Congress.] The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XVI.

[Income taxes.] The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

ARTICLE XVII.

[CLAUSE 1. Election of Senators.] The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

[CLAUSE 2. Vacancies in Senate, how filled.] ² When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

[CLAUSE 3. Amendment not retroactive.] ³ This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

ARTICLE XVIII.

SECTION 1. [Prohibition of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.] After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

SECTION 2. [Power of Congress and States.] The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

SECTION 3. [Ratification required within seven years.] This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

ARTICLE XIX.

SECTION 1. [Woman suffrage.] The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

SECTION 2. [Power of Congress.] Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

PART 2.

THE REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES.

AN ACT

To revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, in force on the first day of December, anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three.

TITLE I.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

CHAPTER ONE.

Sec.

1. Definitions.
2. County.
3. Vessel.

Sec.

4. Vehicle.
5. Company, association.
6. Seal.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, [Definitions.] In determining the meaning of the revised statutes, or of any act or resolution of Congress passed subsequent to February twenty-fifth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, words importing the singular number may extend and be applied to several persons or things; words importing the plural number may include the singular; words importing the masculine gender may be applied to females; the words “insane person” and “lunatic” shall include every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and insane person; the word “person” may extend and be applied to partnerships and corporations, and the reference to any officer shall include any person authorized by law to perform the duties of such office, unless the context shows that such words were intended to be used in a more limited sense; and a requirement of an “oath” shall be deemed complied with by making affirmation in judicial form.—(25 Feb., 1871, c. 71, s. 2, v. 16, p. 431; 13 July, 1866, c. 184, s. 44, v. 14, p. 163; 30 June, 1864, c. 173, ss. 82, 126, v. 13, pp. 258, 287; 20 July, 1868, c. 186, s. 104, v. 15, p. 166.)

Sec. 2. [County.] The word “county” includes a parish, or any other equivalent subdivision of a State or Territory of the United States.—(13 July, 1866, c. 184, s. 9, v. 14, pp. 98, 110.)

Sec. 3. [Vessel.] The word “vessel” includes every description of water-craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.—(18 July, 1866, c. 201, s. 1, v. 14, p. 178; 29 June, 1870, c. 169, s. 7, v. 16, p. 170.)

Sec. 4. [Vehicle.] The word “vehicle” includes every description of carriage or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on land.—(18 July, 1866, c. 201, s. 1, v. 14, p. 178.)

Sec. 5. [Company, association.] The word “company” or “association,” when used in reference to a corporation, shall be deemed to embrace the words “successors and assigns of such company or association,” in like manner as if these last-named words, or words of similar import, were expressed.—(25 July, 1866, c. 242, s. 9, v. 14, p. 241.)

Sec. 6. [Seal.] In all cases where a seal is necessary by law to any commission, process, or other instrument provided for by the laws of Congress, it shall be lawful to affix the proper seal by making an impression therewith directly on the paper to which such seal is necessary; which shall be as valid as if made on wax or other adhesive substance.—(31 May, 1854, c. 60, s. 2, v. 10, p. 297.)

CHAPTER TWO.

FORM OF STATUTES AND EFFECT OF REPEALS.

Sec.

- 7. Enacting clause.
- 8. Resolving clause.
- 9. No enacting words after first section.
- 10. Numbering and frame of sections.

Sec.

- 11. Title of appropriation acts.
- 12. Repeal not to revive former act.
- 13. Repeals not to affect liabilities, unless, etc.

Sec. 7. [Enacting clause.] The enacting clause of all acts of Congress hereafter enacted shall be in the following form: "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."—(25 Feb., 1871, c. 71, s. 1, v. 16, p. 431.)

Sec. 8. [Resolving clause.] The resolving clause of all joint resolutions shall be in the following form: "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."—(25 Feb. 1871, c. 71, s. 1, v. 16, p. 431.)

Sec. 9. [No enacting words after first section.] No enacting or resolving words shall be used in any section of an act or resolution of Congress except in the first.—(25 Feb., 1871, c. 71, s. 1, v. 16, p. 431.)

Sec. 10. [Numbering and frame of sections.] Each section shall be numbered, and shall contain, as nearly as may be, a single proposition of enactment.—(25 Feb., 1871, c. 71, s. 1, v. 16, p. 431.)

Sec. 11. [Title of appropriation acts.] The style and title of all acts making appropriations for the support of Government shall be as follows: "An act making appropriations, (here insert the object) for the year ending June thirtieth (here insert the calendar year).—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 207, s. 2, v. 5, p. 537 [should be "p. 537.'])

Sec. 12. [Repeal not to revive former act.] Whenever an act is repealed, which repealed a former act, such former act shall not thereby be revived, unless it shall be expressly so provided.—(25 Feb., 1871, c. 71, s. 3, v. 16, p. 431.)

Sec. 13. [Repeals not to affect liabilities, unless, &c.] The repeal of any statute shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute, unless the repealing act shall so expressly provide, and such statute shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of such penalty, forfeiture, or liability.—(25 Feb., 1871, c. 71, s. 4, v. 16, p. 432; United States v. Ulrici, 3 Dill., 532.)

- First. The Department of State.
- Second. The Department of War.
- Third. The Department of the Treasury.
- Fourth. The Department of Justice.
- Fifth. The Post Office Department.
- Sixth. The Department of the Navy.
- Seventh. The Department of the Interior.

For laws and decisions relating to the organization of the Department of the Navy, its bureaus and offices, see Title X, "The Department of the Navy," sections 415 to 436, Revised Statutes.

ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Recognized by the Constitution.—The Constitution provides that "the Executive power shall be vested in the President of the United States," but the Constitution does not specify the subordinate administrative functionaries by whose agency or counsels the details of the public business are to be transacted. It recognizes the existence of such official agents and advisers in saying that the President "may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices"; and these officers are again recognized by the Constitution in the clause which vests the appointment of certain inferior officers "in the heads of departments"; and it leaves the number and the organization of those departments to be determined by Congress.

Department of State.—In the execution of this duty the Constitutional Congress proceeded, at an early day of its first session (July 27, 1789), to establish the Department of Foreign Affairs, with "a principal officer therein," to be called the Secretary for the Department of Foreign Affairs.

But this act, which was the commencement of the organization of executive departments under the Constitution, and a commencement in the direction of a systematic and proper distribution of duties, gave place, after the lapse of a few months (Sept. 15, 1789), to an act which changed the name of the Department of Foreign Affairs to that of Department of State.

Department of War.—Next, Congress established the Department of War (Aug. 7, 1789), with a principal officer therein to be called the Secretary for the Department of War, and required to perform duties relative to military or naval affairs.

Department of Treasury.—Next came a Department of Treasury (Sept. 2, 1789), the head of it being called the Secretary of the Treasury.

Attorney General.—At the same session of Congress, in organizing the judicial business of the United States (Sept. 24, 1789), provision was made for an Attorney General.

Postmaster General.—By another act (Sept. 22, 1789) the office of Postmaster General was appointed, subject to the direction of the President, but not in other respects then placed on the same high official relation to the Government as at the present time.

Original Cabinet.—Such was the original basis of the executive organization of the Government. The Secretary of State for political and foreign affairs, the Secretary of War for military and naval matters, the Secretary of the Treasury for those of finance, and the Attorney General for legal and judicial ones, were the immediate superior ministerial officers of the President, and his constitutional counselors during the whole period of the administration of Washington. The Cabinet, so called, consisted of these four officers, who, though not in any sense an organized body with legal attributes as such, yet proceeded to act in concert.

Department of the Navy.—No material modification occurred in the great outlines of superior administration until during the administration of John Adams, when the magnitude of our commerce and the importance of our maritime relations induced the Government to pay more attention to the military marine and to establish the Department of the Navy, the chief officer of which to be called the Secretary of the Navy, whose duty it should be to execute such orders as he might receive from the President relative to the procurement of naval stores and materials, and the construction, armament, equipment, and employment of vessels of war, as well as to all other matters connected with the naval establishment of the United States. (Act Apr. 30, 1798.)

in the general character of the executive departments took place, although all of them underwent more or less modification in details. But, at the opening of Jackson's administration [1829], the Postmaster General, whose duties and responsibilities had grown with the growth of the country to be of vast importance, was called, as the public interests required he should be, to the same duties of a cabinet counselor of the President which had been discharged theretofore by the four Secretaries (State, War, Treasury, and Navy) and the Attorney General. This fact constituted the first important alteration in the arrangements of superior administrative duty and accountability which had occurred since 1798, when the Department of the Navy was established.

Department of the Interior.—By an act passed at the close of Mr. Polk's administration (Mar. 3, 1849), in order to relieve the Departments of State, War, Treasury, and Navy of branches of public business which now required to be placed in other hands, a new executive department was organized, to be called the Department of the Interior.

(6 Op. Atty. Gen., 326, Mar. 8, 1854.)

Department of Agriculture.—Was established by act of May 15, 1862 (12 Stat., 387), section 520, Revised Statutes, but was not made one of the "executive departments" within the meaning of section 158, Revised Statutes, until the act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 659).

Department of Commerce.—Was established as an executive department, under the name of Department of Commerce and Labor, by act of February 14, 1903 (32 Stat., 825). Its name was changed to Department of Commerce by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 736).

Department of Labor.—Was established as a separate executive department by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 736), which amended the act establishing the Department of Commerce and Labor accordingly, making two departments, viz, the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor, instead of one department, as theretofore.

Precedence of executive departments and Cabinet officers.—The Department of the Navy is sixth in order of precedence among the executive departments (see sec. 158, R. S., above); and by act of January 19, 1886 (24 Stat., 1), the Secretary of the Navy is sixth in order of precedence among the Cabinet officers in the matter of succession to the duties of the President, following next after the Postmaster General.

Status of executive departments.—Executive departments, with their heads, are not mere agents of the Government, with no power except such as is expressly conferred, but are, on the contrary, parts of the Government itself, of the executive and coordinate branch of the Government, and their acts when executive are the acts of the Government itself. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 437, 444.)

Nature of duties.—In general, the official duties of the head of one of the executive departments, whether imposed by act of Congress or by resolution, are not mere ministerial duties; the head of an executive department of the Government, in the administration of the various and important concerns of his office, is continually required to exercise judgment and discretion; he must exercise his judgment in expounding the laws and resolutions of Congress under which he is, from time to time, required to act; if he doubts, he has a right to call on the Attorney General to assist him with his counsel; and it would be difficult to imagine why a legal adviser was provided by law for the heads of departments, as well as for the President, unless their duties were regarded as executive, in which judgment and discretion were to be exercised. (Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet., 497.)

The President speaks and acts through the heads of the several departments in relation to subjects which appertain to their respective duties. Hence the act of the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy in a matter under his jurisdiction is considered as being in legal contemplation the act of the President. (Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet., 498, 513; U. S. v. Cutter, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14911; see also, Wolsey v. Chapman, 101 U. S., 755, 769; Williams v. U. S., 1 How., 290; Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S., 202; Truitt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 398; U. S. v. Eliason, 16 Pet., 291, 302; Confiscation Cases, 20 Wall., 92, 109; U. S. v. Farden, 99 U. S., 10, 19; Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 557; U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84, 88; Wood v. Beach, 156 U. S., 548.) Their acts in such matters may be presumed to have been done by the approbation and direction of the President (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324; Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 211), except where he must act judicially (Truitt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 398; Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 557), for they are the eyes and hands of the President, to execute the laws and his executive rules and regulations (6 Comp. Dec., 61); and it is not necessary that orders issued by them should contain express reference to the direction of the President; whether he is named or not, the act or order is to have legal effect as by construction the act or the order of the supreme executive authority, civil and military, of the United States. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 453.) See also Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 191. Many things may be done by the head of an executive department without the actual signature of the President which when done are his acts; but in such case the document should declare it to be the act of the President, performed by the head of the department as his representative. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82.)

Where an order purports on its face to be issued by direction, not of the President but of the Secretary of War, there is nothing to show that the President exercised his discretion under a law providing that the act should be done in the discretion of the President. No one but the President, or the Secretary acting for him as his constitutional organ, can fulfill the requirements of the act; nor can the Secretary delegate to a subordinate the authority to act for the President so as to fix liability upon the Government. (Truitt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 398. See also Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, 336, and note 8, sec. 1393, R. S.)

In all the cases considered—and we are aware of no authority to the contrary—it will be noted that the power of the President was exercised through the head of the department and not by a subordinate. (Truitt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 404.)

The signature of the head of a department does not require the use of pen and ink, held and guided by the hand of the person himself. The impress of his name with a stamp or copperplate by himself or in his presence is legally sufficient. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 670.)

Officers of the Navy are not agents of the Secretary of the Navy, but, like the Secretary himself, are the agents and representatives of the President, who is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy; and any authority the Secretary may exercise over them he exercises solely as representative of the President. (McGowan v. Moody, 22 App. D. C., 148.)

For other decisions, see note to section 417, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 159. ["Department," defined.] The word "Department," when used alone in this Title, and Titles five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, and eleven, means one of the Executive Departments enumerated in the preceding section.

APPLICATION OF SECTION.

Departments established since Revised Statutes.—The terms "departments" and "executive departments" as used in acts of Congress and in the Revised Statutes invariably apply to one or more of the several executive departments mentioned in section 158, Revised Statutes, or included within the terms of that section by subsequent enactments, unless a different meaning is clearly indicated by the context. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 209.)

The term "executive departments" in the Federal statutes refers only to those departments specified in section 158, Revised Statutes, to which certain other departments have since been added. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 62.) See note to section 158, Revised Statutes.

Offices not at seat of government.—The several executive departments are by law established at the seat of government; they have no existence elsewhere. Only those bureaus and offices can be deemed bureaus and offices in any of these departments which are constituted such by law of its organization. The department, with its bureaus or offices, is in the contemplation of the law an establishment distinct from the branches of the public service and the offices thereof which are under its supervision. Thus the office of postmaster or of collector of internal revenue or of pension agent or of consul is not properly a department office—not an office in the department having supervision over the branch of the public service to which it belongs. True, an official relation exists here between the office and the department, one, moreover, of subordination of the former to the latter; but this does not make the office a part of the department. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 262, 267; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

The Marine Corps headquarters is a part of the Naval Establishment, but it is not a part of the Navy Department as established at the seat of Government; it is under the supervision of the executive department, but that relation to the department is not the same as being a part of it. (11 Comp. Dec., 558; file 4600, Apr. 10, 1906; 21686, Apr. 11, 1906.)

Field services, Army, Postal Service.—The term "executive department" refers only to what may be called the department proper located at Washington, and does not include those adjuncts of a department engaged wholly in field service; nor the Army, which is not a part of the War Department proper. (4 Comp. Dec., 551; see also 5 Comp. Dec., 667; 7 Comp. Dec., 126.)

Several of the executive departments have field services as parts thereof, and have bureaus and offices attached to them by law with their respective field services. Certain other general Government establishments, such as the Reclamation Service, put under the control of the Secretary of the Interior by law, are not parts of the Interior Department (within the sense of the public printing act). Like conditions are found in other departments of the Government. The Army is under the administrative control of the Secretary of War, but is not a part of the executive department called the War Department located at the seat of government, and its support is specifically appropriated for. A like condition exists as to the Postal Service as distinguished from the Post Office Department here at the seat of government. (11 Comp. Dec., 601; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 427; 13 Comp. Dec., 733; 15 Comp. Dec., 297; 10 Comp. Dec., 771; 15 Comp. Dec., 111; 20 Comp. Dec., 4.)

The Reclamation Service is not a department or establishment of the Government in Washington, but a field service. (20 Comp. Dec., 42.)

A clerk in a navy yard is not a clerk in an executive department, although the navy yard is under the supervision of one of the executive departments. But a clerk who is performing duties away from a department but by direct orders from and under supervision of the department is regarded as a clerk in the department within the act of June 22, 1906, section 5 (34 Stat., 449), restricting transfers of employees from one department to another department. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

Employees of the navy yard and gun factory in Washington are under the Navy Department but are not a part of an executive department. (11 Comp. Dec., 97.)

Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.—A clerk in the field service of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, is not a clerk in an executive department. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 100.)

The Forest Service in Washington is part of the Department of Agriculture, and clerks on the rolls of the Forest Service in Washington are clerks in an executive department. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 421.)

That portion of the Forest Service in the field outside of Washington is not a part of the Department of Agriculture proper, and printing for such field service is not printing for an executive department. (14 Comp. Dec., 723; see 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 426.)

Independent commission, board, or office.—No board, bureau, or office which is not expressly or by implication under the control of one of the executive departments can be considered as belonging properly to one of them. The Civil Service Commission is not attached in any way to any of the executive departments, nor is it subject in any wise to the control of any of the heads of such departments. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 62.)

The Civil Service Commission is not an executive department within the meaning of section 190, Revised Statutes, respecting the prosecution of claims. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 6.)

The Government Printing Office is not a bureau or division of either of the executive departments. (U. S. v. Allison, 91 U. S., 303, reversing 10 Ct. Cls., 449.)

The office of the warden of the jail, District of Columbia, is a bureau or division of the Department of the Interior, it appearing that the whole subject of the jail is under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to whom the warden is required to report. (Manning's case, 13 Wall., 578; explained in U. S. v. Allison, 91 U. S., 307.)

The term "department" as used in laws relating to the civil service is distinguished from "office," "bureau," and "branch," and subordinates of the several executive departments are distinguished from employees of the last-mentioned governmental agencies. The Government Printing Office, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Smithsonian Institution are independent of any of the executive departments mentioned in section 158, Revised Statutes. The Bureau of Insular Affairs is an integral part of the War Department. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 209.)

The accounting officers of the Treasury do not constitute a "department" within the meaning of an act of Congress referring to claims "rejected or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same." (U. S. v. Harmon, 147 U. S., 273.)

Persons employed in a bureau or division of a department are as much employees in a department as the messengers and others rendering service under the immediate supervision of the Secretary. (Manning's case, 13 Wall., 578.)

The term "executive and judicial departments," as used in section 87 of the public printing act, January 12, 1895 (28 Stat., 622), was intended to include all branches of the executive department of the Government and is not limited in its application to that branch of the service to the principal executive departments, enumerated in section 158, Revised Statutes. Accordingly, held that it includes printing and binding for the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington. (4 Comp. Dec., 273.)

The words "branch" and "department" of the Government are not used synonymously (insec. 365, R. S.). The latter refers to the executive departments recognized by the Constitution and regularly established by law, and the former to those parts of the Government which are created by statute as independent of any department, such as the Government Printing Office, the Smithsonian Institution, and other organizations. (Perry v. U. S. 28 Ct. Cls., 493.)

Sec. 160. [Salaries of Heads of Departments.] Each head of a Department is entitled to a salary of ten thousand dollars a year, to be paid monthly.—(3 Mar., 1873, c. 226, s. 1, v. 17, p. 486; 20 Jan., 1874, c. 11, v. 18, p. 4; 3 Mar., 1875, c. 130, v. 18, p. 396.)

Amendments.—By act of January 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 4), the salaries of heads of departments were reduced to $8,000; by act of February 26, 1907 (34 Stat., 993), their salaries were increased to $12,000 each; by act of February 17, 1909 (35 Stat., 626), the salary of the Secretary of State was again fixed at $8,000, until it was increased to $12,000 by appropriation in the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1186). [This exception to the general law fixing salaries of heads of departments was made in the case of the Secretary of State, in order to render eligible for that office a former member of the Senate who would otherwise have been disqualified under the constitutional provision that “no Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, during such time.” (Const., Art. I, sec. 6, clause 2.)]

The salary of the Secretary of Labor was fixed at $12,000 per annum by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 736), which established the Department of Labor.

By section 6, legislative, etc., appropriation act, July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 509), it was provided that “the rates of salary or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.”

Sec. 161. [Departmental Regulations, Property and Records.] The head of each Department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of his Department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it.—(27 July, 1789, c. 4, v. 1, p. 28; 15 Sept., 1789, c. 14, v. 1, p. 68; 7 Aug., 1849, c. 7, v. 1, p. 49; 2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, v. 1, p. 65; 8 June, 1872, c. 335, v. 17, p. 283; 30 Apr., 1798, c. 35, v. 1, p. 553; 22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 8, v. 16, p. 163; 3 Mar., 1849, c. 108, v. 9, p. 395; 15 Aug., 1876, c. 287, s. 3, v. 18, p. 169.)

The “distribution and performance” of the business of the Department of the Navy, and the custody of its records and property are provided for by sections 418–420, Revised Statutes.

Regulations for the purchase, preservation, and disposition of supplies, etc., for the Navy are to be made by the President, under section 1549, Revised Statutes.

Jurisdiction over property accounts in the Navy is conferred upon the Paymaster General of the Navy by act of March 29, 1894 (28 Stat., 47).

Offenses against public property by persons in the naval service are made punishable by section 1624, Revised Statutes, articles 4, 8, and 14.

Inventories of property in departments are required by section 197, Revised Statutes.

I. DISTRIBUTION OF BUSINESS.

Delegation of duties by head of department.—As Congress well knew that it would be impossible for the head of an executive department to give a hearing in person to all matters coming before that department, it has authorized the head of each department to prescribe rules and regulations for the conduct of the officers and clerks and the distribution and performance of its business. In pursuance of this authority the head of a department may intrust the determination of matters to his assistant, subject of course to his approval. The actions of the assistant on matters of this kind are merely those of a master or referee of a court to hear proofs and report his findings of fact and probably conclusions of law. It is the judge of the court, or in cases of this kind the head of the department, who finally acts on the matter, either adopting the recommendations of the referee or assistant or rejecting them. It is the head of the department who promulgates the conclusion as his own, independent of what the recommendations of his assistant might have been. The courts will conclusively presume that the head of the department acted on the testimony submitted to him as fully as if he had been present at the hearing and had not submitted it to one of his assistants. (Lewis Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 152 Fed. Rep., 787). [In this case the statute required that a hearing be had, and the court held that the head of the department properly assigned the duty of conducting the hearing to one of his assistants.] To same effect, Shillito Co. v. McClung, 51 Fed. Rep., 868; Parish v. U. S., 100 U. S., 500; Chadwick v. U. S., 3 Fed. Rep., 756; U. S. v. Adams, 24 Fed. Rep., 348; Smith v. Hitchcock, 226 U. S., 53; 1 Comp. Dec., 370; 3 Comp. Dec., 730; 4 Comp. Dec., 462. See also note to section 177, Revised Statutes.

Transfer of duties.—This section does not authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to transfer to the disbursing clerk of that department the duties formerly performed by the disbursing clerk of the Bureau of the Census, in the same department. The position of disbursing clerk in the Census Office was established by Congress and has since been regularly appropriated for. Such position must therefore be regarded as essential to the Census organization until Congress otherwise provides, and it would be "inconsistent with law" within the meaning of this section to make the proposed change. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 247.)

Authority and signature of assistant.—So long as the powers delegated to the assistant secretary by his superior remain unrevoked, the authority of the former is coordinate and concurrent with that of the latter. When the assistant acts at a time the Secretary is not absent or sick, under a regulation made by the Secretary prescribing his powers and duties, he should sign with his own proper official designation. When the Secretary is absent or sick, if the assistant is in charge of the department in pursuance of section 177 or 179, Revised Statutes, he should sign as Acting Secretary. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 133.)

II. CUSTODY OF PROPERTY AND RECORDS.

Authority of Secretary.—From this section it appears that the head of a department has full charge and control of all the records and papers belonging to the department. His authority to prescribe whatever rules and regulations he may deem proper regarding their use and custody is unlimited so long as "not inconsistent with law." Such broad discretion would necessarily include the right to determine whether certain documents should or should not be taken from the files of the department for any purpose except for use in connection with departmental business and in accordance with his determination so to instruct the chiefs of bureaus or other officers concerned. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326.)

That the head of a department may legally prohibit an officer from producing in court or elsewhere official records was authoritatively decided in Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S., 459. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326.)

The head of an executive department may properly decline to furnish official records of his department or copies thereof or to give testimony in a cause pending in court between private parties respecting facts which have come to his knowledge officially, whenever in his judgment the production of such papers or the giving of such testimony might prove prejudicial for any reason to the Government or to the public interests. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326.)

The head of an executive department may legally prohibit the chief of a bureau from producing in court any official records of the department or certified copies thereof in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum, and from making or certifying copies of such official records. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326.)

The records of executive departments are quasi-confidential in their nature and must be classed as privileged communications whose production can not be compelled by a court without express authority of a law of the United States. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 326.) See Navy Department General Order No. 121, September 17, 1914.

Transfer of public property.—The duties of a public officer as custodian of public property do not impliedly authorize him to transfer such property to some other branch or establishment of the Government; on the contrary, such duties impliedly prohibit him from transferring the possession of property committed to his care to some one else. Even though the transfer of property would be to the pecuniary advantage of the Government, and even though such transfer if made would meet with the approval of Congress, the custodian of the property has no legal authority to make such transfer. It is for Congress, under the constitutional grant with respect to the regulation and disposition of the territory and other property of the United States, to say what shall be done with the property in question; mere custodians have no such authority. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 524; compare 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 480.) See also note to section 355, Revised Statutes.

Ownership of public property.—The archives or other property of any department are not in the possession of the head of the department, chief of bureau, or clerk under either, but in the possession of the United States. Hence a party cannot by writ of replevin against such head of department or other public officer take papers from the public archives on the allegation of their being his private property. By the writ of replevin a party claiming the rightful possession of a thing takes it away from another party alleged to be wrongfully in possession of the thing. There must be a party possessory, as well as a party claiming adverse right of possession. A writ of replevin issued against a public officer in such a case is a nullity. It is the right and duty of the head of the department, and of all persons under his authority, to resist by force any attempt by writ of replevin or otherwise to abstract any document from the archives of the Government. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 7.)

For other cases, see note to section 418, Revised Statutes.

III. NAVY REGULATIONS.

"There are two general classes of regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, namely, first, those which are expressly approved by the President in accordance with an order issued by Secretary Moody, June 22, 1904. These are known as Navy Regulations and are specifically stated to be issued by authority of section 1547, Revised Statutes; and second, those which are not expressly approved by the President, such as Naval Instructions, Forms of Procedure for Courts and Boards in the Navy and Marine Corps, [now entitled 'Naval Courts and Boards'], Uniform Regulations, Signal Books and Drill Books, General Orders, Court-Martial Orders, Manual for Recruiting Officers, Manual Governing the Transportation of Enlisted Men, Manual for the Medical Department, and Rules for Target Practice and Engineering Competitions. These publications have full force and effect as regulations for the guidance of all persons in the Naval Establishment (Art. 901 (3), Navy Regs., 1913), and have been regarded as authorized by section 161, Revised Statutes (File 3980-942, Apr. 10, 1914), which has never been held to require the President's approval." (File 3980-1044, Mar. 19, 1915.)

Even under section 1547, Revised Statutes, express approval of the President is not required by law, although as a general policy it is obtained in practice. (File 3980-1044, Mar. 19, 1915, citing Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 191; see also 16 Comp. Dec., 354, 358; compare Phillips v. Grain Corporation, 279 Fed. Rep. 244, 248.)

Regulations of the United States Naval Academy are presumably issued by the Secretary of the Navy pursuant to section 1547, Revised Statutes. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, 343; but see contra file 313-51, Mar. 19, 1907.) [These regulations, however, are not issued with the express approval of the President as is the practice under that section.]

Regulations governing deck courts in the Navy are to be prescribed by the President. (Act of February 16, 1909, section 5, 35 Stat., 621).

IV. CONSTITUTIONALITY AND NECESSITY OF LAWS AUTHORIZING REGULATIONS.

Not a delegation of legislative power.—The Supreme Court has held that under the Constitution the power of legislation possessed by Congress can not be delegated (Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 649; see also Cooper v. Lemon, 163 Fed. Rep., 147; but the power conferred by these laws is in no sense a delegated power of legislation. (Butler v. White, 83 Fed. Rep., 578, reversed, on other grounds, 171 U. S., 379; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 249.) Congress "may commit something to the discretion of the other departments, and the precise boundary of this power is a subject of delicate and difficult inquiry, into which a court will not enter unnecessarily." (Wayman v. Southard, per Chief Justice Marshall, 10 Wheat., 1.) While of course Congress can not constitutionally delegate to the President (or head of a department) legislative powers, "it may, in conferring powers constitutionally exercisable by him, prescribe or omit prescribing, special rules of their administration, or may specially authorize him to make the rules. When Congress neither prescribes them, nor expressly authorizes him to make them, he has the authority, inherent in the powers conferred, of making regulations necessarily incidental to their exercise." (McCall's Case, 15 Fed. Cas., 1230.) The power to make laws can not be delegated to an executive department; but prescribing conditions to enforcement of law is not legislation. (Dunlap v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 135; 173 U. S., 65.) Section 161, Revised Statutes, confers administrative power only, and, under the guise of regulation, legislation can not be exercised. (U. S. v. United Verde Copper Co., 196 U. S., 207; U. S. v. George, 228 U. S., 14.) That Congress may enact a law and delegate the power to make all needful rules and regulations not inconsistent therewith is clear. This is not a grant of legislative power; it is only an authority to determine a fact upon which the operation of the law is made to depend. (Cooper v. Lemon, 163 Fed. Rep., 147.) The operation of the law may be postponed until the regulations are issued. (Dunlap v. U. S., 173 U. S., 65.)

Congress can not legislate in detail.—To attempt to regulate by statute the minute movements of every part of the complicated machinery of government would evince a most unpardonable ignorance on the subject. Whilst the great outlines of its movements may be marked out, and limitations imposed on the exercise of its powers, there are numberless things which must be done that can neither be anticipated nor defined, and which are essential to the proper action of the government. (U. S. v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet., 14; U. S. v. Webster, 28 Fed. Cas., 515; Lewis Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 182 Fed. Rep., 13, 16; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S., 462, 480; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 358.) Congress can only legislate in a general way, and large powers are necessarily intrusted to the different departments. They really exercise in this way by delegation, and necessarily so, for the purpose of carrying on the vast affairs of the Government and its details, authority which in a strict sense pertains to Congress. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 438, 439.) The authority thus exercised by heads of departments is "quasi legislative." (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

Constitution vests discretion in Congress.—The Constitution gives Congress power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by that instrument in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof. That power was exercised by Congress when it authorized the head of a department to provide by regulations not inconsistent with law for the government of his department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it. A particular regulation may not have been absolutely or indispensably necessary to accomplish the objects indicated by the statute; but that is not the test to be applied when we are determining whether an act of Congress transcends the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution. Congress has a large discretion as to the means to be employed in the execution of a power conferred upon it. (Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S., 459.)

V. "REGULATIONS" DEFINED.

Must be general.—A regulation is a general rule which affects a class of persons, and not merely an order or instruction issued in a par-tiular case. (Harvey v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cls., 38, 42; Landram v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 74.) The term "regulation" implies a rule for a general course of action, and does not apply to a case in which specific instructions are issued applicable to that case alone. (Christopher v. City of New York, 13 Barb., 567, 573.) The term "regulation" implies uniformity in operation; it must be general in scope and not discriminate in its application. The function of an order relates more particularly to the execution or enforcement of a rule previously made. (Morris v. Board of Pilot Commissioners, 7 Del. Ch., 136; 30 Atl., 667, 669; Indianapolis Union Ry. Co. v. Dohn, 153 Ind., 10, 45 L. R. A., 427.) Regulations must be uniform and applicable to all officers under the same circumstances. (U. S. v. Ripley, 7 Pet., 18.) [Congress has recognized the distinction between regulations and occasional orders, as, for example, in the act of July 31, 1894, section 12 (28 Stat., 209), which provided that "The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe suitable rules and regulations, and may make orders in particular cases, relaxing the requirement of mailing or otherwise sending accounts as aforesaid," etc.] The decision of the head of a department is not in any sense a regulation under section 161, Revised Statutes. Such decision is entitled to and receives great respect and consideration by the court, but it is not binding upon us as a valid regulation of the Department, and can not be so regarded. (Smith v. U. S., 170 U. S., 372, 380.) The power to make regulations does not contemplate pro re nata interventions by the Secretary of the Navy. (15 Op. Att. Gen., 634.)

A regulation is an order in cases in which it applies, as much so as a special command reiterated on each particular occasion. (30 Op. Att. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611; file 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915.)

Not limited to a particular book.—The expression "United States Naval Regulations," as used in the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 962), has been held by the Comptroller of the Treasury to include Uniform Regulations and a statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation giving the number and character of articles of clothing required as the necessary outfit of officers and seamen; although the Comptroller stated that a strict construction of the expression might limit it to the volume known as "Navy Regulations." (2 Comp. Dec., 150.)

All orders not included.—Publications or orders of the Secretary of the Navy or of bureau chiefs or of any officer may be binding upon officers of the Navy, but they are not properly described as "lawful regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy," the violation of which is punishable under the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.). Such regulations are those described in sections 1547 and 1548, Revised Statutes, and consist of orders, regulations, and instructions issued by the Secretary prior to July 14, 1862, with such alterations as he may have since adopted with the approval of the President. (25 Op. Att. Gen., 270.) But see above, "III. Navy Regulations."

Usages included.—A regulation within the meaning of this section need not be promulgated in any set form, nor in writing, but may consist of established usages and practices which have become a kind of common law of the Department. (Ilaas v. Henkel, 216 U. S., 462; 167 Fed. Rep., 211.) A usage becomes established in no other way than by the practice of the department; and the same authority which establishes a usage may change it, for a customary law is abrogated by the establishment of a contrary custom; but while it remains unchanged, it is binding. (U. S. v. Webster, 28 Fed. Cas., 509.) No change in such usage can have a retroactive effect but must be limited to the future. (U. S. v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet., 1, 15.) In the Webster case (above), with reference to the Army, the court said: "Such customs and usages in the military service may be proved by the same kind of evidence as is competent to prove a custom in other cases, but the best evidence will be the regulations of the Army, printed and promulgated by the War Department; for these regulations, if I have a correct view on the subject, are nothing more than an authoritative digest of these customs. These usages and customs, the gradual product of time and circumstances, constitute a sort of complement to the statute law upon the subject; and they may affect the rights and obligations of those who are subject to them in various ways; they may regulate and define their privileges and immunities, the nature of the services which may be required of them, and the kind or amount of compensation to which they may be entitled for the performance of services superadded to the ordinary duties attached to their office. But all this must be consistent with the will of the legislature, expressed in the public laws and not in opposition to it." And a practice of disregarding the terms of an express provision of regulations, although with the acquiescence of the head of the department who issued them, will not accomplish a repeal of the regulation, which nevertheless continues in effect. (Arthur v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 433.) There can be no such thing as a legal custom to disregard a valid regulation. (G. C. M. O. 43, 1906, p. 3.) Customs and usages of the service, whether originating in tradition or in specific orders or rulings, are now, as such, not numerous in the Army (or Navy), a large proportion, in obedience to a natural law, having changed their form by becoming merged in written regulations. (1 Winth., 42; file 26836-7: 35, Feb. 13, 1913, p. 4.)

Classes of Regulations.—Regulations of the Army [and Navy] consist of four classes: (1) General orders promulgated by the President under his constitutional prerogative as Commander in Chief; (2) departmental regulations prescribed by the Secretary under section 161, Revised Statutes; (3) regulations not approved by Congress but made by the President in the exercise of legislative authority conferred by Congress [see sec. 1547, R. S.]; and (4) regulations expressly approved by Congress. (In re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 452.) Orders, regulations, and instructions issued by the Secretary of the Navy under section 1547, Revised Statutes, are presumed to be issued with the approval of the President, though they do not bear his signature. (Adams v. United States, 42 Ct. Cls., 191, 211; file 3980-1044, Mar. 19, 1915.)

VI. WEIGHT OF REGULATIONS.

Have force of law.—Regulations issued by the head of a department have the force and effect of law and are as binding as if incorporated in the statute law of the United States. (Stegall v. Thurman, 175 Fed. Rep., 813; U. S. v. Barrows, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14529; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S., 462; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13; U. S. v. Eliason, 16 Pet., 291; Gratiot v. U. S., 4 How., 80; U. S. v. Runkle, 122 U. S., 543; U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556; Kurtz v. Moffit, 115 U. S., 487, 503; U. S. v. Hutton, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15433; In re Huttman, 70 Fed. Rep., 699; In re Weeks, 82 Fed. Rep., 729; Flynn v. Fuellhart, 106 Fed. Rep., 911; In re Lamberton, 124 Fed. Rep., 446; Alvord v. U. S., 95 U. S., 356; Peters v. U. S., 33 Pac., 1031, 2 Okla., 116; Stansbury v. U. S., 37 Pac., 1083, 2 Okla., 151; Dempsey v. U. S., 44 Pac., 382, 2 Okla., 151; Katzer v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 294, decided Feb. 9, 1914, No. 31888; Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 191; Smith v. Whitney, 116, U. S. 180; Pundt v. Pendleton, 167 Fed. Rep., 997.)

Army regulations concerning the procedure of courts-martial have the force of law. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 27.)

The Navy Regulations have the force and effect of positive law. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 257.)

It is well settled that regulations when directly approved by Congress have the absolute force of law, equally with other legislative acts, until repealed by the same power. Congress has treated regulations so approved by it as having the same force as congressional enactments. (In re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 459.) When Congress expressly adopted and ratified certain general orders issued by the Secretary of the Navy, specifically describing them, and provided that they "shall have the force of law," and further provided that a certain general order, which was quoted in the act, "be and the same is hereby confirmed," it was held by the Attorney General that these orders "were placed upon the footing of legislative acts, and were incorporated into the statute law on the subject of the Navy," and accordingly that alterations therein could be made only by Congress. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 10; see also Maddux v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 193.) [This opinion of the Attorney-General would apparently be applicable to any regulation or order which had been specifically adopted by Congress, either expressly or by necessary implication, as for example, executive orders fixing the pay of enlisted men in the Navy, which were adopted by Congress in the naval appropriation act which made an increase of 10 per cent in the existing pay of enlisted men and provided that such pay should continue in effect until changed by Congress. (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128.) File 26509-106; see Comp. Dec., May 19, 1915, file 26254-1784.]

Must be consistent with law.—Regulations not approved by Congress have the force of law only when founded on the President's constitutional powers as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, or when consistent with and supplementary to the statutes which have been enacted by Congress. (In re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 452.) Regulations to have the force of law must be consistent with the statutes, and the Supreme Court of the United States has never held otherwise. (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S. 46; U. S. v. Ross, 239 U. S., 530; Scheide v. U. S. 52 Ct. Cls., 247.) The regulations of the Army and Navy have the force of law with respect to a person or subject matter of which the Secretary has control, but to have the force of law they must conform to the law. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 191.) It will not be pretended that department regulations can control or annul an act of Congress, and when it is said they have the force of law nothing more is meant than that they have that virtue when they are consistent with the laws established by the legislature. (U. S. v. Webster, 28 Fed. Cas., 515, 516.)

Must be limited as to persons and subject matter.—While in general terms it is often said that the Army and Navy Regulations have the force and effect of law, this can only be properly so where we are dealing with a person or subject matter over which the Secretary has official control. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494.) But where the Secretary of the Navy has control of the subject matter, a lawful regulation issued by him is binding on the accounting officers of the Treasury, and will protect disbursing officers from responsibility for compliance therewith. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611. See also file 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915.) Army regulations, issued pursuant to the explicit provisions of a statute and in execution thereof, when sanctioned by the President, have the force of law, and are conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury; accordingly, when an officer presents with his account an authentic document or certificate of his having commanded a post or arsenal for which an order has been issued from the War Department in conformity with the provisions of the Army Regulations allowing double rations, his right to them is established, nor can they be withheld without doing him a wrong for which the law gives him a remedy. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 567.)

Are not the law itself.—Regulations promulgated under section 161, Revised Statutes, have the force of law, but they are not the law itself. (Laurey v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 265.) Regulations prescribed by the President and heads of departments under authority granted by Congress may be regulations prescribed by law so as to lawfully support acts done under them and in accordance with them, and may thus have, in a proper sense, the force of law; but it does not follow that a thing required by them is a thing so required by law as to make the neglect to do the thing a criminal offense in a citizen where a statute does not distinctly make the neglect in question a criminal offense. Accordingly, held that a provision in an act of Congress authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make all needful regulations for the carrying into effect of the act authorized a regulation requiring dealers to keep certain books; but violation of said regulation was not omitting or failing to do a thing "required by law for the carrying on or conducting of his business" within the meaning of another section of the same act affixing a penalty. [In this case the language of the law was held not to intend to affix a penalty for the failure to keep the books in question.] U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S., 677; explained and distinguished in Caha v. U. S., 152 U. S., 211, and In re Kollock, 165 U. S., 526; see also U. S. v. Butter, 195 Fed. Rep., 657; U. S. v. Maid, 116 Fed. Rep., 650; compare Coopersville Cooperative Creamery Co. v. Lemon, 163 Fed. Rep., 145; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 440. (See below, "VII. LIMITATIONS UPON POWER TO MAKE REGULATIONS.")

Regulations made by the head of a department pursuant to statutory authority and in administration thereof, not being demanded by law, are not law in the sense in which that term is used in section 356, Revised Statutes. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 183.)

Violation of a regulation may be made criminal offense by statute.—Congress may enact that the violation of certain rules and regulations of the Secretary, not inconsistent with law, which it authorized him to make, should subject property to forfeiture or persons to fine and imprisonment; but such penalties can not be inflicted for violation of a regulation of an executive department without previous legislative sanction. (U. S. v. Butter, 195 Fed. Rep., 657; see also McKirley v. U. S., 249 U. S., 397; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470; Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S., 364; U. S. v. Grimaud, 220 U. S., 506; U. S. v. Breen, 40 Fed. Rep., 403; U. S. v. Ormsbee, 74 Fed. Rep., 208.) Congress has provided that violation of any lawful general order or regulation issued by the Secretary of the Navy shall be punishable by court-martial when the offender is a person in the naval service. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 8, clause 20; see also U. S. v. Moody, 164 Fed. Rep., 269.)

Where a statute made it a crime to bribe an officer of the United States to violate his "lawful duty," the Supreme Court held that bribery of an officer to violate a department regulation was punishable under the statute. (Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S., 462.) Where the law made it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust certain claims, but did not prescribe the manner in which he should obtain the necessary evidence prior to making payments, it was held by the Supreme Court, per Mr. Justice Story, that it devolved upon the Secretary by regulations to prescribe what evidence should be furnished in support of claims; that a regulation made by the Secretary requiring the submission of affidavits and authorizing such affidavits to be made before an officer who was not expressly authorized by any law of the United States to administer an oath in support of claims was a valid regulation; and that any person making a false affidavit in accordance with such a regulation was guilty of false swearing and punishable as for willful and corrupt perjury under an act of Congress then in effect. (U. S. v. Bailey, 9 Pet., 238; see also 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 420; and see 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 14, and file 26543-87:2 Apr. 28, 1913, as to affidavits required in Navy cases.)

Not punishable if regulation invalid.—In a case in which the Secretary of the Interior by regulation required an affidavit to be submitted by a homestead claimant, it was held by the Supreme Court that submitting a false affidavit under such regulation was not perjury within the statute which dealt with "any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered." In its opinion, the court remarked: "Where the charge is of crime, it must have clear legislative basis," citing Williamson v. U. S., 207 U. S., 425; U. S. v. Keitel, 211 U. S., 370; U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S., 677; Morrill v. Jones, 106 U. S., 466; U. S. v. Biggs, 211 U. S., 507; and Dwyer v. U. S., 170 Fed. Rep., 160. However, in this case it appeared that the law itself provided what evidence and affidavits should be required of homestead claimants, and that the regulation of the Interior Department added to the statutory requirement; and the court held that this was not an exercise of administrative power, as contemplated by Congress in authorizing regulations to be made, but was an attempted exercise of legislative powers, as the authority to make regulations did not authorize the Secretary either to abridge or enlarge the statute. (U. S. v. George, 228 U. S., 14.)

Regulation may operate as contract.—A regulation which has not the force of law, may nevertheless, if not inconsistent with law, operate as a contract between the Government and those who work under it, and thereby acquire full force and effect. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 191; 13 Comp. Dec., 819; 5 Comp. Dec., 666.)

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized by this section to issue regulations prescribing the duties of pay officers, and requiring them to make payments upon certain contingencies. Such regulations must be read as applying only to items fair on their face. In such case an officer refusing to pay would both breach his bond and render himself liable to court-martial, while an officer obeying the regulation can not be held responsible, either financially or criminally. The regulation in such case has binding force of law on the accounting officers of the Government. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611, reversing 21 Comp. Dec., 554, 357, 245.)

VII. LIMITATIONS UPON POWER TO MAKE REGULATIONS.

Must be consistent with law.—Section 161, Revised Statutes, specifically provides that regulations made thereunder shall be "not inconsistent with law."

Must not usurp power of Congress.—Where a regulation issued by the head of a department amounts to an attempted exercise of the power of legislation, it is invalid (U. S. v. United Verde Copper Co., 196 U. S., 207; U. S. v. George, 228 U. S., 14; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 249). The head of a department can not by his regulations alter or amend a statute; all that he can do is to regulate the mode of proceeding to carry into effect what Congress has enacted. (Morrill v. Jones, 106 U. S., 466; see also U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46, 49; U. S. v. Bishop, 120 U. S., 51; Campbell v. U. S., 107 U. S., 407;

U. S. v. Garlinger, 169 U. S., 316; Merritt v. Welsh, 104 U. S., 694.) Rights, duties, and obligations defined by statute can not be taken away or abridged by regulations. (Laurey v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 259.)

Must not be retroactive.—A regulation manifestly can not have a retroactive effect so as to invalidate a claim for services performed before it was in existence. (U. S. v. Davis, 132 U. S., 334; Taylor v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 393; see also U. S. v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. 1, 15; Campbell v. U. S., 107 U. S., 407; U. S. v. Ala. R. Co., 142 U. S., 621.)

Can not prescribe a criminal offense.—A departmental regulation can not prescribe a criminal offense. (U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S., 677; U. S. v. George, 228 U. S., 14; U. S. v. Butler, 195 Fed. Rep., 657. But see U. S. v. Bailey, 9 Pet., 238; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S., 462.) See above, "VI WEIGHT OF REGULATIONS."

Limitation as to persons.—The law does not authorize the head of a department to dictate to a civil employee where he shall live (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 23); nor can he make regulations for the conduct of persons not connected with his department (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 524; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494; 16 Comp. Dec., 529; 18 Comp. Dec., 992; but see U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 567; Op. Atty. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611; however, persons dealing with agents of the government are bound to take notice of the extent of the authority conferred by law and regulation upon such agents (Whiteside et al v. U. S., 93 U. S., 247; Noble v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cls., 608; Lind v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 648).

Can not change terms of statute.—A regulation can not enlarge the terms of a statute by requiring a public officer to furnish a bond with a condition different from that which the statute called for (U. S. v. Tingey, 5 Pet., 115; Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571); nor by requiring a homestead claimant to furnish affidavits additional to those required by statute (U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S., 677); but where a statute authorized publishers to send sample copies through the mails at a reduced rate of postage, without limiting the number of sample copies so sent, a regulation issued by the Postmaster General prescribing the maximum number of sample copies to be so transported at reduced rate was valid. (Lewis Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 182 Fed. Rep., 13.) A regulation can not enlarge or restrict the liability of an officer on his bond (Meads v. U. S., 81 Fed. Rep., 684; Smith v. U. S., 170 U. S., 372). A regulation may supplement a statute, but can not supersede it. (Roberts v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 411; 15 Comp. Dec., 658.)

The authority to make rules and regulations is to make such administrative regulations as are necessary to carry out the existing law. The right is not given to amend or enlarge the law. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 389; see also notes to secs. 436 and 1409, R. S.)

Private debts.—In the absence of statute, no public officer can make the United States an agent or trustee for the collection of private debts between citizens. (Taggart's case, 17 Ct. Cls., 322, compare file 26254-1709.)

VIII. RULES FOR TESTING VALIDITY OF REGULATIONS.

Validity sustained if possible.—In determining whether a regulation promulgated by the head of a department is consistent with law, we must apply the rule of decision which controls when an act of Congress is assailed as not being within the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution; that is to say, a regulation adopted under section 161 of the Revised Statutes should not be disregarded or annulled unless, in the judgment of the court, it is plainly and palpably inconsistent with law. Those who insist that such a regulation is invalid must make its invalidity so manifest that the court has no choice except to hold that the Secretary has exceeded his authority and employed means that are not at all appropriate to the end specified in the act of Congress. (Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S., 459; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 478.) A regulation must be interpreted, if possible, to harmonize with the law. (Roberts v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 411.)

Valid unless clearly contrary to statute.—In determining whether a regulation issued by the Secretary of the Navy is valid, the only proper inquiry is whether and how far a rule has been laid down by the statute which restrains the disposition of the subject by executive order or department regulation and usage. Unless the laws on the subject positively require a different action, or altogether prohibit that taken, the questions are subject to administrative settlement by the Secretary of the Navy. In other words, the law prescribes certain rules on the subject; beyond these rules, executive order, regulation or usage have full scope and play. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122.)

Valid when approved by Congress.—A regulation directly approved by Congress has the absolute force of law. (In re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 459; file 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915, citing Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 22; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 180, 181; see also Op. Atty. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611.)

Ratification of Congress implied.—When Congress allows a regulation to be formulated and published and carried into effect year after year, the legislative ratification must be implied, and it does not comport with national honor to allow such a regulation of an executive department to exist and individuals to acquire rights upon the faith thereof, and then to withhold payment and question the legality of the regulation. (Maddux v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 193.) Congress has not hesitated to annul Navy regulations of which it did not approve, as, for example, Executive order of November 12, 1908 (file 27109), limiting the duty of the Marine Corps to shore stations. (Act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 773; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 259.) Hence, inaction by Congress is equivalent to legislative sanction of regulations, and should be so regarded in testing the validity of a regulation or construing a statute on the same subject. (Maddux v. U. S., above; Benjamin v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cls., 482; file 5252-36 May 5, 1910; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 646, 647; see also 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 626; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 591; file 7657-167, Jan. 17, 1913; 7657-389, Sept. 25, 1916.) Otherwise, however, where there is a direct conflict between the regulation and a statute. (20 Comp. Dec., 741.)

Where regulations have been in force for a number of years and have received the tacit if not express approval of Congress, the court does not feel at liberty to disregard them and hold that they are not authorized by law, even though it "may well be doubted" that they are authorized by law. (Garlinger v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls. 477.)

IX. WAIVER OF REGULATIONS.

Regulations not binding on head of department.—The Supreme Court has held that an Army regulation which in terms applies only to persons in the military service does not bind the Secretary of War, as he "is not in the military service in the sense of the regulation, but on the contrary is a civil officer" (U. S. v. Burns, 12 Wall., 246); and the Court of Claims, citing this case, held that Army Regulations, "which are intended for the direction and government of the officers and agents of the department, do not bind the Commander in Chief nor the head of the War Department" (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 215).

May be waived by power which made them.—The above decision of the Court of Claims was cited by the Comptroller of the Treasury (9 Comp. Dec., 280) in holding that a provision of the Army Regulations which was adopted pursuant to and in execution of a statute was one "of ordinary departmental regulations, made to administer the annual appropriations by the heads of departments," and was binding upon the subordinates of the Secretary of War so long as he did not abrogate or waive it; but that "you [Secretary of War] are at liberty in my judgment to change, modify, or waive it at your pleasure, always provided that you do not violate some law in your changed or modified regulation, or by such change, modification, or waiver you do not encroach upon or abrogate some contractual right fully vested before notice of such change, modification, or waiver." (See also 2 Comp. Dec., 306; 3 Comp. Dec., 218; 4 Comp. Dec., 40, 266, 387; 6 Comp. Dec., 589.)

In a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, July 22, 1899, it was said: "It has been held time out of mind in this office * * * by such able lawyers and officers as Whittlesey, Tayler, and Lawrence, not mentioning its later incumbents, that the authority making a regulation could waive its enforcement, and that any affirmative act by such power contrary to the provisions of such regulation would be treated as a waiver." (6 Comp. Dec., 60.)

Where the Secretary of the Navy suspended the operation of a regulation in a particular case, the Comptroller of the Treasury, January 8, 1900 (6 Comp. Dec., 589), held that the regulation "was waived by the power which made these regulations," and continued: "I know of no law or rule which forbids the head of a department from suspending the operation of a regulation similar to this in individual instances. The effect of such suspension is to cause a want of uniformity in the operation of these regulations, but if this be a fault it is chargeable to the administration of the regulations and does not imply the want of power to so suspend the operation of a regulation in individual cases."

"Where a rule or regulation is not the essence of a law, but is simply a vehicle for its proper administration, the authority making such rule or regulation may waive its performance or non-performance." (4 Comp. Dec., 387.)

Regulations issued by the head of a department pursuant to statutory authority and in administration thereof can be made or annulled at will and enforced or waived as seems expedient. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 183.)

A departmental regulation relating to internal administration and practice, when not specially authorized or demanded by law, is such as the officers of bureaus and departments can make or annul at will or enforce or waive as seems expedient. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 521.)

View that regulations can not be waived.—In a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, above-cited (9 Comp. Dec., 280), there was quoted an opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the Army showing that his office had "uniformly and consistently held to the view that Army Regulations made in pursuance of a statute, although subject to modification by the Secretary of War, are not subject to exceptions or waiver in individual cases by the same authority." The Comptroller did not concur in the Judge Advocate General's opinion in that case. However, in 21 Comp. Dec., 482, it was held that relations "made pursuant to or in execution of a statute, are quasi-legislative, and may be held to become a part of the law and to be of the same force as the statute itself, and though they may be changed by the authority making them they are binding on such authority as well as others so long as they are not changed and exceptions can not be granted to them. The power to make regulations involves the power to alter, amend, modify, or revoke the same, but said action must be general and not by specific exception or waiver, and can only be prospective, not retrospective. The distinction should be made between essential regulations made in aid of a statute, such as are necessary to the execution of the statute, and thus have the appearance of being of a decidedly legislative character and regulations which are merely supplemental to them and relate to the minor details of the machinery for the execution of the statute. These latter are made in aid of the statute also, but are not of the character referred to and may more properly be termed administrative and directory. The line of demarcation may not be easily defined but there is a clear distinction between the two classes of regulation." (See also Op. Atty. Gen. to Sec. of Navy, July 19, 1918; file 26254-2476:5.)

Upon the question whether a provision in the Navy Regulations of 1909 could be waived in an individual case, the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, January 22, 1913 (file 5460-60), remarked that said regulation was substantially identical with a provision contained in the Navy Regulations which received the express sanction of Congress in the enactment of section 1547, Revised Statutes (citing Atty. Gen.'s opinion of Oct. 27, 1909, file 3890-530); that "there are authorities both ways upon the question whether a regulation such as the foregoing may be waived in individual cases. The specific question has never been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States"; and for these and other reasons, recommended that the regulation in question be not waived.

A regulation which has been specifically approved and adopted by Congress, and has thus been placed on the footing of legislative enactments, can be altered only by Congress and can not be waived by the Secretary of the Navy or the President. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 10; in re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 452; Maddux v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 193; file 26509-106.)

The waiver of a regulation, the same as the revocation or amendment thereof, can not, however, be given a retroactive effect so as to disturb vested rights. (U. S. v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet., 1, 15; Campbell v. U. S., 107 U. S., 407.)

Necessity of President's authority to waive.—The Comptroller of the Treasury has announced the principle that regulations promulgated by the President may be waived by the head of a department; for the heads of the several departments "are the eyes and hands of the President, to execute the laws and his executive rules and regulations; their acts are in a sense his acts; when they waive a regulation, he waives it; for they act for and represent the power and authority of the President." (6 Comp. Dec., 60.)

In the case of Navy Regulations issued under section 1547, Revised Statutes, it has been held that if they may be waived in any case, express authority of the President for such waiver is necessary, for the principle is recognized in the decisions that regulations can be waived only by the authority which made them, and the President and the Secretary of the Navy both act in issuing regulations under section 1547,

Revised Statutes. (File 5460-60.) [In 6 Comp. Dec. 589, it was held that a regulation issued under section 1547, Revised Statutes, might be waived by the Secretary of the Navy, who was "the power which made these regulations." At the time said decision was rendered, this statement of the Comptroller was literally true, as the regulations in question were not expressly approved by the President. Section 1547 was afterwards construed by the Attorney General (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270) to require the express approval of the President, both for the issuing of regulations thereunder, and the making of changes and alterations therein, which opinion has ever since been followed in practice, although it was later held by the Court of Claims that regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy under section 1547, Revised Statutes, are presumed to have been issued with the approval of the President, though they do not bear his signature (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 211; file 3980-1044, Mar. 19, 1915.)]

Evidence of waiver.—Usually an approval of an act by the head of a department, where a rule or regulation has not been complied with, is sufficient evidence of its waiver. (4 Comp. Dec., 387; 6 Comp. Dec., 60.)

In Arthur v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 433, the Court of Claims held that the Army Regulations were obligatory upon the Surgeon General of the Army; and where that officer, with the acquiescence of the Secretary of War and of the accounting officers, repeatedly disregarded such regulations in practice during a period of many years, this did not constitute a legal custom and operate to annul the regulations in question. In this case, however, the court stated that it was unnecessary to decide whether the Secretary of War's approval of contracts varying from the regulations had the effect of suspending their operation in the individual cases.

Policy of Navy Department.—On May 5, 1909, the Secretary of the Navy (Meyer) announced that "The department is averse to waiving the provisions of the regulations except in cases of great necessity". (File 17789-10.)

Sec. 162. [Hours of business.] From the first day of October until the first day of April, in each year, all the Bureaus and offices in the State, War, Treasury, Navy, and Post-Office Departments, and in the General Land-Office, shall be open for the transaction of the public business at least eight hours in each day; and from the first day of April until the first day of October, in each year, at least ten hours in each day; except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law.—(4 July, 1836, c. 352, s. 12, v. 5, p. 112; 20 June, 1874, c. 328, v. 18, p. 109.)

Closing the departments for deceased ex-officials is prohibited by act of March 3, 1893, section 4 (27 Stat., 715). Draping of building in mourning is prohibited by the same act, section 3 (27 Stat., 715).

The public buildings are to be kept open during stated hours for the transaction of public business. (Palmer's case, 17 Ct. Cls., 230, 234; argument for United States.)

"Days declared public holidays by law."—The following days in each year are holidays in the District of Columbia "for all purposes," viz., the first day of January, commonly called New Year's Day; the twenty-second day of February, known as Washington's Birthday; the Fourth of July; the thirtieth day of May, commonly called Decoration Day; the first Monday in September, known as Labor's Holiday; the twenty-fifth day of December, commonly called Christmas Day; every Saturday after twelve o'clock noon; any day appointed or recommended by the President of the United States as a day of public fasting or thanksgiving; and the day of the inauguration of the President, in every fourth year. (District of Columbia Code, act Mar. 3, 1901, sec. 1389, 31 Stat., 1404; amended by act June 30, 1902, 32 Stat., 543.)

Every Saturday after 12 o'clock noon in the District of Columbia is one of the days declared public holidays by law. Consequently, heads of departments are not obliged to require labor of employees after the hour of noon on Saturdays. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 40; see also Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 191.)

The "hours of business" as fixed by this section were, by act of June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 109), also made the maximum hours of labor which could be required of employees in the departments. The act cited read as follows:

"That it shall be the duty of heads of the several executive departments, and of the heads of the respective bureaus therein, in the interests of the public service, to require of all clerks of class one and above, and of chiefs of divisions, such hours of labor as may be deemed necessary for the proper dispatch of the public business, not exceeding, however, the time for which said departments are by law required to be open for business, any usage to the contrary notwithstanding." (See 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 40.)

The "hours of labor" of employees in the departments are now fixed at not less than seven, "except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order," by act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 715), as amended by act of March 15, 1898, section 7 (30 Stat., 316). See 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 472, 474, as to pay of employees "during the temporary suspension of actual work in the departments in obedience to an Executive order." See also 22 Comp. Dec., 425.

Hours of labor for Government laborers, workmen, and mechanics are fixed at eight by section 3738, Revised Statutes, and act of August 1, 1892 (27 Stat., 340), and amendments thereto.

Heads of departments are required to extend hours of labor in certain cases, when public business is in arrears. (Act Mar. 3, 1893, 27 Stat., 715, as amended by act Mar. 15, 1898, 30 Stat., 317.)

By Naval Instructions (art. 82) the usual hours of labor for clerks in the Navy Department are fixed at from 9 a. m. to 4.30 p. m.

Sec. 163. [Classification of Department clerks.] The clerks in the Departments shall be arranged in four classes, distinguished as the first, second, third, and fourth classes.—(3 Mar., 1853, c. 77, s. 3, v. 10, p. 209; 3 Mar., 1855, c. 175, s. 4, v. 10, p. 669; 15 Aug., 1876, c. 287, s. 3, v. 19, p. 169.)

For compensation allowed clerks of these four classes see section 167, Revised Statutes.

Other provisions concerning the classification of clerks are contained in section 6, act January 16, 1883, "to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States" (22 Stat., 405). Pursuant to said act a classification of the civil service, based upon section 163, Revised Statutes, was adopted by each head of a department and Government establishment by direction of the President on June 9, 1896. It arranges officers and employees, other than mere laborers and persons whose appointments are confirmed by the Senate, in classes according to annual salary or compensation, as follows:

- A. Less than $720.
- B. $720 or more and less than $840.
- C. $840 or more and less than $900.
- D. $900 or more and less than $1,000.
- E. $1,000 or more and less than $1,200.
1. $1,200 or more and less than $1,400.
2. $1,400 or more and less than $1,600.
3. $1,600 or more and less than $1,800.

4. $1,800 or more and less than $2,000.
5. $2,000 or more and less than $2,500.
6. $2,500 or more.

The classification further provides that no person appointed as a laborer without examination under the rules shall be assigned to work of the same grade as that performed by classified employees, and no person shall be admitted to any place not excepted from examination by the rules until he shall have passed an appropriate examination before the Civil Service Commission and his eligibility has been certified to the appointing officer by the commission. (Report of United States Civil Service Commission, 1912, p. 128; art. 53, Naval Instructions.)

The Railway Mail Service has a different classification, prescribed by section 1402, Revised Statutes, as amended by an act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 555), and a different classification of certain employees under the Post Office Department is prescribed by act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1206).

Sec. 164. [Examinations for appointment. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows: "Sec. 164. No clerk shall be appointed in any department in either of the four classes above designated until he has been examined and found qualified by a board of three examiners, to consist of the chief of the bureau or office into which such clerk is to be appointed and two other clerks to be selected by the head of the department." (3 Mar., 1853, c. 97, s. 3, v. 10, p. 209; 3 Mar., 1855, c. 175, s. 4, v. 10, p. 669.)

It was repealed by act of January 16, 1883 (22 Stat., 403), which act provides for examinations to be conducted by the Civil Service Commission. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 245.)

See also provision of section 1753, Revised Statutes, authorizing President to prescribe regulations for admission to the civil service; and see sections 1754 and 1755 as to preference of persons disabled in the military or naval service.

Sec. 165. [Clerkships open to women.] Women may, in the discretion of the head of any Department, be appointed to any of the clerkships therein authorized by law, upon the same requisites and conditions, and with the same compensations, as are prescribed for men.—(12 July, 1870, c. 251, s. 2, v. 16, pp. 230, 250.)

See sec. 167 R. S.

Sec. 166. [Distribution of clerks, temporary detail.] Each head of a Department may, from time to time, alter the distribution among the various bureaus and offices of his Department, of the clerks and other employees allowed by law, except such clerks or employees as may be required by law to be exclusively engaged upon some specific work, as he may find it necessary and proper to do, but all details hereunder shall be made by written order of the head of the Department, and in no case be for a period of time exceeding one hundred and twenty days. Provided, That details so made may, on expiration, be renewed from time to time by written order of the head of the Department, in each particular case, for periods of not exceeding one hundred and twenty days. All details heretofore made are hereby revoked, but may be renewed as provided herein.

This section was amended to read as above by section 3 of the act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat., 179). Originally it provided as follows: "Sec. 166. Each head of a department may from time to time alter the distribution among the various bureaus and offices of his department of the clerks allowed by law, as he may find it necessary and proper to do."—(3 Mar., 1853, c. 97, s. 3, v. 10, p. 211.)

Heads of departments are required to make annual report to Congress of employees detailed to other offices. (Act Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 7, 28 Stat., 808.)

By the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., 1098) and other years, it was provided that all employees appropriated for in the Office of Naval Records and Library "shall be exclusively engaged on the work of this office during the fiscal year" for which the appropriations were made.

As to delegation of duties required by law to be performed by "head of the department" see note to sections 161 and 177, Revised Statutes, and 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 133.

For references to laws concerning detail of employees from executive departments to the Civil Service Commission, from executive departments to the office of the President of the United States, from duty outside of the District of Columbia to duty in the executive departments in the District of Columbia, and concerning transfer of employees from one department to another department, see note to section 169, Revised Statutes.

Expenditures for personal services in the Navy Department from appropriations made for the naval service, are restricted by the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 833), the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., 1287), and by similar acts for other years.

Scope of section.—This section as amended restricts the detail of employees to the department in which they are regularly employed. From a consideration of other laws bearing on the subject (secs. 3678 and 3682, R. S.; act Aug. 5, 1882, sec. 4, 22 Stat., 255) it seems clear that Congress has strictly limited the power and discretion of a head of department in this matter of employment and detail to cases falling within the amended section 166, Revised Statutes. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 302.)

But see, 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 131, holding that "there appears to be nothing in the statutes which prohibits the head of a department from permitting a clerk of his department to render additional services, without extra compensation the necessity for which arises in his or in other departments." Specifically it was held in this case that the disbursing clerk of one department might legally be designated to disburse moneys for another department, pending the appointment of a disbursing clerk as authorized by law for the latter department.

Payment of clerks transferred.—In making distribution of clerks among the various bureaus and offices in accordance with this section, care should be taken that in no case shall any such clerk be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses or for any specific or general purpose, unless such payment is specifically provided for in the law granting the appropriation. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 750.) The use of contingent appropriations for clerical compensation is restricted by section 3682, Revised Statutes, and by act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255).

"Chiefs of divisions" of the Department of Agriculture are "clerks" within the language of this section. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 703; see also note to sec. 169, R. S.)

Increasing and diminishing clerks of different grades.—By act of August 15, 1876, section 3 (19 Stat., 169), it was provided: "That whenever, in the judgment of the head of any department, the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class or by a female clerk, it shall be lawful for him to diminish the number of clerks of the higher grade and increase the number of the clerks of the lower grade within the limit of the total appropriation for such clerical service," etc. [This provision is apparently repealed by the act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255), which act in part provides as follows: "That no civil officer, clerk * * * or other employee shall, after the first day of October next, be employed in any of the executive departments, or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof at the seat of government, except only at such rates, and in such numbers, respectively, as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress for such clerical and other personal services for each fiscal year. * * * And all laws and parts of laws authorizing the employment of officers, clerks * * * or other employees at a different rate of pay or in excess of the numbers authorized by appropriations made by Congress be, and they are hereby, repealed." See also 19 Comp. Dec., 708.]

Where the position of disbursing clerk in a bureau was established by Congress, and has since been regularly appropriated for, such position must be regarded as essential to the organization of the bureau in question, and until Congress otherwise provides it would be "inconsistent with law," within the meaning of section 161, Revised Statutes, for the head of the department to transfer the duties formerly performed by such disbursing clerk to the disbursing clerk of the department to which the bureau is attached. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 247.) See, in this connection, 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 131, noted above, under "Scope of section."

Sec. 167. [Salaries of persons employed in the Departments.] The annual salaries of clerks and employes in the Departments, whose compensation is not otherwise prescribed, shall be as follows:

First. To clerks of the fourth class, eighteen hundred dollars.

Second. To clerks of the third class, sixteen hundred dollars.

Third. To clerks of the second class, fourteen hundred dollars.

Fourth. To clerks of the first class, twelve hundred dollars.

Fifth. To the women employed in duties of a clerical character, subordinate to those assigned to clerks of the first class, including copyists and counters, or temporarily employed to perform the duties of a clerk, nine hundred dollars.

Sixth. To messengers, eight hundred and forty dollars.

Seventh. To assistant messengers, seven hundred and twenty dollars.

Eighth. To laborers, seven hundred and twenty dollars.

Ninth. To watchmen, seven hundred and twenty dollars.

(3 Mar., 1853, c. 97, s. 3, v. 10, pp. 209, 211; 22 Apr., 1854, c. 52, s. 1, v. 10, p. 276; 18 Aug., 1856, Res. 18, v. 11, p. 145; 23 July, 1866, c. 208, s. 6, v. 14, p. 207; 12 July, 1870, c. 251, s. 3, v. 16, pp. 230, 250.)

As to classification of department clerks, see section 163, Revised Statutes, and note thereto. Employment and compensation of women—see section 165, Revised Statutes.

This section is modified by act of March 4, 1913, section 2 (37 Stat., 790), fixing the pay of telephone-switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen.

Rules for division of time and computation of pay, in the cases of persons in the civil service whose stated compensation is annual or monthly, are given in the act of June 30, 1906, section 6 (34 Stat., 763). Similar rules for computation in cases of persons in the Army are contained in the act of June 12, 1906 (34 Stat., 248).

Congress has provided that appropriations made in the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act are not to be used for compensation of any person incapacitated otherwise than temporarily for performing service. (Act Mar. 3, 1917, sec. 3, 39 Stat., 1121.)

Annual report to Congress of employees "below a fair standard of efficiency" is required by act of July 11, 1890 (26 Stat., 268).

Compensation may be paid in certain cases where employee is injured in course of employment. (Act Sept. 7, 1916, 39 Stat., 742.)

An employee of the Government is entitled to the compensation allowed by law, and is not limited by the amount appropriated by Congress. (Graham's case, 1 Ct. Cls., 380.)

Where one statute establishes the salary of an officer at $5,000 and another appropriates only $3,600 therefor, and the latter contains no provision repealing acts inconsistent and none declaring that payment of the amounts appropriated shall be in full compensation, it is simply a case of inadequate appropriation, and the officer can recover the difference. (French's Case, 16 Ct. Cls., 419.)

The compensation of public officers depends upon general and continuing laws, irrespective of the annual appropriation acts. (Collins v.

U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 22; see also Briggs v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 48; Freedman's Bank v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 19.)

A statute which fixes the annual salary of a public officer at a designated sum without limitation as to time, is not abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments appropriating a less amount for his services for a particular fiscal year, but containing no words which expressly or impliedly modify or repeal it. (U. S. v. Langston, 118 U. S., 389; Vulté's case, 47 Ct. Cls., 324, 327, 233 U. S., 509, 514; 20 Comp. Dec., 821; 22 Comp. Dec., 691.)

Where a salary is fixed by statute, and by inadvertence or mistake an inadequate sum is appropriated, no intention to reduce the compensation can be imputed. But where Congress by prospective appropriation acts gives notice to officers that their salaries will be reduced, and this notice is given before the service is rendered, and the intention is clear, the legislative will must be given effect. This would not apply to services performed before the appropriation act was passed. (Dyer v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 171, distinguishing Graham's case. See also sec. 169 and note.)

Where the words "in full compensation" are contained in an appropriation act where the amount appropriated is less than the salary fixed by law, such words have a clear, distinct, and well-understood signification, which can not be overlooked or argued out of the act. (Fisher v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 323; U. S. v. Fisher, 109 U. S., 143; see also U. S. v. Mitchell, 109 U. S., 146.)

Sec. 168. [Temporary clerks.] Except when a different compensation is expressly prescribed by law, any clerk temporarily employed to perform the same or similar duties with those belonging to clerks of either class, is entitled to the same salary as is allowed to clerks of that class.—(22 April, 1854, c. 52, s. 1, v. 10, p. 276.)

Any person temporarily appointed under certain circumstances to perform the duties of a pay officer in the Navy during a vacancy shall be entitled to receive the pay of such grade while so acting. See sections 1381 and 1564, Revised Statutes.

Section 242, Revised Statutes, provides that "No clerk temporarily employed in the

The failure of Congress to make specific appropriation for the salary of the disbursing clerk of a department would not appear to be an insuperable objection to the appointment of such clerk in view of section 176, Revised Statutes, which fixes the total compensation of such appointee until otherwise provided by Congress. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 130.)

The whole question depends on the intention of Congress as expressed in the statutes. (Belknap v. U. S., 150 U. S., 594, quoting U. S. v. Mitchell, 109 U. S., 146, 150, and holding that "the payment to an Indian agent of the amount appropriated by Congress for the payment of his salary being less than the amount fixed by general law as the salary of the office, and his receipt of the sum paid 'in full of my pay for services for the period herein expressed', is a full satisfaction of the claim." See also Dunwoody v. U. S., 143 U. S., 578; Wallace v. U. S., 133 U. S., 180; Kidder v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 46; Francis v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 403.)

[Act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255), provides that no persons shall be employed in any executive department except at such rates and in such numbers as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress. By legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of July 16, 1914, section 6 (38 Stat., 509), it is provided that "the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law."]

Department of the Treasury shall receive a greater compensation than at the rate of $1,200 a year for the time actually employed."

See section 171, Revised Statutes, as to employment of extra clerks during sessions of Congress.

Sec. 169. [Appointment, number, and compensation of employés authorized.] Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employés, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.—(Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet. 230; 3 Mar. 1875, c. 129, v. 18, pp. 360, 361, and 365; 3 Mar., 1875, c. 130, ss. 2, 3, v. 18, p. 399.)

See note to section 166, re distribution of clerks and temporary details.

Employment of persons beyond appropriations made by law is prohibited by act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255), and act of August 15, 1876, section 5 (19 Stat., 169).

Expenditures beyond appropriations prohibited by section 3679, Revised Statutes.

Acceptance of voluntary service prohibited, except in sudden emergencies. (Act May 1, 1884, 23 Stat., 17; act Mar. 3, 1905, 33 Stat., 1257; and act Feb. 27, 1906, 34 Stat., 49.)

Salaries paid from "lump sum" appropriations can not be increased except under certain prescribed conditions. (Act Aug. 26, 1912, sec. 7, 37 Stat., 626, as amended by act Mar. 4, 1913, sec. 4, 37 Stat., 790; 19 Comp. Dec., 184, 270, 303, 569, 578, 789; 20 Comp. Dec., 9, 128, 131.)

Oath of office prior to appointment is prescribed by section 1757, Revised Statutes, as amended.

Employees serving for a less period than a year are limited to the maximum pro rata rate provided by law for the time they may be in service. (Sec. 2687, R.S.; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 358; Marston v. U. S., 71 Fed. Rep., 496.)

Civil employees paid from appropriations for the military or naval establishment or other branch of the public service outside of District of Columbia can not be detailed for duty in any division of any executive department in the District of Columbia. (Act June 22, 1906, sec. 6, 34 Stat., 449; similar provision is contained in act of Aug. 5, 1882, sec. 4, 22 Stat., 255.)

Classified employees not to be detailed for duty outside of District of Columbia at expense of appropriations in legislative, executive and judicial act, except for duty pertaining directly to their work at seat of Government. (Act May 10, 1916, sec. 5, 39 Stat., 120.)

Expenditures for personal services in the Navy Department from appropriations made for the naval service. (See note to section 166, R. S.)

The employment of enlisted men of the Marine Corps on clerical duty at headquarters of the Marine Corps is permitted by law. (File 4600, Apr. 10, 1906; 21686, Apr. 11, 1906.)

Detail of employees from the executive departments to the Civil Service Commission for duty in the District of Columbia is prohibited by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 750); 20 Comp. Dec., 106.

Temporary detail of employees in executive departments to office of President of the United States is authorized by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 749).

Transfer of employees from one department to another department is restricted by act of June 22, 1906, section 5 (34 Stat., 449), as amended by acts of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 383), and March 28, 1918 (40 Stat., 498).

As to payment of employees temporarily detailed to other departments, see 22 Comp. Dec., 145, and section 3678, Revised Statutes.

For number and compensation of employees authorized by appropriations of Congress, in accordance with this section, to be employed in the Navy Department, see act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 403) and subsequent appropriation acts. See also section 416, Revised Statutes, which specified number and compensation of certain principal employees who "shall be" in the Navy Department; and section 6, legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 509), providing that "the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law."

The word "employ" as used in this section is equivalent to "appoint" (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 355, 363).

The expression "clerks of the several classes recognized by law," as used in this section, is not limited in its effect to the four main classes of clerks mentioned in sections 163 and 167, Revised Statutes, but has always been treated as including chiefs of division, chief clerks, and disbursing clerks of the various departments. Accordingly, held that the chief clerk, chiefs of bureaus, and translator in the State Department are all "clerks" within the meaning of this section, and are to be appointed by the Secretary of State. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 363.) In this case the so-called "bureaus" in the State Department were originally established by regulation, and although recognized by Congress in appropriation acts they were not bureaus within the meaning of section 178, Revised Statutes. The Attorney General said: The word "bureau," like many others, is loosely used in the revision, the terminology of the codified statutes not having been made entirely definite and uniform.

The position of chief of the division of Alaska fisheries in the Bureau of Fisheries ($3,500) was established by an appropriation item, silent as to how or by whom the position should be filled. The general character of his duties is not unlike that of chiefs of divisions generally in the several executive departments. Accordingly, held that appointment should be made by head of the department. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

This section was unquestionably intended to have a very comprehensive scope, and to embrace a variety of subordinate officers in the different departments, besides those designated as clerks of the first, second, third, and fourth classes; and in view of the fact that section 169 is a standing provision it is also fair to assume that Congress did not intend it to be limited to the classes of clerks "recognized by law" at the time of the revision. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

Engravers, electrotypers, photographers (Coast and Geodetic Survey), and also physicists, assistant physicists, assistant chemists, laboratory assistants, aids, and superintendent of mechanical plant (Bureau of Standards), fall within the provisions of this section and should be appointed by the head of the department. While they are in the main positions requiring technical skill, they are "clerks" within the meaning of section 169. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116; approving 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 6.)

In the Navy Department the solicitor, the chief clerk of the department, and the chief clerks of the different bureaus are in practice appointed by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with this section. The appointment of disbursing clerks is specifically provided for by section 176, Revised Statutes.

A local agent at Seattle, Wash., should be employed by the head of the department under this section. I am advised informally by the Bureau of Fisheries that his duties are to be strictly clerical. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

This section does not invest the head of the Treasury Department with authority to appoint certain deputy bureau officers authorized by law in that department; but their appointment must be made under the Constitution by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. (See Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, par. 2.; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 3; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 627.)

The office of Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries, at an annual salary of $3,000, created by an item in an appropriation act, which failed to specify how or by whom the appointment should be made, or to prescribe its duties, should be filled by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In the absence of an express enactment to the contrary the appointment of any officer of the United States belongs to the President and Senate (citing 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 1; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 3, 449; 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 532; 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 98, 298; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 627). The title of the office in this case necessarily implies a power to perform all the duties which might be performed by the Commissioner of Fisheries, the nature of whose duties is defined by statute, and whose appointment is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Accordingly, held that a Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries appointed by the head of the department was not legally appointed, his status being that of a de facto officer. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

The positions of assistant salmon agent ($1,800), salmon warden ($1,200), and deputy wardens ($600), must be filled by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. There is no express statutory authority giving the head of the department power to make such appointments. These are officers whose duties are manifestly not clerical, nor can they be considered otherwise within the scope of section 169, Revised Statutes. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

The sole responsibility of every appointment in a department rests upon the head of that department, except where the power to appoint is otherwise specially provided for by statute. The power of appointment carries with it the power of removal. These powers, being discretionary, can not be delegated by the head of the department, though he may inquire, investigate, and determine by the aid of subordinates; but the final determination must be his act and not theirs. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 355; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 274. See note to sec. 177, R. S.)

The power of appointment, especially where fixed by statute in the head of the department, can not be delegated to subordinates without authority of Congress; but where Congress authorizes the chief clerk of a department to sign official papers during the temporary absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretaries of the department, this is sufficient authority to sign appointment of a special disbursing agent, although the law required such agents be appointed by the head of the department. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 273.)

The written appointment of the Secretary of the Navy, or his approval in writing, is required for the employment of any clerk, etc., in the Navy Department. (Art. 52, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

Appointments made by the heads of bureaus in accordance with statute are presumed to be made with approval of the head of the department, and are made by the head of a department within the meaning of section 2, Article II, of the Constitution. (Price v. Abbott, 17 Fed. Rep., 506; Frelinghuysen v. Baldwin, 12 Fed. Rep., 396; Stanton v. Wilkeson, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13299; Ekiu v. U. S., 142 U. S., 651.)

A substitute clerk can not be employed in place of a clerk in the Navy Department on leave without pay. (15 Comp. Dec., 856; compare Chisolm v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 94.)

A substitute clerk can be employed under a rule of the Civil Service Commission, if approved by the President, where such employment would impose no additional expenditure upon the Government, i. e., where the regular clerk is temporarily absent without pay. And such a rule would not be contrary to the act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255). (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 597.)

An employee entering upon duty on the last day of a month which has 31 days can not lawfully be paid for services rendered on that day. (20 Comp. Dec., 165, affirming 13 Comp. Dec., 64 and 75; see also 20 Comp. Dec., 772, 867.)

Date of appointment.—An appointment made to take effect at a prior date is inoperative prior to the date on which it was actually made and accepted. (8 Comp. Dec., 521; 20 Comp. Dec., 214, citing Morey v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cls., 603; Jackson v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 39; 17 Comp. Dec., 452.)

An appointment to office is an act done, a direct exercise of power in some particular direction, not necessarily evidenced in writing but none the less complete at a particular point of time; and until the act is done it remains undone. Something more than the act of appointment also is necessary to invest the person appointed with the office and to give him the right to compensation. It must be accepted, and it is not understood how an appointment can be accepted, either formally or impliedly, before it has been made. (8 Comp. Dec., 521; Lee v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 62.)

Acceptance is a distinct act from the appointment.—The appointment is the sole act of the appointing power; the acceptance is the sole act of the officer, and is in plain common sense posterior to the appointment. As he may resign, so may he refuse to accept; but neither the one nor the other is capable of rendering the appointment a nonentity. (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch., 137.)

Acceptance is necessary to vest the office in the appointee, and a formal acceptance is the evidence which in the public service generally, it has been customary to require. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 229.) But where a former officer of the Army asked the President in writing to reinstate him under an act of Congress, and the President did so, no further formal acceptance was necessary. (Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 31.)

Execution of the oath of office may be regarded as an acceptance of the office. (8 Comp. Dec., 521; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 284.)

Expiration of appointment.—Where the appointment is to terminate, under its terms, upon the happening of an event which is uncertain, notice to the employee of its happening is necessary to end his contract of employment, notwithstanding the prior occurrence of the event which fixed the termination. (20 Comp. Dec., 149.)

Right to compensation.—A salary that is established by statute can not be increased or diminished by executive officers. (Adams v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 115; Dyer v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 166.)

A public officer may recover the lawful compensation of his office, notwithstanding that he accepted a less amount and receipted in full therefor. (Adams v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 115; quoted with approval, Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 607.)

It is not within the power of the head of a department to reduce or change the salary of an officer which Congress has specifically prescribed; and an agreement to that effect, being contrary to public policy, will not be enforced or given effect as an estoppel. (Miller v. U. S., 103 Fed. Rep., 413; Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 605. (See also notes to secs. 166 and 167, Revised Statutes.)

There is no legal necessity for the re-appointment of the present incumbents of offices where there appears to be no evidence that Congress intended to abolish the existing positions and create new ones. The mere creation of a new administrative division in which such positions are placed does not establish new offices. The existing offices are continued. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116; compare 21 Comp. Dec., 49.)

A new appointment is not made necessary merely by reason of an increase in the salary of an office. (29 Atty. Gen., 116; citing 1 Comp. Dec., 267; 1 Comp. Dec., 313; 3 Comp. Dec., 336; compare 4 Comp. Dec., 28.)

Sec. 170. [Extra compensation to clerks restricted.] No money shall be paid to any clerk employed in either Department at an annual salary, as compensation for extra services, unless expressly authorized by law.—(3 Mar., 1863, c. 97, s. 3, v. 10, pp. 209, 211; 17 June, 1844, c. 105, s. 1, v. 5, pp. 681, 687; 28 Feb., 1867, Res. 30, s. 2, v. 14, p. 569.)

Compensation for extra services "which any officer or clerk may be required to perform," unless expressly authorized by law, is prohibited by section 1764, Revised Statutes. See that section and note thereto.

Compensation not to be charged by persons in departments for administering oaths of office to employees on appointment or promotion. (Act Aug. 29, 1890, 26 Stat., 371.)

This section was expressly modified by act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat., 384), which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to pay additional compensation to clerks of his department during that year, for work done "in addition to the usual business hours;"

also by act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1372), providing that, "To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to effect a change in the methods of bookkeeping in the Treasury Department, and to install a double entry system of bookkeeping, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to remain available until expended; said sum to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury, as he shall determine, in payment for services of such of the force of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Treasury Department as may be needed to carry the change into effect, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 170, 1763, 1764, and 1765 of the Revised Statutes."

Sec. 171. [Employment of extra clerks during sessions of Congress.] No extra clerk shall be employed in any Department, Bureau, or office, at the seat of Government, except during the session of Congress, or when indispensably necessary in answering some call made by either House of Congress at one session to be answered at another; nor then, except by order of the head of the Department in which, or in some Bureau or office of which, such extra clerk shall be employed. And no extra clerk employed in either of the Departments shall receive compensation except for time actually and necessarily employed, nor any greater compensation than three dollars a day for copying, or four dollars a day for any other service.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 15, v. 5, p. 526; 15 Aug., 1876, c. 287, s. 5, v. 19, p. 169.)

In connection with this section consult act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255), and act of August 15, 1876, section 5 (19 Stat., 169), which acts prohibit employment of clerks, etc., by heads of departments beyond appropriations made by law. Although the former act expressly repealed section 172, Revised Statutes, it contained no specific reference to this section. Section 3682, Revised Statutes, and act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255), restrict use of contingent and miscellaneous appropriations for clerical compensation.

This section was repealed (according to the Comptroller) by the act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255). (Comp. Dec., Oct. 28, 1915, file 26254-1906.)

Sec. 172. [Restriction on employment of messengers and laborers. Repealed.]

This section was as follows: "SEC. 172. No messenger, assistant messenger, laborer, nor other subordinate assistant shall be employed in any department, bureau, or office at the seat of Government, or paid out of the contingent fund appropriated to such department, bureau, or office, unless such employment is authorized by law, or is necessary to carry into effect some object for which an appropriation has been specifically made."—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 15, v. 5, p. 526.)

It was repealed by act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 302.)

Sec. 173. [Duties of chief clerks, supervising subordinates.] Each chief clerk in the several Departments, and Bureaus, and other offices connected with the Departments, shall supervise, under the direction of his immediate superior, the duties of the other clerks therein, and see that they are faithfully performed.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 13, v. 5, p. 525.)

For authority of chief clerks to administer oaths of office, see act of August 29, 1890 (26 Stat., 371.)

For authority of chief clerk to act as chief of bureau, see section 178, Revised Statutes. As to meaning of "chief clerk" see note to section 178, Revised Statutes.

Chief Clerk, Navy Department.—To facilitate and aid the Secretary of the Navy in the exercise of his many and varied and important duties and responsibilities, he has an office force, supervised by the chief clerk of the department, which is required to determine and pass upon all matters requiring his action which, by law or regulation, are not otherwise required to be handled. (File 22353-13.)

Sec. 174. [Duties of chief clerks; monthly reports, etc.] Each chief clerk shall take care, from time to time, that the duties of the other clerks are distributed with equality and uniformity, according to the nature of the case. He shall revise such distribution from time to time, for the purpose of correcting any tendency to undue accumulation or reduction of duties, whether arising from individual negligence or incapacity, or from increase or diminution of particular kinds of business. And he shall report monthly to his superior officer any existing defect that he may be aware of in the arrangement or dispatch of business.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 13, v. 5, p. 525.)

Condition of business is required to be reported monthly to head of department by chiefs of bureaus and offices, by act of March 15, 1898 (30 Stat., 317). In the Navy Department a report of condition of business is required quarterly from bureaus and offices. (Art. 11, Naval Instructions.)

Heads of departments are required to make quarterly reports to the President of the condition of business by act March 15, 1898, section 7 (30 Stat., 316.)

Sec. 175. [Action on reports of chief clerks.] Each head of a Department, chief of a Bureau, or other superior officer, shall, upon receiving each monthly report of his chief clerk, rendered pursuant to the preceding section, examine the facts stated therein, and take such measures, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by law, as may be necessary and proper to amend any existing defects in the arrangement or dispatch of business disclosed by such report.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 13, v. 5, p. 525.)

Heads of departments are required to extend hours of labor in certain cases when public business is in arrears. (Act Mar. 3, 1893, sec. 5, 27 Stat., 715, as amended by act Mar. 15, 1898, 30 Stat., 317.)

Sec. 176. [Disbursing clerks.] The disbursing clerks authorized by law in the several Departments shall be appointed by the heads of the respective Departments, from clerks of the fourth class; and shall each give a bond to the United States for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office according to law in such amount as shall be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and with sureties to the satisfaction of the Solicitor of the Treasury; and shall from time to time renew, strengthen, and increase his official bond, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct. Each disbursing clerk, except the disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department, must, when directed so to do by the head of the Department, superintend the building occupied by his Department. Each disbursing clerk is entitled to receive, in compensation for his services in disbursing, such sum in addition to his salary as a clerk of the fourth class as shall make his whole annual compensation two thousand dollars a year.—(3 Mar., 1853, c. 97, s. 3, v. 10, pp. 209, 211; 3 Mar., 1855, c. 175, s. 4, v. 10, p. 669; 3 Mar., 1873, c. 226, s. 1, v. 17, p. 485 (492).)

The salary of the disbursing clerk in the Navy Department was fixed at $2,250 per annum by act of May 29, 1920 (41 Stat., 663), and appropriation acts for prior years. Specific provision for salary of a disbursing clerk in the Navy Department was omitted in the appropriation act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., 1282), the position of "disbursing officer" at $3,000 per annum having in the meantime been created from lump sum appropriations. (See Estimates of Appropriations, 1922, p. 102.)

The appointment of a superintendent for the State, War, and Navy Department Building, by detail from officers of the Army or Navy, is provided for by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 553). See note to section 415, Revised Statutes.

Temporary appointment in case of absence or sickness of disbursing clerk is authorized by act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1027).

The employment of special disbursing agents is provided for by section 3614, Revised Statutes. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 132.)

Disbursing agents abroad are not to be employed for naval service, under contract or otherwise, unless they hold appointments confirmed by the Senate. (Sec. 1550, R. S.)

Duty of disbursing officers to examine payrolls and vouchers. (Act Aug. 23, 1912, 37 Stat., 375.)

Disbursing officers may apply for and obtain decision of Comptroller of the Treasury concerning legality of proposed payments (act July 31, 1894, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 208); and may appeal to Comptroller of the Treasury from disallowances in their accounts by auditor. (Same act and section.)

On general subject of accounting, see section 236, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

All books, papers, and other matters relating to the office or accounts of disbursing officers of the executive departments shall at all times be subject to inspection and examination by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and the auditor of the Treasury authorized to settle such accounts, or by the duly authorized agents of either of said officials. (Act Feb. 19, 1897, 29 Stat., 550.)

Disbursing officers are required to furnish heads of departments with certain data for annual reports to Congress (sec. 193, R. S.) and are required to make annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury of checks outstanding for three years or more. (Sec. 310, R. S.)

Secretary of the Treasury is required to report annually to Congress disbursing officers delinquent in rendering accounts. (Act May 28, 1896, 29 Stat., 179.)

Embezzlement—on general subject of, see sections 86–96, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105, 1106), and note to section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Advances of public money are prohibited by section 3648, Revised Statutes; and such unauthorized advances are punishable as embezzlement under section 87, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1109).

A disbursing officer who fails safely to keep public moneys in his care is guilty of embezzlement. (Sec. 88, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1105. See note to sec. 1624, R. S., art. 14.)

A disbursing officer who deposits money in a bank not designated as a depository in accordance with sections 3620 and 3639, Revised Statutes, is liable with his sureties for any loss that may arise from the failure of such bank (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 24); and his conduct in depositing public money in a place not authorized by law is punishable as embezzlement under section 87, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105); and the conduct of the banker or officers of the bank in knowingly receiving such money on deposit is also punishable as embezzlement by section 96, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1106).

Disbursing officers are prohibited by law from exchanging Government funds in their control for other funds, with certain exceptions. Head of department is required immediately to suspend from duty any disbursing officer who violates this prohibition, and make report to the President to the end that such disbursing officer may be promptly removed from office or restored to duty. (Secs. 3639 and 3651, R. S.) And such unauthorized exchange of Government funds is punishable as embezzlement under section 89, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105). See note to section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14.

Taking receipt for larger sum than paid is punishable as embezzlement under sections 86 and 95, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105, 1106).

Trading in Federal or State funds is punishable under section 103, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1107).

Failure in rendering accounts as provided by law is punishable as embezzlement by section 90, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1105); other proceedings against delinquent officer are provided for by sections 3625-3638, Revised Statutes, and acts of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 206), and May 28, 1896, section 4 (29 Stat., 179).

Embezzlement of public or private money or property, keeping false accounts, or making false returns shall be punished by fine and imprisonment by any court, civil or military, having jurisdiction. (Sec. 5306, R. S.)

All moneys received by any officer for the United States must be promptly paid into the Treasury, without deduction (sec. 3617, R. S.); officers violating this requirement shall be removed from office and forfeit moneys withheld (sec. 3619, R. S.); and such failure to deposit public money when required so to do is punishable as embezzlement. (Sec. 91, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1105.) But see note to section 236, Revised Statutes, under "SET-OFF."

Any officer of United States who sells for a premium any Treasury note or other public security not his own property, without accounting for such premium, shall be forthwith dismissed from office. (Sec. 3652, R. S.)

Disbursing officers are not allowed to take receipts for payments by check; nor duplicate receipts for cash payments; nor to require a receipt in advance of actual payments. (Navy Regs., 1913, art. R-4303.)

Disbursing officers are not allowed to pay expense connected with any commission or inquiry, except courts-martial or courts of inquiry in the military or naval service, unless special appropriation therefor is made by law. (Sec. 3681, R. S.)

No money can be paid to any bonded officer as compensation who is in arrears to the United States. (Sec. 1766, R. S.)

Upon application to Court of Claims, disbursing officers may be relieved of responsibility for losses incurred without fault or neglect on their part. (Judicial Code, act Mar. 3, 1911, secs. 145, 147, 36 Stat., 1136, 1137.)

Settlement of outstanding checks and accounts of disbursing officers. (See secs. 306-310, R. S., and arts. R-433 et seq., Navy Regs. 1913.)

Lost checks, procedure with reference to. (See secs. 3646, 3647, R. S.; act Feb. 23, 1909, 35 Stat., 643, and art. R-4337, Navy Regs., 1913.)

Laws and decisions concerning bonds—for complete reference to, see section 1383, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

The President is authorized to increase the sums for which bonds are required by law of all naval agents and other officers employed in the disbursement of public money under direction of the Navy Department. (Sec. 3639, R. S.)

It is expressly provided by law that the United States shall not pay any part of the premium or other cost of furnishing a bond, required by law or otherwise, of any officer or employee of the United States. (Act Aug. 5, 1909, 36 Stat., 118, 125.)

Guaranty companies may be accepted as sole surety on bonds. (Act Aug. 13, 1894, secs. 1 and 3, 28 Stat., 279; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 627.)

Historical note.—It appears to have been originally designed that no demand for the payment of money by the United States should be paid until a claim or account therefor had been audited and certified by the accounting officers. But early in the history of the Government a practice grew up, without express authority of law, of employing agents to disburse moneys appropriated for various objects. Subsequently disbursing officers were expressly authorized by statute and in 1853 were provided for the several departments. (4 Comp. Dec., 334.)

Compensation of disbursing officers.—The disbursing clerk of a department is not entitled to any commission over and above the amount of his salary for keeping and disbursing the funds of his department, and other services enumerated. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 31.)

This section does not authorize the head of a department to diminish or take away the salary of a disbursing clerk as fixed by another provision of law. (Dunwoody v. U. S., 143 U. S., 578; 22 Ct. Cls., 269.)

Departmental regulations can not enlarge or restrict the liability of an officer on his bond. (Meads v. United States, 81 Fed. Rep., 684.)

The expense incurred by an officer in furnishing bond required by law of all disbursing officers of the Government is not a proper charge against the Government, even though the officer serves without compensation. (2 Comp. Dec., 262; U. S. v. Van Duzee, 140 U. S., 171; see also 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

The premium allowed to be charged on bonds of disbursing officers is limited by act of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat., 125). This act does not apply to bonds of acting or deputy disbursing clerks. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 624; 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 28.)

A bond furnished to the United States by the disbursing officer in a department takes effect on the date when it is accepted by the Government. (Moses v. United States, 166 U. S., 571.)

Pay of disbursing officer may commence prior to furnishing bond—that is, upon acceptance of appointment or entering upon duty—the same as other officers. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 38; U. S. v. Eaton, 169 U. S., 346; Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595; U. S. v. Bradley, 10 Pet., 343; U. S. v. Linn, 15 Pet., 290. But see note to sec. 1383, R. S., and 21 Comp. Dec., 49, 51.)

The failure of Congress to make specific appropriation for the salary of the disbursing clerk of a department would not appear to be an insuperable objection to the appointment of such clerk in view of this section, which fixes the total compensation of such appointee until otherwise provided by Congress. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 130.)

The head of a department has power to demand a bond from an officer appointed to a place of trust, although there is no statutory authority to take such bond. It was held in United States v. Tingey (5 Pet., 115) that the United States had the right to take a bond to insure the faithful performance of duty on the part of an individual or officer where such bond was voluntarily given and was not in violation of any provision of law; but that no officer of the Government has a right, under color of his office, to require from any subordinate officer, as a condition of holding office, that he should execute a bond "with a condition different from that prescribed by law." The power of the Government to take bonds in cases where not required by any law or regulation, but only by direction of the head of a department, was recognized again in United States v. Bradley (10 Pet., 343, 359). The term "voluntary bond" does not mean that it must have been offered and pressed upon the Government when never asked for or demanded by it. It is a voluntary bond when it is not demanded by any particular statute or regulation based thereon, and when it is not exacted in violation of any law or valid regulation of a department. The Government in such cases has the right to demand a bond, in the absence of any law; but can not extort a bond from a reluctant officer with a condition therein contained different from that which a statute calls for. (Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S., 571; see also U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock., 96, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15747; Jessup v. U. S., 106 U. S., 147; U. S. v. Rogers, 28 Fed. Rep., 607; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 24; and see note to sec. 1383, R. S.).

The authority of disbursing officers of executive departments to make payments is restricted to the payment of fixed salaries, bills for supplies purchased and approved, and other similar demands which do not require for the ascertainment of their validity the exercise of judicial functions in weighing evidence or in the application of general principles of law. (4 Comp. Dec., 336, 337.)

Responsibility of disbursing officers.—The rule that the Government can not be held responsible for the mistakes of its agents includes mistakes of law as well as mistakes of fact, where made by disbursing officers, and as to such officers the policy of the Government has been to acknowledge no payments as made on its behalf save those which were authorized by law. If a disbursing officer makes a mistake of law, the payment is disallowed when his accounts come in for settlement and charged to him as if the money were still in his hands. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 532, explaining McElrath's case, 12 Ct. Cls., 201. See further, note to sec. 236, R. S.)

Disbursing officers can avoid responsibility by applying to the Comptroller of the Treasury for an advance decision in cases where they may have doubts. (7 Comp. Dec., 271.)

Sec. 177. [Vacancies in head of Department; how temporarily filled.] In case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the head of any Department, the first or sole assistant thereof shall, unless otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section one hundred and seventy-nine, perform the duties of such head until a successor is appointed, or such absence or sickness shall cease.—(23 July, 1868, c. 227, s. 1, v. 15, p. 168.)

See limitation contained in section 180, Revised Statutes.

As to vacancy in office of Attorney General, or his absence or disability, see section 347, Revised Statutes.

"Death, resignation, absence, or sickness."

As to construction of these words, see note to section 179, Revised Statutes.

The accounts of disbursing officers never being closed, the accounting officers may readjust their accounts at any time. (Stevens v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 344. See further, note to sec. 236, R. S.)

A disbursing officer is not responsible for illegal payments made by him in good faith and in accordance with the certificate of another officer as to the facts. An appropriation being under the control of the head of a department, it is within the latter's power to prescribe rules to govern the disbursing agent in making disbursements therefrom. (9 Comp. Dec., 545; see also Maj. Smith's Case, 23 Ct. Cls., 452; 21 Comp. Dec., 314; Comp. Dec., Nov. 21, 1914, file 26254-1672; 21 Comp. Dec., 357; file 26254-1451:5, Oct. 31, 1914; file 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915; Op. Atty. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611.)

Under ordinary circumstances it is the duty of a disbursing officer to pay clerks and employees as set out on the properly certified pay rolls presented to them for payment, but a payment should never be made by a disbursing officer until properly certified. The head of a bureau, through his timekeeper and the appointment division of his department, is supposed to have the information upon which the pay rolls are made up, and is necessarily in possession of the information requisite to make the proper certificate thereto, which the disbursing officer is not, nor can he be. (8 Comp. Dec., 776, 785; see also 20 Comp. Dec., 859.)

For other cases see note to section 285, Revised Statutes.

Abolishing the position.—Where the position of disbursing clerk in a bureau was established by Congress, and has since been regularly appropriated for, such position must be regarded as essential to the organization of the bureau in question, and until Congress otherwise provides, it would be "inconsistent with law," within the meaning of section 161, Revised Statutes, for the head of the department to transfer the duties formerly performed by such disbursing clerk to the disbursing clerk of the department to which the bureau is attached. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 247.)

The disbursing clerk of one department might legally be designated to disburse moneys for another department, pending the appointment of a disbursing clerk as authorized by law for the latter department. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 131.)

In case of the absence of both the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Navy, "the Chief of Naval Operations shall be next in succession to act as Secretary of the Navy." (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 929; see file 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

ment in all such cases is a constitutional one. The power was exercised by the President in regard to the heads of departments in cases in which the law was silent. In the most questionable of the cases, that of Attorney General, whose quasi judicial functions especially would seem to require to stand on legislative authority, proof exists in the files of the Department of Justice that temporary appointment was made by the President prior to the enactment of statutory authority therefor. But a general provision of law is desirable to remove all doubt on the subject. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 351, 352.)

There can be no question that the President has the fundamental right as Chief Executive to make such temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another whenever the administration of the Government requires it; otherwise the Government would be menaced with a serious interruption of its administration. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 258. But see contra 27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 344; see also 28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 487; and see note to sec. 1381, R. S.)

Authority of assistant.—The signature of a "first or sole assistant" as the acting head of a department, when attached to a document of that department, implies that one of the conditions provided in section 177, Revised Statutes, which authorizes him to act in that capacity, had arisen. (Marsh v. Nichols, 128 U. S., 615; U. S. v. Twining, 132 Fed. Rep., 129.)

It is clear that, in the absence of the head of a department, the authority with which he is invested can be exercised by the officer who, under the law, becomes for the time acting secretary. (Ryan v. U. S., 136 U. S., 81.)

Under the provisions of this section and section 161, Revised Statutes, the head of a department has authority to assign certain of his duties to the assistant head thereof, and in the absence or sickness of the head of a department such assistant head may lawfully perform his duties in respect to such matters which have to be determined, settled, and adjudicated in that department. And it not appearing to the contrary, it must be presumed that a legitimate authority existed for official acts performed by the assistant. (Shillito v. McClung, 51 Fed. Rep., 872; Parish v. U. S., 100 U. S., 500; U. S. v. Adams, 24 Fed. Rep., 348; Chadwick v. U. S., 3 Fed. Rep., 756; U. S. v. Peralta, 19 How., 347.) Where the assistant head of a department performs a duty required by law of the head of the department, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he was performing a duty in accordance with law. (Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., 178 Fed. Rep., 743.) Where an appeal was heard and decided by the assistant head of a department, it will be presumed, the contrary not appearing, that the Assistant Secretary was lawfully exercising the Secretary's powers, as he was authorized to do by this section. (In re Jem Yuen, 188 Fed. Rep., 350, 354; see U. S. v. Redfern, 180 Fed. Rep., 508; and see note to sec. 178, R. S.)

So long as the powers delegated to the Assistant Secretary by his superior remain unrevoked, the authority of the former is coordinate and concurrent with that of the latter. When the assistant acts at a time the Secretary is not absent or sick, under a regulation made by the Secretary prescribing his powers and duties, he should sign with his own proper official designation. When the Secretary is absent or sick, if the assistant is in charge of the department in pursuance of sections 177 or 179, Revised Statutes, he should sign as Acting Secretary. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 133.)

Sec. 178. [Vacancies in subordinate offices.] In case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the chief of any Bureau, or of any officer thereof whose appointment is not vested in the head of the Department, the assistant or deputy of such chief or of such officer, or if there be none, then the chief clerk of such Bureau, shall, unless otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section one hundred and seventy-nine, perform the duties of such chief or of such officer until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.—(23 July, 1868, c. 227, s. 2, v. 15, p. 168.)

See limitation contained in section 180, Revised Statutes.

"Death, resignation, absence, or sickness."

As to construction of these words, see note to section 179, Revised Statutes.

The courts take judicial notice of the fact that a deputy or assistant to a public officer, in a particular case, is provided for by law, and that such deputy or assistant may exercise the powers and discharge the duties attached to the office during a vacancy in that office, or during the absence or inability of his superior. Where such deputy or assistant signed as "acting" a document required by statute to be signed by his superior, it will be presumed that at the date he so signed he was authorized to exercise the powers and discharge the duties of the office and was therefore at the time "acting" as such officer. (Keyser v. Hitz, 133 U. S., 138, 145.) For other cases see note to section 177, Revised Statutes.

The words "the assistant or deputy of such chief or of such officer," and "the chief clerk of such Bureau," in this section, can only refer to assistants or deputies and chief clerks whose appointment is specifically provided for by statute. Accordingly, an officer of the Navy detailed by the Secretary of the Navy as assistant to the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department is not, in the absence of a statute making provision for such assistant, authorized to perform the duties of the chief in case of a vacancy or the absence or sickness of his superior. This section must be read in connection with laws providing for the establishment of the Department of the Navy, and specifically authorizing chief clerks and assistants in certain bureaus. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 503; 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.)

Assistants to chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department are specifically provided for by the following laws: Bureau of Navigation, act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 717); Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 132); February 25, 1903 (32 Stat., 890); Bureau of Ordnance, act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 373); Bureau of Steam Engineering, act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1111); Bureau of Yards and Docks, Bureau of Construction and Repair, and Judge Advocate General, act of August 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558. In all of these cases the laws cited specifically provide that the assistant shall perform the duties of the chief of the bureau in the latter's absence. An assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery is authorized by section 1375, Revised Statutes; that section does not contain any provision that such assistant shall perform the duties of the chief of the bureau in the latter's absence, but he is an "assistant" specifically provided for by law and therefore authorized to act as Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in accordance with the provisions of section 178, Revised Statutes, and the Attorney General's opinion above cited (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 503). The detail of "not less than fifteen officers of and above the rank of lieutenant commander of the Navy or major of the Marine Corps," to "assist the Chief of Naval Operations in performing the duties of his office," was authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 558; see file 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

In bureaus of the Navy Department where assistants are not specifically provided for by law, officers of the Navy detailed to duty as assistants to the chiefs of such bureaus are not authorized to perform the duties of their chief in case of the latter's absence or sickness. "Without making a question that the assignment of commissioned officers of the Navy to act as assistants to chiefs of bureaus may be within the general powers of the Secretary of the Navy, I think that section 178 can only refer to assistants or deputies whose appointment is specifically provided for by statute." (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 503.) Accordingly, in such cases the chief clerk of the bureau becomes acting chief thereof in case of the latter's absence or sickness, unless otherwise directed by the President under section 179, Revised Statutes. (File 22724-14, Dec. 17, 1909.)

In certain offices of the Navy Department, as, for example, the office of the Judge Advocate General, when there was neither an "assistant" nor "chief clerk" specifically provided for by law, the Secretary of the Navy designated officers of the Navy or Marine Corps on duty in the office to perform the duty of the head of the office in the latter's absence. (File 22724-26.) See note to section 179, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 179. [Vacancies, authority of President to fill temporarily.] In any of the cases mentioned in the two preceding sections, except the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Attorney-General, the President may, in his discretion, authorize and direct the head of any other Department or any other officer in either Department, whose appointment is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to perform the duties of the vacant office until a successor is appointed, or the sickness or absence of the incumbent shall cease.—(23 July, 1868, c. 227, s. 3, v. 15, p. 168; 22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 2, v. 16, p. 162.)

As to vacancy in the office of Attorney General, or his absence or sickness, see section 347, Revised Statutes.

The Commanding General of the Army or the chief of any military bureau of the War Department may be assigned to perform the duties of the Secretary of War, under this section. (Act Aug. 5, 1882; 22 Stat., 238.) [It had previously been held by the Attorney General that such assignment could not be made, because of a law forbidding officers of the Army to hold any civil office, either by election or appointment. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 200.)]

In the absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the Chief of Naval Operations, the President has directed that, "until further orders," the duties of the Secretary of the Navy shall be performed by the following designated persons, in the order named: The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation; in his absence, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance; and in the absence of those two, the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering.

(File 1159-765, Bu. Nav.; Navy Regs., 1920, art. 392, as amended; see also file 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

By act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 929), the Chief of Naval Operations "shall be next in succession to act as Secretary of the Navy" during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary.

Authority of Acting Secretary.—It is clear that, in the absence of the Secretary, the authority with which he is invested can be exercised by the officer who, under this section, becomes for the time Acting Secretary. (Ryan v. U. S., 136 U. S., 81; Shillito v. McClung, 51 Fed. Rep., 871; 20 Comp. Dec., 11. See note to sec. 177, R. S.)

"Death, resignation, absence, or sickness."—The word "death" requires no definition, and the word "sickness" has received none under this law. As to the word "absence" the decisions are not harmonious. The Attorney General's opinions are both ways upon the question whether a vacancy caused by retirement is due to "absence," the later opinions holding that it is not. An interruption of business caused by suspension of an officer is due to absence, according to the Attorney General, although Congress, in section 1768, Revised Statutes (now repealed), made specific provision for such cases, so that they were not governed by section 179, Revised Statutes. The cases on this subject are as follows:

A vacancy caused by the retirement of the Paymaster General of the Army may be temporarily filled under this section. It may well be said that in the eye of the law a retired officer is "absent," he being incapable of rendering the service required. If this construction may not be given to the act, it is clearly casus omissus [a case which is not provided for]. There would in that event be no power to provide for the duties of the office ad interim. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 500.)

In a later opinion, the Attorney General held that no provision is made by this section for filling a vacancy caused by retirement, and that, upon the retirement of the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Navy Department, the President was not authorized to designate the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair as Acting Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering; that Congress had made no provision for the temporary discharge of his duties, and accordingly the Bureau of Steam Engineering must remain without a head until the place should be filled by new appointment pursuant to sections 421 and 424, Revised Statutes; that "absence" implies a temporary state of being away from the office and a possibility of returning, which is entirely inconsistent with the idea of retirement for physical incapacity, which is a permanent condition. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 344.) In this later opinion no reference is made to the former opinion with which it is in conflict and which was apparently overlooked. As to inherent power of the President in such cases, see note to sec. 177, R. S.)

Again, the Attorney General held that, aside from the question whether the Marine Corps can be regarded as a bureau of the Navy Department, sections 177, 179, and 180, Revised Statutes, have no application in the case of the retirement of the Commandant of the Marine Corps on account of age, as the vacancy in such case does not result from "death, resignation, absence, or sickness" of the incumbent. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 487.)

In case of the suspension of an officer during a recess of the Senate, the President was authorized, under section 1768, Revised Statutes (now repealed), to designate "some suitable person," to perform the duties of the suspended officer until the end of the next session of the Senate. The suspension of an officer did not create a vacancy, as the suspended officer continued to hold the office, although not entitled to pay under section 1768, Revised Statutes. The word "suspended" imports that the person suspended is still the incumbent of the office; that the interruption of his performance of its duties is temporary and provisional. Temporary designation of an acting officer in this case was properly made under section 1768, Revised Statutes. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 512.)

The Judge Advocate General of the Army was suspended from rank and duty pursuant to sentence of a general court-martial. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 554.) The Secretary of War, July 25, 1884, by direction of the President, designated the senior Assistant Judge Advocate General to "take charge of the office of the Judge Advocate General and perform his duties" during the suspension of the Judge Advocate General. Under this order the Assistant Judge Advocate General became "Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army" from July 25, 1884, to January 3, 1895. (See Dig., J. A. G., Army, 1912, p. 4.) The Attorney General held that "the order assigning Col. Lieber to duty as Acting Judge Advocate General was made in pursuance of section 179 of the Revised Statutes," and that as such Acting Judge Advocate General he was qualified to act as a member of the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home, under the law which provided that said board should include in its membership "the Judge Advocate General." (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 483.)

"Resignation" of an office implies the consent of the incumbent to the giving up of the office and does not include the compulsory retirement of an officer by reason of disability to perform the duties of the office. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337.)

The words "any other officer in either Department," apply only to an officer who holds a position in the Department to which he has been appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Accordingly, these words do not embrace an officer of the Navy detailed to duty in the Navy Department, because such officer, although appointed to his grade in the Navy by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, does not hold any office in the department to which he has been so appointed. Such an officer can not, therefore, be assigned by the President to perform the duties of the Secretary of the Navy or the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department during the temporary absence of the officials mentioned. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.) See note to section 178, Revised Statutes.

The holder of an office vacates it by the acceptance of another incompatible office. He does not vacate it by temporarily performing the duties of another office, when such temporary performance is permitted by law. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 512. But see 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 200, holding that the Commanding General of the Army could not, under laws then in force, act as Secretary of War without vacating his commission.)

Power of Secretary to perform duties of subordinate.—In any case where a vacancy exists in a subordinate position under the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary has the power to perform the duties of said position until the vacancy is filled. In such a case the Secretary must sign all papers in person, and can not delegate general authority to another to perform the duties of the office and sign papers "By direction of the Secretary of the Navy." So held with reference to vacancy existing in the position of Commandant of the Marine Corps. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 487. Compare Williams Eng. and Cont. Co. v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 349, noted under sec. 419, R. S.)

Sec. 180. [Temporary appointments limited to thirty days.] A vacancy occasioned by death or resignation must not be temporarily filled under the three preceding sections for a longer period than thirty days.—(23 July, 1868, c. 227, s. 3, v. 15, p. 168.)

This section was amended to read as above by act of February 6, 1891, section 91 (26 Stat. 733), which act substituted the word "thirty" for the word "ten" which appeared in the original section.

President can not make second designation on expiration of first.—In a case in which the Secretary of War was designated by the President to act as Secretary of the Navy under the provisions of sections 177–180, Revised Statutes, it was held that upon the expiration of the period fixed by this section it was not in the power of the President to designate another officer or the same officer to act for an additional period; that when the vacancy was once temporarily filled for the statutory period the power conferred by the statute is exhausted, and the President is remitted to his constitutional power of appointment; and that no such appointment having been made, "there is and can be no person authorized by designation to sign requisitions upon the Treasury Department on account of Navy payments as Acting Secretary of the Navy." (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 596; affirmed 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 530, 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 58.)

Purpose of section.—The temporary term authorized by sections 178 and 180, either by mere operation of the statute or by action of the President, is for no longer period than that limited by this section. The theory seems to be, and very properly, that the department has no more than a sufficiency of officers to transact the public business properly; and therefore, that in case of death or resignation this normal equipment is to be restored within the brief period named. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 50.)

Computed from date of President's action.—The limitation imposed by this section upon the temporary filling of vacancies occasioned by death or resignation is to be computed from the date of the President's action. Where the officer appointed to act performed the duties of the vacant office prior to his designation by the President, he was not acting under authority of sections 178–180, Revised Statutes, and such period during which he was acting without authority of these sections is not to be counted in computing the time during which his temporary appointment by the President has force. [In this case the officer was not the "assistant or deputy," and therefore did not succeed to the vacancy by operation of section 178, Revised Statutes.] (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 457.)

Vacancy can not be filled by operation of law and then by designation of President in excess of 30 days.—Where an officer succeeds to a vacancy by operation of section 177 or 178, Revised Statutes, and performs the duties of the vacant office during the full period prescribed by this section, the President can not thereafter designate the same or a different officer to perform the duties of the vacant office during an additional period of 30 days, under authority of section 179, Revised Statutes; but the total period for which the vacancy can be temporarily filled under these sections, either by operation of law or by designation of the President, is 30 days. The legislative purpose was that a vacancy caused by death or resignation shall be permanently filled by constitutional appointment within 30 days. It may be that the action of an assistant after the expiration of the statutory period would not be invalid, being the action of an officer de facto; but the statute, even if directory, is no less obligatory upon those called upon to act under it than if mandatory, although the legal effect of action or nonaction under a directory statute may be very different from the effect under a mandatory statute. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 8, reversing 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 535.) [Note: In the case of a "mandatory" statute, all acts done in violation of its terms are absolutely null and void; while in the case of a "directory" statute, acts performed contrary to its terms may be valid, although the officer guilty of violating the statute may otherwise be held responsible therefor. With reference to directory statutes, it was said by Mr. Justice Field, in French v. Edwards, 13 Wall., 511: "There are undoubtedly many statutory requisitions intended for the guide of officers in the conduct of business devolved upon them which do not limit their power or render its exercise in disregard of the requisitions ineffectual. Such generally are regulations designed to secure order, system, and dispatch in proceedings, and by a disregard of which the rights of parties interested can not be injuriously affected."]

Vacancy occurring during recess of the Senate.—The limitation contained in this section applies only to temporary appointments made while the Senate is in session. It appears from an examination of the Journals of Congress that the Senate was in session when the vacancies referred to in Mr. Devens's opinions occurred (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 458; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 596), and presumably in the case presented to Mr. Brewster (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 530). The absence of any reference in those opinions to the excepting clause of section 181, Revised Statutes, would seem to place it entirely beyond doubt that the sections referred to were not being construed with reference to vacancies occurring during a recess of the Senate. In the latter case the temporary appointment, designation, or assignment is not limited by law to any particular period. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 258. See note to sec. 181, R. S.)

Sec. 181. [Restriction on temporary appointments.] No temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another, in the cases covered by sections one hundred and seventy-seven and one hundred and seventy-eight, shall be made otherwise than as provided by those sections, except to fill a vacancy happening during a recess of the Senate.—(23 July, 1868, c. 227, s. 2, v. 15, p. 168.)

“The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.” (Const., Art. II, sec. 2, clause 3.)

Senate temporarily adjourned.—It was held by the Court of Claims, May 26, 1884, that there was “no doubt” that a vacancy occurring while the Senate was temporarily adjourned could be and was legally filled by appointment of the President in accordance with the above provision of the Constitution and that the appointee legally held the office until he was notified of his rejection by the Senate at its next regular session established by law, which began on the first Monday of the following December. (Gould v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 593, 595.) The Attorney General thereafter, December 24, 1901, expressly dissented from the Court of Claims decision, and advised the President that a vacancy occurring during a temporary adjournment of the Senate could not be filled by him as a “recess” appointment, but that such appointments could be made only when the Senate adjourned sine die. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 599; affirmed 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 602.; but see 33 Op. Atty. Gen., 20.)

A temporary appointment during a recess of the Senate need not be made in any prescribed form. A communication from the Secretary of War informing the recipient that he has been appointed an officer of the Army by the President is sufficient, and answers the purpose of a commission if a commission is necessary. (O’Shea v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 392.)

The President has the right under the Constitution, and impliedly under section 181, Revised Statutes, to make a temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another in the case of a vacancy caused by death, disability, or otherwise during the recess of the Senate, and such temporary appointment, designation, or assignment is not limited by law to any particular period. The excepting clause in section 181 makes it clear that Congress only intended by the provisions in question to restrict the power of the President temporarily to appoint, designate, or assign one officer to perform the duties of another in the case of vacancies happening while the Senate was in session, the reason for which is manifest, and to leave unrestricted not only the President’s constitutional right to fill vacancies happening during a recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session, but his fundamental right as Chief Executive to make such a temporary appointment, designation, or assignment of one officer to perform the duties of another whenever the administration of the Government requires it. There can be no question as to the existence of such right. It could not have been the purpose of the Constitution to compel the President to act immediately upon the occurrence of the vacancy. That would frequently be impossible, and if such were the rule, and no other officer could act until a successor was appointed, the Government would be menaced with a serious interruption of its administration. The opinions of Attorneys General Devens and Brewster (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 458; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 596; 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 530; noted under sec. 180, R. S.) were not rendered with reference to vacancies occurring during a recess of the Senate. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 258.)

For other decisions see note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 3, and to section 1381, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 182. [Extra compensation disallowed.] An officer performing the duties of another office, during a vacancy, as authorized by sections one hundred and seventy-seven, one hundred and seventy-eight, and one hundred and seventy-nine, is not by reason thereof entitled to any other compensation than that attached to his proper office.—(23 July, 1868, c. 227, s. 3, v. 15, p. 168.)

The prohibition in this section against additional compensation was designed to be general and to apply to every officer performing the duties of an office temporarily vacant, whether the vacancy was caused by death, resignation, absence, or sickness, and whether such duties devolved upon him by force of the statute or by designation of the President, and such officer is not entitled to any salary other than that which is annexed to the office he holds. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 8; 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 512, 514.)

Sec. 183. [Oaths, when administered by officers, etc.] Any officer or clerk of any of the departments lawfully detailed to investigate frauds on, or attempts to defraud, the Government, or any irregularity or misconduct of any officer or agent of the United States, and any officer of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps or Revenue-Cutter Service, detailed to conduct an investigation, and the recorder, and if there be none the presiding officer, of any military, naval, or

Revenue-Cutter Service board appointed for such purpose, shall have authority to administer an oath to any witness attending to testify or depose in the course of such investigation.

This section was amended and reenacted to read as above by act of February 13, 1911 (36 Stat., 898), which act also superseded the act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 951).

As originally enacted this section provided as follows: "SEC. 183. Any officer or clerk of any of the departments lawfully detailed to investigate frauds or attempt to defraud on the Government, or any irregularity or misconduct of any officer or agent of the United States, shall have authority to administer an oath to any witness attending to testify or depose in the course of such investigation."—(10 Apr., 1869, Res. No. 15, s. 2, v. 16, p. 55; 7 Mar., 1870, c. 23, v. 16, p. 75.)

The "Revenue Cutter Service" is now the "Coast Guard." (Act Jan. 28, 1915, 38 Stat., 800.)

The solicitor in the office of the Judge Advocate General, Navy Department, was detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, May 2, 1907 (file 5421-11), to investigate reported discrimination against marines in uniform visiting the Library of Congress, and was authorized to administer oaths to witnesses under this section. See also file 26263.

A lieutenant commander in the Navy was detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, April 14, 1914, to investigate and ascertain whether any officer or person in the naval service or connected with the Navy Department had been guilty of any irregularity or misconduct in originating or circulating reports or rumors by means of the public press concerning the relations between an officer of the Navy and Government contractors, and was authorized to administer oaths to witnesses under this section. (File 26251-8827:5; see also 16711-3, July 12, 1911.)

Boards of investigation.—It has never been decided that boards of investigation in the Navy have general authority to administer oaths to witnesses in every case. So far as precedent goes, it supports the conclusion that such boards are authorized to swear witnesses only when the subject of the investigation relates to "frauds on, or attempts to defraud, the Government or any irregularity or misconduct of any officer or agent of the United States." (File 3980-842, Sept. 29, 1913.)

The Navy Regulations, 1913, provide that boards of investigation, "although they may collect material information from apparent or known facts, or from written evidence which they may possess, and may record the declarations of persons examined before them, will not take testimony under oath except in important cases in which the order convening the board expressly states that such board is authorized to administer oaths to witnesses in accordance with" the above law. (R-316 (3) and (4).)

Other laws authorizing oaths to be administered by persons in the naval service or connected with the Navy Department, are as follows:

For purposes of naval administration.—Act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1171), amending the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1086), which amended the act of January 25, 1895 (28 Stat., 639), authorizes certain officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, Naval Reserve Force, and Marine Corps Reserve, to administer oaths "for the purposes of the administration of naval justice and for other purposes of naval administration." This law authorizes any of the officers designated therein to administer an oath for any purpose of naval administration (file 26806-94, Nov. 23, 1912; 19037-45, May 26, 1914); but it does not authorize such officers to administer an oath for other purposes, such as in matters relating to the private business of either officers or enlisted men. (File 19037-27, Mar. 30, 1912.)

Income tax returns.—The Secretary of the Treasury authorized annual returns of persons in the naval service under the income tax provisions of the act October 3, 1913 (38 Stat., 166-181), and amendments thereto, to be executed before any official authorized to administer oaths for the purposes of that service. (Art. 406, Treas. Regs., 1922; see also U. S. v. Bailey, 9 Pet., 238; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 401).

Accounts for travel, etc.—The sundry civil appropriation act, August 24, 1912, section 8 (37 Stat., 487), authorizes certain officers of the Government, including "chief clerks of the various executive departments and bureaus or clerks designated by them for the purpose," to administer oaths to accounts for travel or other expenses against the United States. See also 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 401.

Oaths of office.—The act of August 29, 1890 (26 Stat., 371), authorizes and directs chief clerks of the several executive departments and of the various bureaus and offices thereof in Washington, to administer oaths of office to employees on appointment or promotion. (See also sec. 392, R. S., as amended.)

The Articles for the Government of the Navy authorize oaths to be administered by the following officers: Judges advocate and presiding officers of general courts-martial (arts. 40, 41); judges advocate and presiding officers of courts of inquiry (art. 57); recorders and senior members of summary courts-martial (arts. 28 and 29). (Sec. 1624, R. S.)

Deck courts are authorized to administer oaths by act of February 16, 1909, section 2 (35 Stat., 621).

Naval Examining Boards are authorized to administer oaths by section 1499, Revised Statutes.

Naval retiring boards have this authority under sections 1449 and 1450, Revised Statutes.

Consular powers may be exercised by officers of the Navy in relation to mariners of the United States, under conditions prescribed by section 1433, Revised Statutes.

Acknowledgment of deeds and other instruments affecting lands situate in the District of Columbia or any Territory, may be taken in Guam and Samoa before any notary public or judge appointed therein by proper authority, or by any officer therein who has ex officio the powers of a notary; such acknowledgments to be verified by the certificate of the governor or acting governor. (Act June 28, 1906, 34 Stat., 552.)

On general subject of administration of oaths by officers of the Navy, see file 19037-45, May 26, 1914.

Sec. 184. [Claims pending in Departments—Subpœnas to witnesses.] Any head of a Department or Bureau in which a claim against the United States is properly pending may apply to any judge or clerk of any court of the United States, in any State, District, or Territory, to issue a subpœna for a witness being within the jurisdiction of such court, to appear at a time and place in the subpœna stated, before any officer authorized to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, there to give full and true answers to such written interrogatories and cross-interrogatories as may be submitted with the application, or to be orally examined and cross-examined upon the subject of such claim.—(14 Feb., 1871, c. 51, s. 1, v. 16, p. 412.)

This section was modified by act of July 25, 1882, section 3 (22 Stat., 175), relative to examination of witnesses in pension claims; which act, however, related to Pension Office only.

Constitutionality.—In re McLean (37 Fed. Rep., 648) the court held that Congress is not authorized to permit the judicial power to be invoked in aid of an examination pending in an executive department, and accordingly that legislation of this kind was null and would not be enforced. In so holding the court cited and followed In re Railway Commission (32 Fed. Rep., 241). The McLean case was approved and followed in In re Interstate Commerce Commission (53 Fed. Rep., 476), which involved a similar question; but all of these cases were reversed in Commerce Commission v. Brimson, decided by the Supreme Court (154 U. S., 447).

Statutes of this class were expressly held to be constitutional in In re Gross (78 Fed. Rep., 107), in which case the court cited and applied the decision of the Supreme Court in Brimson's case and dissented from McLean's case, both above cited. (See Hayburn's case, 2 Dall., 409.)

Procedure.—This section does not authorize an ex parte procedure. Witnesses are to be subjected not only to examination but to cross-examination. Claimants are therefore entitled to have notice of the time and place of the examination and may be present to cross-examine the witnesses of the Government if they choose to do so. Their attorney may represent them at the examination. A witness examined by the Government is also entitled to consult counsel. The examination is not before a court which may protect the witness in his constitutional right to refuse to answer incriminating questions. The possibility of converting these administrative examinations into very obnoxious inquisitorial proceedings is apparent. The proceeding is not a secret one, like an inquest by a grand jury. So long as counsel for a witness conducts himself with propriety and does not interfere with the examination he has a right to be present. If in the course of the examination any questions are propounded to a witness the answers to which will tend to incriminate him, he may refuse to answer them. Such refusal, however, must be claimed by the witness as his personal privilege and can not be claimed for him by his counsel. The examiner has no power or right to extort a confession from a witness, even though there is no intention of prosecuting the witness therefor. (In re O'Shea, 166 Fed. Rep., 180.)

Protection of witness.—The courts can not be expected to neglect the duty which belongs to them of watching against any stealthy encroachment upon the constitutional rights of the citizen; "and the least that they can require of these examiners, so armed with such dangerous power, and invested with such tempting opportunities to invade the constitutional guaranty, is that they shall conduct their examinations in such a manner that the citizen shall be fully warned of his constitutional right, and offered an opportunity to assert it by a refusal to answer; and where the witness is ignorant and helpless, and such warning is neglected, protection can be afforded to him by the courts in no other way than by refusing to give any effect to the examination by way of any criminal prosecution to support it and its object. * * * Until Congress shall set about improving the system of inquisition it is not to be expected that the courts shall aid its usefulness at the expense of the constitutional protection of every citizen. All that we now decide to be necessary to afford the protection of the Constitution to this defendant is that, unless a witness manifestly ignorant of his privilege is informed of it by the examiner so that he may protect himself, consult counsel if he desires, and assert his right to remain silent, the examination can not be used in evidence against him, even on an indictment for false swearing in the progress of the examination itself." (U. S. v. Bell, 81 Fed. Rep., 849.) [This decision related particularly to an examination conducted under the pension act of 1882, above cited.]

Scope of section.—It is noticeable that this section provides only for investigations "upon the subject" of the claims. It is clear that Congress intended to limit the scope of the investigations, and that an examination which would not be "upon the subject" of a claim would not be within the purview of this section. Accordingly, the application for a subpoena should be drawn with reasonable certainty and precision, so that it should clearly appear upon its face to be in accordance with the act, and that the claim in which the testimony is required should be reasonably identified. Where this was not done, held that the court will not require witness who refuses to answer questions to show cause why he should not answer the interrogatories or be adjudged in contempt of court. (In re Gross, 78 Fed. Rep., 107.)

Power to require oaths.—"Whenever the law imposes upon an officer the duty to examine, adjust, and settle claims against the Government, it gives him authority to 'require' that those claims shall be established, or supported at least, by the oaths of witnesses." When power is given to the examining officer to administer oaths there must be the implied power to require them to be taken. If the needed testimony can be had by affidavits or depositions without the process of the courts, of course such process need not be resorted to. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 419, 420, citing U. S. v. Bailey (9 Pet., 238, 253) as to implied power to require testimony to be submitted under oath.) The original act upon which section 184, Revised Statutes, is based expressly provided that any witness attending in accordance with said act who should be guilty of intentional false swearing in his testimony should be deemed guilty of the crime of perjury. Punishment for perjury is now provided for by section 125, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1111). With reference to the original statute, the Attorney General, in the opinion cited, said: "This statute assumes that there is authority in the heads of departments and bureaus to require oaths in cases of claims against the Government, and gives them very effective process for the exercise of that authority." (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 420.)

Sec. 185. [Witnesses' fees.] Witnesses subpoenaed pursuant to the preceding section shall be allowed the same compensation as is allowed witnesses in the courts of the United States.—(14 Feb., 1871, c. 51, s. 1, v. 16, p. 412.)

Fees of witnesses before naval courts-martial and courts of inquiry are provided for by act of February 16, 1909, section 12 (35 Stat., 622). See note to section 848, Revised Statutes.

Appropriation available.—In the absence of a special provision for defraying the expenses of witnesses, they may properly be allowed out of the judiciary fund, which makes appropriation "for fees of witnesses," and paid by the United States marshal of the district on the certificate or order of the United States commissioner before whom the examination was conducted; while the fees of the commissioner should be paid as in ordinary course, on settling his accounts at the Treasury from the appropriation "for fees of United States commissioners," belonging to the judiciary fund. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 247.)

Sec. 186. [Compelling testimony.] If any witness, after being duly served with such subpoena, neglects or refuses to appear, or, appearing, refuses to testify, the judge of the district in which the subpoena issued may proceed, upon proper process, to enforce obedience to the subpoena, or to punish the disobedience, in like manner as any court of the United States may do in case of process of subpoena ad testificandum issued by such court.—(14 Feb., 1871, c. 51, s. 1, v. 16, p. 412.)

See note of decisions under section 184, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 187. [Legal assistance in connection with claims.] Whenever any head of a Department or Bureau having made application pursuant to section one hundred and eighty-four, for a subpoena to procure the attendance of a witness to be examined, is of opinion that the interests of the United States require the attendance of counsel at the examination, or require legal investigation of any claim pending in his Department or Bureau, he shall give notice thereof to the Attorney-General, and of all facts necessary to enable the Attorney-General to furnish proper professional service in attending such examination, or making such investigation, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to provide for such service.—(14 Feb., 1871, c. 51, s. 3, v. 16, p. 412.)

A similar provision is contained in section 364, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 188. [Suits in Court of Claims—Evidence furnished by Departments.] In all suits brought against the United States in the Court of Claims founded upon any contract, agreement, or transaction with any Department, or any Bureau, officer, or agent of a Department, or where the matter or thing on which the claim is based has been passed upon and decided by any Department, Bureau, or officer authorized to adjust it, the Attorney-General shall transmit to such Department, Bureau, or officer, a printed copy of the petition filed by the claimant, with a request that the Department, Bureau, or officer, shall furnish to the Attorney-General all facts, circumstances, and evidence touching the claim in the possession or knowledge of the Department, Bureau, or officer. Such Department, Bureau, or officer shall, without delay, and within a reasonable time, furnish the Attorney-General with a full statement, in writing, of all such facts, information, and proofs. The statement shall contain a reference to or description of all such official documents or papers, if any, as may furnish proof of facts referred to in it, or may be necessary and proper for the defense of the United States against the claim, mentioning the Department, office, or place where the same is kept or may be procured. If the claim has been passed upon and decided by the Department, Bureau, or officer, the statement shall succinctly state the reasons and principles upon which such decision was based. In all cases where such decision was founded upon any act of Congress, or upon any section or clause of such act, the same shall be cited specifically; and if any previous interpretation or construction has been given to such act, section, or clause by the Department, Bureau, or officer, the same shall be set forth succinctly in the statement, and a copy of the opinion filed, if any, shall be annexed to it. Where any decision in the case has been based upon any regulation of a Department, or where such regulation has, in the opinion of the Department, Bureau, or officer transmitting such statement, any bearing upon the claim in suit, the same shall be distinctly quoted at length in the statement. But where more than one case, or a class of cases, is pending, the defense to which rests upon the same facts, circumstances, and proofs, the Department, Bureau, or officer shall only be required to certify and transmit one statement of the same, and such statement shall be held to apply to all such cases, as if made out, certified, and transmitted in each case respectively.—(25 June, 1868, c. 71, s. 6, v. 15, p. 76.)

See Title VIII, Revised Statutes, "Department of Justice."

Confidential information.—By act of February 24, 1855, embodied in section 1076, Revised Statutes, the Court of Claims was authorized to "call upon any of the departments for any information or papers it may deem necessary * * * Provided, That the head of no department shall answer any call for information or papers if in his opinion it would be injurious to the public interest." Under this provision, it is clear that the head of a department is not at liberty to furnish to the court information or papers when to do so would in his opinion be injurious to the public interest, and a return setting forth such opinion would in all such cases be a sufficient answer to the rule. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 539.) For other cases, see note to sections 161, 418, and 871, Revised Statutes.

Public policy forbids the maintenance of any suit requiring the disclosure of confidential matters. (Totten v. U. S., 92 U. S., 105.)

Sec. 189. [Employment of attorneys or counsel.] No head of a Department shall employ attorneys or counsel at the expense of the United States; but when in need of counsel or advice, shall call upon the Department of Justice, the officers of which shall attend to the same.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 17, v. 16, p. 164.)

See Title VIII, Revised Statutes, "Department of Justice."

Purpose of enactment.—This law was passed to correct abuses which existed under the former practice, which permitted heads of departments to employ counsel without applying to the Attorney General. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 330; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 195.)

The provisions of law concerning the Department of Justice (see Title VIII, R. S.) "are too conclusive and too specific to leave any doubt that Congress intended to gather into the Department of Justice, under the supervision and control of the Attorney General, all the litigation and all the law business in which the United States are interested, and which previously had been scattered among different public officers, departments, and branches of the Government, and to break up the practice of frequently employing unofficial attorneys for the public service." (Perry v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 491.)

Employment of district attorneys.—By an act approved February 26, 1853 (10 Stat., 161), it was provided that, for the services of counsel rendered at the request of a head of a department, the compensation should be such sum as might be stipulated or agreed on. This provision recognized the authority of heads of departments to employ counsel, and under it they employed district attorneys to examine titles and prepare abstracts thereof for submission to the Attorney General, and allowed them special compensation therefor. But the act of 1853 was repealed by a clause in the act of 1870, now embodied in section 189, Revised Statutes. That repeal only altered the mode of employment; that is to say, it in effect invested the Attorney General with sole authority thereafter to employ district attorneys where the performance of such services by him is called for. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 64.)

Before the passage of the act on which section 189, Revised Statutes, is based, the heads of the several departments were accustomed to employ district attorneys to examine into the titles to lands sought to be purchased by the United States. Under such employment the district attorneys performing the services received compensation for such services over and above the usual compensation allowed by law for district attorneys. Since the passage of this law such services have been required of district attorneys by the Department of Justice. (Weed v. U. S., 82 Fed. Rep., 414, 419.) In this connection see section 355, Revised Statutes.

The Secretary of War has no authority without the consent of the Attorney General to employ counsel to appear in court in certain habeas corpus cases (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 583); nor to employ a patent attorney to prosecute an application for a patent (10 Comp. Dec., 686).

Formerly it was competent for the head of any of the executive departments to employ a district attorney or other counsel in connection with proceedings in a State court in which the United States was interested; and such district attorney or other counsel was entitled to receive for his services such sum as might be agreed upon. But the authority of the various heads of departments thus to employ counsel at the expense of the United States was taken away by the law now embodied in section 189, Revised Statutes, and it was provided that this power should thereafter be exercised only by the Attorney General. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 101.) As to proceedings in State courts, see section 367, Revised Statutes.

Where Congress, in an appropriation act passed subsequent to the enactment of this section, authorized the head of a bureau in an executive department "to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary" for the purposes of said appropriation, this did not carry with it authority for the head of the bureau or executive department to which it was attached to employ counsel; as the employment of counsel in executive departments is specifically covered by sections 189, 362, and 363, Revised Statutes; and the general language of an appropriation can not be given such scope as to operate as a repeal, so far as a particular bureau is concerned, of legislation regulating the subject of employing counsel for the Government—legislation which was intended to apply to all branches of the Government, which has remained in force for many years, and the want of which had led to some abuses. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 330.)

Duties of Comptroller of the Treasury.—In practice the Comptroller of the Treasury is asked, in form, for legal advice; in fact, what is desired is information as to his future action in a case, which may come before him for decision. Where, however, the Secretary of the Treasury asks the advice of the accounting officers upon legal questions which do not involve future action by them upon questions of payments, the advice so rendered by the accounting officers is a purely voluntary matter, and to compensate them for such work would be a violation of section 189, Revised Statutes. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 655, 657.) [The view that the opinions of the Comptroller upon legal questions are purely extraofficial is no longer tenable; by act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 208), he is authorized to render an advance decision upon any question involving a payment. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 581.) See note to section 236, Revised Statutes.]

Judge advocate, naval court-martial.—According to the law regulating courts-martial, the judge advocate is the official prosecutor; and in cases arising in the Navy he is by custom either a naval officer specially designated or a counselor at law employed for that purpose. If a naval officer, he receives no special compensation. If a counselor at law, it has been the custom to pay him as for a professional service. The law now embodied in section 189, Revised Statutes, prohibits the Secretary of any of the executive departments from employing attorneys or counsel at the expense of the United States. Considering it settled that the desired services (judge advocate) are such as can be properly performed only by a naval officer or a counselor at law, the Attorney General holds that if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the cases in hand should be conducted by a person of the latter description, the Secretary of the Navy is not at liberty to employ such counsel, but should call upon the Department of Justice which will furnish an officer for the service. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 515; affirmed 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 13; see U. S. v. Mackenzie, 26 Fed. Cas., 1121.) In this connection, see note to section 362, Revised Statutes.

Legal assistance for judge advocate.—Special counsel may be employed by the Attorney General at the request of the Secretary of the Navy to assist the judge advocate in a trial by court-martial; the compensation of such counsel (in the absence of other provision) to be paid from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Navy. Such counsel should be commissioned by the Attorney General under section 366, Revised Statutes. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 135.)

The Secretary of the Navy is not authorized by sections 3676 and 3681, Revised Statutes, to employ special counsel in his discretion, in connection with cases before naval courts-martial, without applying to the Attorney General. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 136. See file 26251-10398:6, in which the Secretary of the Navy assigned the law clerk in the office of the Judge Advocate General as counsel to the judge advocate in the trial of a commissioned officer by court-martial; and see Court of Inquiry Record, No. 4952, in which the solicitor in the office of the Judge Advocate General was assigned by the Secretary of the Navy as associate and assistant to the judge advocate.)

A judge advocate need not be a professional person. His qualifications must, of course, be of the sort required by members of the bar, but there is no law limiting choice of judge advocates or of their assistants, when needed, to that class. Although there is no statutory provision in regard to naval judge advocates like that for those of the Army, to the effect that they shall belong to the Navy, yet in fact this is generally the case. So, also, assistants for judge advocates might be detailed from the same branch of service, or, indeed, specially intelligent persons might be selected from any line of civil life. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 137.)

Counsel in foreign countries.—In view of section 189, Revised Statutes, the Secretary of the Navy is not authorized to employ counsel in foreign countries to institute suit in behalf of the United States to recover for damages caused to a war vessel of the United States, but the case should be referred to the Department of Justice, which is charged with the duty of determining when the United States shall sue, for what it shall sue, and that such suits shall be brought in appropriate cases. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 195, citing U. S. v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U. S., 273, 279, 280; and In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 65, 67; see also 2 Comp. Dec., 340). The right and duty of the commander of a naval vessel, or of the Secretary of the Navy, to employ in an emergency counsel in a foreign country, when necessary for the protection of such vessel and all that pertains to it, are not now decided, and would involve principles other than those passed upon in determining the general question of employing counsel in a foreign country in behalf of the United States. Section 189, however, was passed to correct what was considered an abuse by the heads of departments of the power to employ counsel. Its terms are undoubtedly broad enough to cover any employment of counsel in cases like that now in question, although they have been so rare that they probably were not a moving cause of the enactment of the law. Congress, however, must have contemplated, inasmuch as ships of war are constantly on the high seas and in foreign ports, that questions of law would arise in respect to them in the administration of the Navy Department. However, no exception whatever is made of such cases in the law. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 195.)

While as the law stands at the present time it is doubtless within the province of the Attorney General only to employ counsel in foreign countries to defend the United States against suit for collision by a naval vessel, the Attorney General has neither facilities for communicating with the naval officers abroad, nor has he any method of ascertaining who would be the most desirable attorneys to employ, or by what particular method such employment should be made. The Attorney General, therefore, requested that the Secretary of the Navy act in his stead in arranging for the employment of counsel to defend a suit brought in the Supreme Court of Hongkong by owners of a Chinese junk, Tung on Tai, against the master of the U. S. N. A. Alexander. (File 4729-1, Apr. 24, 1906.)

If it was the intention of the Attorney General that the Secretary of the Navy should act for him in selecting counsel, such employment to be approved by the Attorney General and the compensation of said counsel to be stipulated by him as provided by section 363, Revised Statutes, counsel so employed would be entitled to such compensation on the certificate of the Attorney General provided for in section 365, Revised Statutes. But such compensation is payable only from the appropriation for payment of assistants to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, which appropriation specifically provides that it "shall be available also for the payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases, and such counsel shall not be required to take oath of office in accordance with section 366, Revised Statutes of the United States." (33 Stat., 1207; see also act Aug. 24, 1912, 37 Stat., 465.) The employment by the Secretary of the Navy, and payment from the appropriation for the Navy entitled "Pay, Miscellaneous," of counsel to defend the master of the U. S. N. A. Alexander in the suit referred to would be in direct contravention of sections 189, 357, 363, and 365, Revised Statutes. In view of these provisions, the item in that appropriation, "cost of suits," can not properly be construed as authorizing the employment and payment of counsel by the Navy Department. (Comp. Dec., June 5, 1906; file 4729-5.)

If, as is understood to be the case, the fund appropriated to the Department of Justice for the payment of special counsel for the current fiscal year is exhausted, it may be that the appropriation for the next fiscal year may be appropriately drawn upon in a case in which the services of counsel, if now engaged, would actually be rendered in the next fiscal year. (Secretary of the Navy to Attorney General, June 7, 1906; file 4729-1, 5.) This suggestion was adopted, and upon completion of the services the Attorney General advised the Secretary of the Navy that if the counsel employed will make out and forward an account for his services in the case mentioned, from July 1 of the current year to the date of the conclusion of the case, the same will be approved by the Department of Justice and forwarded to the Auditor for the State and Other Departments for examination, settlement, and payment by warrant transmitted through the United States consul at Hongkong. Such account should not make any mention of expenses. Owing to delay in payment which had already occurred, the Secretary of the Navy, in pursuance of an informal understanding with the Department of Justice, cabled the commander in chief of naval forces on the Asiatic station to "pay and forward receipted bill" of counsel in question. (File 4729-20, Nov., 1906.)

Difficulties are naturally to be expected when statutes general in their terms, such as section 363 (and 189), Revised Statutes, are applied to a case where counsel must be employed in a foreign country under unusual conditions. (Secretary of the Navy to Attorney General, Nov. 9, 1906, file 4729-18.) The Department of Justice is without representatives abroad, and therefore has no direct means of selecting suitable counsel. It seems appropriate that where admiralty proceedings within the jurisdiction of foreign countries are necessary, for the protection of the interests of the United States or those of officers against whom suits are brought for acts done in the line of duty, the Navy Department, through the senior naval officer present, having direct knowledge of the matter, should be authorized to employ counsel without delay. (Secretary of the Navy to chairmen of the Committees on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives and United States Senate, Apr. 28, 1906, file 4729-1.) See also, to same effect, Annual Report, Secretary of the Navy, 1906, page 17, and Appendix B, which refers to and quotes memorandum of Judge Advocate General, November 24, 1906 (file 4729-21).

Naval officer detailed by Commander in Chief, Asiatic Fleet, as counsel for enlisted men in proceedings before U. S. Court for the Consular District of Hankow, upon charge of manslaughter. (See file 12671-35.)

Oath of special counsel.—Special counsel employed by the Attorney General at the request of heads of other departments, to assist in the trial of a case in which the Government is interested, must be commissioned by the Department of Justice as a special assistant to the Attorney General, or to some one of the district attorneys, as the nature of the appointment may require; and shall take the oath required by law to be taken by the district attorneys. (Sec. 366, R. S.; 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 135.) But this does not apply to counsel employed in foreign countries, who are not required to take oath of office. (Act Aug. 24, 1912, 37 Stat., 465; file 4729-18.)

For other cases see note to section 362, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 190. [Persons formerly in Departments not to prosecute claims.] It shall not be lawful for any person appointed after the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, as an officer, clerk, or employé in any of the Departments, to act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States which was pending in either of said Departments while he was such officer, clerk, or employé, nor in any manner, nor by any means, to aid in the prosecution of any such claim, within two years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer, clerk, or employé.—(1 June, 1872, c. 256, s. 5, vol. 17, p. 202.)

SEC. 113, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1109), prohibits any Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, and officers and clerks in the employ of the Government, from accepting compensation for services rendered to any person in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is a party, before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or civil, military, or naval commission whatever.

SEC. 109, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1107), prohibits every officer of the United States, or person holding any place of trust or profit or discharging any official function in connection with any executive department, the Senate, or House of Representatives, to act as agent or attorney for prosecuting any claims against the United States, or otherwise than in the discharge of his proper official duties to assist in the prosecution of any such claim.

A retired officer of the Army is "an officer of the United States" within the meaning of section 5498, Revised Statutes [superseded by section 109, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1107], and therefore prohibited from acting as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States. (Tyler's case, 18 Ct. Cls., 25.) In this case the Court of Claims followed the decision of the Supreme Court in Tyler v. United States (105 U. S., 244) which held that a retired officer of the Army is in the service of the United States. In Winthrop's case (31 Ct. Cls., 35), the Court of Claims affirmed its previous decision in Tyler's case, and expressly dissented from the decision of the New York Court of Appeals, rendered in People v. Duane (121 N. Y., 373), which held that a retired officer of the Army does not hold a Federal office. In the Winthrop case the Court of Claims cited in support of its decision Wood's case (15 Ct. Cls., 151; affirmed 107 U. S., 414), Franklin's case (29 Ct. Cls., 6), Badeau's case (130 U. S., 439), and Texas v. De Gress (53 Tex., 400). The cases were reviewed by the Attorney General in an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy, May 17, 1912 (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397), holding that a retired officer of the Marine Corps is an officer in the employ of the Government, and, as such, is prohibited by section 1782, Revised Statutes, from accepting compensation for appearing before any department, court-martial, etc. In this opinion, the Attorney General also dissented from the case of People v. Duane, and the case of Reed v. Schon (2 Cal. App., 57). [Note: Section 1782, Revised Statutes, was superseded and repealed by Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 113 and 341, 35 Stat., 1109 and 1153.]

The Civil Service Commission is not an executive department within the meaning of this section. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 6.) As to definition of "Departments," see note to section 159, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 191. [Certified balances conclusive in settlement of public accounts. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 191. The balances which may from time to time be stated by the auditor and certified to the heads of departments by the Commissioner of Customs, or the Comptrollers of the Treasury, upon the settlement of public accounts, shall not be subject to be changed or modified by the heads of departments, but shall be conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government, and be subject to revision only by Congress or the proper courts. The head of the proper department, before signing a warrant for any balance certified to him by a Comptroller, may, however, submit to such Comptroller any facts in his judgment affecting the correctness of such balance, but the decision of the Comptroller thereon shall be final and conclusive, as hereinbefore provided."—(30 Mar., 1863, c. 36, s. 1, v. 15, p. 54.)

It was expressly repealed by act of July 31, 1894, section 8 (28 Stat., 208), which act contained provisions completely covering the subject matter of this section.

As to effect of accounting officers' action, and references to cases in which this section has been considered, see on general subject section 236, Revised Statutes, and note.

Sec. 192. [Expenditures for newspapers.] The amount expended in any one year for newspapers, for any Department, except the Department of State, including all the Bureaus and offices connected therewith, shall not exceed one hundred dollars. And all newspapers purchased with the public money for the use of either of the Departments must be preserved as files for such Department.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 16, v. 5, p. 526.)

The latter portion of this section requiring newspapers purchased for the use of executive departments to be preserved for the permanent files of such departments, was expressly repealed by act of June 22, 1906, section 7 (34 Stat., 449).

By act of June 19, 1878 (20 Stat., 171), punishment was provided for stealing, wrongfully defacing, injuring, mutilating, tearing, or destroying any newspaper, the property of the United States.

By section 1779, Revised Statutes, it is provided that "no executive officer other than the heads of departments, shall apply more than $30 annually out of the contingent fund under his control to pay for newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, or other books or prints not necessary for the business of his office."

Section 192 has been modified so as not to apply to subscriptions to newspapers by the Military Information Division, Adjutant General's Office of the Army, for the fiscal years 1898 and thereafter. (Army appropriation act, Mar. 2, 1903, 32 Stat., 929; joint resolution, June 29, 1898, 30 Stat., 749.)

Section 3648, Revised Statutes, provides that "no advance of public money shall be made in any case whatever," and that payment shall not exceed the value of articles previously delivered. Congress has repeatedly enacted that this prohibition shall not apply to subscriptions to newspapers in specified cases. See Naval appropriation act, August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 350), and subsequent years, as to foreign and domestic periodicals for the Naval Academy; Army appropriation act, April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 260), as to foreign and professional newspapers and periodicals for Military Information Division, General Staff Corps; Army appropriation act, March 3, 1911 (36 Stat., 1025), as to foreign, professional, and other newspapers and periodicals for Military Academy; Army appropriation act, March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 733), as to subscriptions from the appropriations for the Coast Artillery School, Fort Monroe, Va.; sundry civil appropriation act, March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1182), as to subscriptions for publications for use in the Immigration Service at large; agricultural appropriation act, March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1054), as to publications for use of Department of Agriculture. (This prohibition does not apply to subscriptions from profits on sales by ships stores in the Navy. Comp. Dec., Aug. 11, 1914, file 26254-1571.2; see also act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 619.)

Subscriptions for "periodicals" required for official use may be paid in advance. (Act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1049.)

Hereafter subscriptions for newspapers and periodicals for the naval service may be paid for in advance. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 929.)

"No executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law." (Sec. 3679, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 27, 1906, 34 Stat., 48; see also section 3732, R. S., as amended by act of June 12, 1906, 34 Stat., 255.)

Newspapers are not periodicals within the meaning of act of March 15, 1898, section 3 (30 Stat., 316), providing that thereafter periodicals for the use of any executive department at the seat of Government shall not be paid for from any appropriation for contingent expenses or for any specific or general purpose unless specifically authorized by the law granting the appropriation. (4 Comp. Dec., 694.)

Purchase after advertisement.—The Navy Department desires that all newspapers and periodicals, both American and foreign, for the Naval Establishment, for use on shore, both in and outside the continental limits of the United States, except such as may be purchased by naval attachés, shall be purchased after advertisement in the public press. (Circular, Oct. 6, 1914, file 12809-83.)

Sec. 193. [Annual report of expenditures from contingent funds.] The head of each Department shall make an annual report to Congress, giving a detailed statement of the manner in which the contingent fund for his Department, and for the Bureaus and offices therein, has been expended, giving the names of every person to whom any portion thereof has been paid; and if for anything furnished, the quantity and price; and if for any service rendered, the nature of such service, and the time employed, and the particular occasion or cause, in brief, that rendered such service necessary; and the amount of all former appropriations in each case on hand, either in the Treasury or in the hands of any disbursing officer or agent. And he shall require of the disbursing officers, acting under his direction and authority, the return of precise and analytical statements and receipts for all the moneys which may have been from time to time during the next preceding year expended by them, and shall communicate the results of such returns and the sums total, annually, to Congress.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 20, v. 5, p. 527.)

Similar provisions were contained in acts of June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 96); March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 355); August 15, 1876 (19 Stat., 156); March 3, 1877 (19 Stat., 306).

For complete references to laws requiring reports to be made by Secretary of the Navy, see section 429, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

"All appropriations for specific, general, and contingent expenses of the Navy Department shall be under the control and expended by direction of the Secretary of the Navy." (Sec. 3676, R. S.)

"No moneys appropriated for contingent, incidental, or miscellaneous purposes shall be expended or paid for official or clerical compensation." (Sec. 3682, R. S.)

No person shall be employed in any executive department or be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses, unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation. (Act Aug. 5, 1882, sec. 4, 22 Stat., 255.)

No purchases shall be made from the contingent fund of any department, bureau, or office, except upon written order of the head of the department. (Sec. 3683, R. S.)

Expenditures from contingent funds for newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, or other books or prints, are limited by section 1779, Revised Statutes. (See note to sec. 192, R. S.)

Expenditures from contingent funds for law books, books of reference, and periodicals, are prohibited, unless specifically authorized by the appropriation. (Act Mar. 15, 1898, sec. 3, 30 Stat., 316.)

Appropriations for contingent expenses must be apportioned by monthly or other allotments at the beginning of fiscal year, so as to prevent deficiency before end of year; and such apportionment must be adhered to, under penalty of summary dismissal and fine or imprisonment, except in case of extraordinary emergency. (Act Feb. 27, 1906, 34 Stat., 48.)

Use of contingent funds is authorized for investigations of title to land purchased for navy yards, public buildings, etc. (Sec. 355, R. S.)

Expenses of insane persons belonging to the Navy or Marine Corps may be paid from annual appropriation for naval service under head of contingent enumerated. (Sec. 1551, R. S.)

Sec. 194. [Report of clerks employed. Repealed.]

This section read as follows:

"Sec. 194. The head of each department shall make an annual report to Congress of the names of the clerks and other persons that have been employed in his department and the offices thereof; stating the time that each clerk or other person was actually employed, and the sums paid to each; also, whether they have been usefully employed; whether the services of any of them can be dispensed with without detriment to the public service, and whether the removal of any individuals, and the appointment of others in their stead, is required for the better dispatch of business."—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 11, v. 5, p. 525.)

It was repealed by act of March 2, 1895, section 8 (28 Stat., 808).

The Secretary of the Navy is required to make annual report to Congress of civilians employed on clerical duty from "Pay of the Navy," and other naval appropriations (act Jan. 30, 1885, 23 Stat., 295); and is required to make a similar report of the number and compensation of persons employed from "Increase of the Navy," and other general appropriations (act Apr. 17, 1900, 31 Stat., 117); also, a report of persons employed for technical services from appropriations "Equipment of Vessels," "Steam Machinery," "Construction and Repair," "Ordnance and Ordnance Stores," and from appropriations and allotments under the Bureau of Yards and Docks. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 768, 770, 771, and appropriation acts for subsequent years.)

Heads of departments are required to report to Congress employees detailed to other offices in accordance with section 166, Revised Statutes, as amended. (Act Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 7, 28 Stat., 808.) Also required to report number of employees in each bureau and office below a fair standard of efficiency, and the salary of each. (Act July 11, 1890, sec. 2, 26 Stat., 268.)

For other reports required of the Secretary of the Navy, see section 429, Revised Statutes, and note.

Sec. 195. [Time of making annual reports to Congress.] Except where a different time is expressly prescribed by law, the various annual reports required to be submitted to Congress by the heads of Departments shall be made at the commencement of each regular session, and shall embrace the transactions of the preceding year.—(See all acts requiring reports.)

Neglect or refusal of any officer to make any report within the time prescribed by law is punishable by fine of not more than $1,000. (Sec. 101, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1107.)

For reports required to be made by the Secretary of Navy, see section 429, Revised Statutes, and note.

Sec. 196. [Time of furnishing annual reports to printer.] The head of each Department, except the Department of Justice, shall furnish to the Congressional Printer copies of the documents usually accompanying his annual report, on or before the first day of November in each year, and a copy of his annual report on or before the third Monday of November in each year.—(25 June, 1864, c. 155, ss. 1, 3, v. 13, pp. 184, 5; 22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 12, v. 16, p. 164.)

The above section was amended by a clause contained in the sundry civil appropriation act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat., 680), requiring that, during that fiscal year, copy be furnished to the Public Printer as follows: Copies of documents accompanying annual reports, on or before the 15th day of October; copies of annual reports, on or before the 15th day of November; and complete revised proofs of accompanying documents and annual reports, on the 10th and 20th days of November, respectively. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.) This provision was repeated in the sundry civil act for the following year, and was made permanent by act of July 1, 1916 (39 Stat., 336), which further requires that said reports and accompanying documents be printed, made public and available for distribution within the first five days after the assembling of each regular session of Congress.

Illustrations, maps, etc., are to be excluded from annual reports, except such as are necessary. (Act Aug. 30, 1890, 26 Stat., 411.)

Reports are not to be distributed with "the compliments" of any officer of the Government. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 620; act Mar. 3, 1893, 27 Stat., 612; act Aug. 5, 1892, 27 Stat., 388.)

Sec. 197. [Inventories of Department property.] The Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster-General, the Attorney-General, and Commissioner of Agriculture shall keep, in proper books, a complete inventory of all the property belonging to the United States in the buildings, rooms, offices, and grounds occupied by them, respectively, and under their charge, adding thereto, from time to time, an account of such property as may be procured subsequently to the taking of such inventory, as well as an account of the sale or other disposition of any of such property, [except supplies of stationery and fuel in the public offices and books, pamphlets, and papers in the Library of Congress].—(15 July, 1870, c. 300, s. 1, v. 16, p. 364; 27 Feb., 1877, c. 69, v. 19, p. 241.)

This section was amended to read as above by act of February 27, 1877, section 1 (19 Stat., 241), the amendment consisting in adding to the original section the words printed in brackets.

A similar provision with reference to the Post Office Department is contained in section 397, Revised Statutes, and with reference to the Capitol, Botanical Garden, and the President's House in section 1833, Revised Statutes. Both of these sections require an annual report to Congress of the required inventory and account.

The Secretary of the Navy is required to report to Congress annually account of proceeds from sales of public property. (Secs. 429, 1541, and 3672, R. S., and act Aug. 5, 1882, 22 Stat., 296.) The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts is required to report annually to Congress an account of supplies at the various stations pertaining to the Naval Establishment. (Act Mar. 2, 1889, 25 Stat., 817.)

Disposition of useless papers in executive departments is provided for by act of February 16, 1889 (25 Stat., 672), amended by act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 933). Other provisions of law on the same subject, relating specifically to the Navy, are contained in act of February 16, 1909, section 14 (35 Stat., 622), act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329), and naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 929).

On general subject of custody of public property, see note to section 161, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 198. [Data to be furnished for Biennial Register.—Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 198. The head of each department shall, as soon as practicable after the last day in September in each year in which a new Congress is to assemble, cause to be filed in the Department of the Interior a full and complete list of all officers, agents, clerks, and employees employed in his department, or in any of the offices or bureaus connected therewith. He shall include in such list all the statistics peculiar to his department required to enable the Secretary of the Interior to prepare the biennial register."—(27 Apr., 1816, Res. No. 6, s. 1, v. 3, p. 342; 3 Mar., 1851, c. 32, s. 1, v. 9, p. 600; 14 July, 1832, Res. No. 11, v. 4, p. 608.)

It was superseded by act of January 12, 1895, section 73 (28 Stat., 618), which contained detailed provisions concerning data to be furnished the Secretary of the Interior for publication in the "Official Register of the United States" every two years. By act of June 7, 1906 (34 Stat., 219), it was provided that "The Director of Census shall edit, index, and publish the Official Register of the United States, and the provisions of existing law imposing that duty upon the Department of the Interior are hereby repealed, and the data to be included in the Official Register, which is now required to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, shall hereafter be transmitted to the Director of the Census."

CHAPTER ONE.

THE DEPARTMENT.

Sec. 233. [Establishment of Department of the Treasury.] There shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department to be known as the Department of the Treasury, and a Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be the head thereof.—(2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, s. 1, v. 1, p. 65.)

See note to section 158 Revised Statutes, concerning executive departments in general.

Sec. 236. [Settlement of public accounts.] All claims and demands whatever by the United States or against them, and all accounts whatever in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or as creditors, shall be settled and adjusted in the Department of the Treasury.—(3 March, 1817, c. 45, s. 2, v. 3, p. 366. U. S. v. Mann, 1 Brock, 9 [should be 2 Brock, 9]. Cooke et al. v. U. S., 91 U. S., 389.)

See act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 205 et seq.), relating to the duties of Comptroller of the Treasury and Auditor for the Navy Department.

Property accounts.—Settlement of, is provided for by act of March 29, 1894 (28 Stat., 47).

Inspection of books and records.—By act of March 15, 1898 (30 Stat., 316), it is provided that "all books, papers, and other matters relating to the accounts of officers of the Government in the District of Columbia shall at all times be subject to inspection and examination by the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Auditor of the Treasury authorized to settle such accounts, or by the duly authorized agents of either of said officials."

Report of claims allowed.—“The Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the commencement of each session of Congress, report the amount due each claimant whose claim has been allowed in whole or in part to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the presiding officer of the Senate, who shall lay the same before their respective houses for consideration.” (Act July 7, 1884, 23 Stat., 254.)

Report of delinquent officers.—Provision for annual report to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury of officers delinquent in rendering accounts is contained in act May 28, 1896, section 4 (29 Stat., 179).

Assignment of claims against United States is restricted by section 3477, Revised Statutes; assignment of pay by enlisted men, Navy, is permitted by section 1576, Revised Statutes; to be discouraged by commanding officer, section 1430, Revised Statutes; allotment of pay by officers, Navy, is permitted by act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 361).

I. SCOPE OF SECTION.

II. JURISDICTION OF ACCOUNTING OFFICERS.

III. LIMITATIONS UPON JURISDICTION.

IV. JURISDICTION, ACCOUNTING OFFICERS AND FEDERAL COURTS.

V. JURISDICTION, ACCOUNTING OFFICERS AND HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

VI. SET-OFF.

VII. EFFECT OF ACCOUNTING OFFICERS' ACTION.

VIII. REOPENING OF ACCOUNTS.

IX. MANDAMUS PROCEEDINGS TO COMPEL PAYMENTS.

I. SCOPE OF SECTION.

Applies only to Treasury Department proper.—All claims against the United States are to be settled and adjusted in the Treasury Department; and that is located “at the seat of Government.” The assistant treasurer in New York is a custodian of public money, which he may pay out or transfer upon the order of the proper department or officer; but he has no authority to settle and adjust—that is to say, to determine upon the validity of, any claim against the Government. He can pay only after the adjustment has been made “in the Department of the Treasury,” and then upon drafts drawn for that purpose by the Treasurer. (Cooke v. U. S., 91 U. S., 399.)

Officers charged with execution of section.—The principal officers to whom the great responsibility of settling and adjusting accounts under this section is committed by law are called “accounting officers,” which includes the auditors, each acting separately upon different classes of accounts, and the Comptroller of the Treasury. The different processes in the settlement of claims and demands upon the Government, from their receipt by the auditor, through the several stages of examination, certification, and drawing of warrants for payment, up to the time when the Treasurer issues his drafts, are all matters of accounting to justify the Treasurer in paying out the public money, and are not consummated beyond recall until the claimants receive the negotiable drafts of that officer, drawn, according to the convenience of the parties, upon the Treasury proper, in Washington, or upon one of the several assistant treasurers or designated depositaries in other places. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 305; affirmed 98 U. S., 179.)

“Accounting officers” is a phrase well known as referring to the auditors and Comptroller of the Treasury, who pass upon all claims against the Government before they can be paid out of the Public Treasury. (Moncure v. Zunts, 11 Wall., 416, 422.)

In matters of accounting, the several public officers act independently of each other, although the Secretary of the Treasury, being the head of the department, has a right generally to control or revise, to some extent, the action of others in subordinate official positions, and the Comptroller has some power over an auditor and is not bound by the action of that officer which is certified to him. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 306, 307; affirmed 98 U. S., 179.)

The Secretary of the Treasury may, when in his judgment the interests of the Government require it, suspend payment and direct the re-examination of any account. (Act July 31, 1894, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 207.)

Section 236, Revised Statutes, must be construed in connection with sections 273–277, Revised Statutes, which specify the jurisdiction of the accounting officers. (Dig. Dec. Second Comptroller, v. 3, par. 735.)

The general provision of law governing the manner of settling claims against the Government is found in section 236, Revised Statutes. This section was taken from section 2 of act of March 3, 1817 (3 Stat., 366), and without detailing the minor changes which have been made in special cases, it is sufficient to state that the law has continued substantially the same ever since. This power of the Treasury Department to settle claims against the United States is exercised by the accounting officers, and under the present law the Auditor for the Navy Department is charged with the duty of settling all claims arising under the naval establishment. (4 Comp. Dec., 587.)

This section provides that all claims and demands against and by the United States shall be settled and adjusted in the Treasury Department, and by section 7 of the act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 206), the Auditor for the Navy Department shall receive and examine all accounts of the naval establishment. The intent of these laws is that bona fide claimants shall have their claims considered by the accounting officers. (Comp. Dec., Dec. 17, 1904, 46 S. and A. Memo., 459.)

Status of accounting officers.—The accounting officers do not constitute a “department” within the meaning of a law referring to claims “rejected or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same.” (U. S. v. Harmon, 147 U. S., 273.)

The accounting officers of the Treasury are neither contracting nor disbursing officers. In the case of disbursing officers, the policy of the Government has been to acknowledge no payments as made on its behalf save those which were authorized by law. However, where the accounting officers of the Treasury have jurisdiction to settle an account or claim against the Government, a mistake of law committed incidentally in the adjustment will not, after payment of the balance found to be due, affect the finality of the settlement or entitle the Government to recover back the money paid in mistake of law. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 533, 534; reversed on other grounds, 97 U. S., 233.) See below "VIII, Reopening of accounts."

Under a special statute providing that the accounting officers shall "settle and adjust" a claim thereunder, the duties of the accounting officers were administrative, not judicial, and the Court of Claims was not divested of jurisdiction over said claim. (McLean v. U. S., 226 U. S., 374, 378, citing Medbury v. U. S., 173 U. S. 492.)

Itemized accounts required.—For the expenditure of all public moneys it is the invariable rule to require that accounts shall be itemized as far as practicable, in order that the accounting officers may properly audit them. The law may permit the exercise of discretion in the use of public funds without dispensing with the usual requirement of an itemized account showing fully for what purposes the money has been expended. (4 Comp. Dec., 159; 4 Comp. Dec., 271.)

The rules prescribed by the Treasury Department for the adjustment of claims against the Government will, if reasonable, be regarded by the courts; but if these rules go to a complete denial of justice to the individual court, if it have jurisdiction of the subject, can not disregard the rights of the parties. (U. S. v. Mann, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15716, per Marshall, C. J.)

Taking security for debt to the Government.—It is not generally within the duties of public officers to take collateral security, and whenever they do so they are usually acting beyond the scope of their official authority and the United States are not bound by their agreements. However, where public officers, looking to the best interests of the Government, do sometimes accept such security without releasing the debtors or subjecting the United States to liability, in so far as the arrangements are consummated for the benefit of the Government they may be upheld, and the officers commended for their vigilance and zeal in the public service. (Taggart v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 322.)

Claims against Government voluntarily settled from private funds.—A naval militia officer who voluntarily pays an obligation of the United States is not entitled to reimbursement from the Government. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 17, 1915, Appeal No. 24365, file 26254-1709, citing 4 Comp. Dec., 409; 6 Comp. Dec., 594; 8 Comp. Dec., 584; 11 Comp. Dec., 486; 12 Comp. Dec., 48.) [In a reconsideration in this case May 22, 1915, it was held that, owing to exceptional circumstances, reimbursement should be allowed, applying 18 Comp. Dec., 299, holding that "An officer of the United States is not, ordinarily, authorized to advance his private funds in payment of any claim against the United States except for expenses incurred by him personally for travel or other personal expense allowed by the terms of his employment. But this is a rule of accounting and should not be permitted to hinder the public business or prevent the payment of just and lawful claims against the Government."]

II. JURISDICTION OF ACCOUNTING OFFICERS.

In general.—Substantially all accounts must pass under the eye and receive the approval of the accounting officers of the Treasury. Even the accounts of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the President come to them for allowance. The business of the accounting officers is to determine what payments shall or shall not be made on behalf of the United States. These functions of office were a part of the wondrous birth of the Treasury system, and have remained unchanged from the foundation of the Government to the present time. It is well known that the Comptrollers have sometimes construed statutes in one way and the courts subsequently in another. Such diversity of judgment is inevitable in the administration of human affairs, and the wonder is that there has been so little of it on the part of these officers. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 532, 534; reversed on other grounds, 97 U. S., 233.)

The law devolves upon the accounting officers of the Treasury the duties of examining, settling, and adjusting all accounts, claims and demands in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or as creditors, and to certify balances arising thereon; their exercise of such duties includes the weighing of evidence, the construction of statutes, and the application of general principles of law in connection therewith. (5 Comp. Dec., 410; 14 Comp. Dec., 169.)

It is the theory, and a wise one, upon which the final adjustment and settlement of accounts in the Treasury Department is founded, that the officers who pass upon them shall be wholly distinct from those who expend the money or incur the liabilities. For the manner in which these latter officers perform the trust imposed upon them they alone are responsible; the Comptroller is only charged with the duty of seeing that they keep within the law. (Waters v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 38.)

The organization of the Department of the Treasury is comprehensive, thorough, and exact; it is supplied not only with skilled accountants but special law officers, and besides has on proper occasions the right to call in aid the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States; it seems fully equipped for the discharge of every fiscal duty and exigency. (State of Mississippi v. Durham, 4 Mackey (D. C.), 237.)

The accounting system of the Treasury is one of the oldest, best known, and most highly esteemed parts of our governmental machinery. To its scrutiny all accounts are subjected of persons having business or financial relations with the Government, from the President to the smallest contractor. (Dennison v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 320.)

The machinery of the Treasury Department for the adjustment of accounts is only adapted to the passing upon ordinary accounts upon which controversies are not expected to arise to any great extent, and not at all beyond the means of adjusting from the records and files of the several departments. One of the primary, most important, and most useful objects to be attained in establishing the Court of Claims was to provide a tribunal where claims against the Government should be determined upon legal evidence, taken under the forms and subject to the rules of law, which they are not and never can be in the process of accounting in the Treasury Department. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 310; affirmed 98 U. S. 179.)

Judgments of Court of Claims.—Even the judgments of the Court of Claims must pass through the same processes of accounting, not for the purpose of review, but to justify the Treasurer in issuing his draft for the payment thereof; and that is what all the long process of accounting leads to. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 309; affirmed 98 U. S. 179.)

It is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay judgments of the Court of Claims; this section does not confer power upon him to go behind the judgment. The accounting officers have no authority to reexamine the judgment, which is conclusive as to everything it embraces. (U. S. v. Jones, 119 U. S., 477; see also Meigs v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls. 181; U. S. v. O'Grady, 22 Wall., 641; Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 190.)

Public money.—The pay and allowances of midshipmen coming out of the general fund of the Treasury is public money to start with, and it will remain public money until it passes from the absolute control of the Government. Accordingly, held that funds received by a naval pay officer as commissary officer of the midshipmen's mess at the Naval Academy are public funds, and that he should be required to account for the proper disbursement thereof to the accounting officers of the Treasury, the same as any other public money placed in his hands for disbursement in his official capacity. (14 Comp. Dec., 680.) This decision is not affected by the fact that the midshipmen receipt on the pay roll for their proportionate share of the cost of running the midshipmen's mess; the paymaster does not in fact pay this money to the midshipmen but pays it to himself as commissary of the mess and accounts for it as such commissary; a receipt for money by a midshipman which he did not actually receive is not a good acquittance to the Government. It therefore becomes necessary to show by other evidence what he actually received, and this is accomplished by requiring the commissary officer to render an accounting of the funds paid to him from the pay and rations due the midshipmen and expended by him for their benefit. (Comp. Dec., Dec. 31, 1908, 94 S. and A. Memo., 923.) [The Navy Regulations forbid disbursing officers to require receipts in advance of actual payment. (Art. R-4303 (2), Navy Regs. 1913; see also art. R-4384, (3).)]

Under Navy regulations prior to July 1, 1907 (revoked by G. O. No. 44, Apr. 16, 1907), the commutation value of rations due enlisted men was credited by the pay officer to himself as such, and debited against himself as commissary officer in charge of the general mess, composed of such enlisted men, the money never actually leaving the pay officer's hands until finally paid out in the shape of mess expenditures and not being paid over to the individual enlisted men who composed the mess. It was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that such commutation money in the hands of the pay officer was public money until actually expended by him, and he should be required to account for its proper disbursement to the accounting officers of the Treasury, the same as any other public money placed in his hands for disbursement in his official capacity. (12 Comp. Dec., 678; see also 94 S. and A. Memo., 923.)

A sum of $24,500 was advanced from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy" in 1867 and 1868 for the purpose of conducting a midshipmen's store at the Naval Academy; accumulated profits from this investment amounted in 1908 to about $31,000: Held, that the total sum, representing the original amount and the profits thereon, belongs to the Government and is public money, although the establishment of this fund and its maintenance was without authority of law; further held that such funds should be accounted for to the Treasury Department. (14 Comp. Dec., 680.)

The proceeds from sale of garbage from a receiving ship, including that from the general mess, is public money and must be covered into the Treasury under the provisions of section 3618 of the Revised Statutes as "Miscellaneous receipts." (19 Comp. Dec., 450.)

The profits from sales made by ships' stores in the Navy, as authorized by act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 619), are not public money within the meaning of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 11, 1914, file 26254-1571:2; see also file 26254-1759, Apr. 20, 1915.)

For other cases see note to section 1383, Revised Statutes, under "IX. Liability of Sureties."

III. LIMITATIONS UPON JURISDICTION.

Jurisdiction limited by language of statutes in special cases.—This section undoubtedly gives to the Treasury Department the settlement of all disputed money claims but it is entirely competent for Congress to alter this arrangement, and it has repeatedly done so. Where Congress expressly provides that before payment a claim shall be "examined and settled by the Secretary of War," the obvious construction is that in the case referred to the decision of the Secretary of War was to be the final adjudication. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 492; affirmed 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 387.) [But nothing short of a clear intent, unequivocally expressed in a statute, will warrant a court in holding that the involved accounts of a public officer are not to be settled at the Treasury as other public accounts are settled, or that Congress has intended to create an extraordinary exception to the accounting system of the United States where no need of such exception exists and where none is in terms declared. Dennison v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 321.]

The word "settle" means to adjust, liquidate, balance or pay. (15 Comp. Dec., 557, citing Applegate v. Baxley, 93 Ind., 149.) Where Congress provided that the "settlement" of certain claims "shall be under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions," held that the word "settlement" was used in the sense of an adjustment, liquidation and payment of the claim, and that the effect of the act was to transfer to the Commissioner of Pensions the power to adjust and settle the claims referred to, and to that extent to deprive the accounting officers of the general jurisdiction to settle such claims, conferred by this section; that the final payments as made under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions would, of course, come before the accounting officers for settlement; but such settlement would only involve the allowance of credit for the payment of an adjusted claim, and not the settlement of the claim itself. (15 Comp. Dec., 557.)

Where Congress, by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128) provided that, upon the existence of certain facts, the Paymaster General of the Navy "shall cause to be paid" a gratuity to the beneficiary of a deceased officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps, and that the Secretary of the Navy shall establish regulations requiring each officer and enlisted man to designate the "proper person" to whom the amount should be paid, it was held by the Navy Department that the decision of the Paymaster General, that the facts necessary to authorize payment did not exist in a given case, was necessarily conclusive of the question, except for the right of the claimant to appeal from the action of the Paymaster General to the Secretary of the Navy; and that the Auditor for the Navy Department did not have jurisdiction to review the decision of the Paymaster General. (File 26543-66, Sept. 8 and 9, 1911; compare 22 Comp. Dec., 532; file 26543-148.)

In all cases the officer charged by statute with the duty of allowing or disallowing a claim in his discretion, or according to his judgment, must first act, before the claimant's right is fixed. Then, when he has obtained a decision in his favor, the claimant's demand, of which that decision is prima facie if not conclusive determination, if the officer acts within the scope of his authority and in accordance with the provisions of law, may be the foundation of an action in the Court of Claims, or may pass the accounting officers and be paid by draft upon warrant duly issued, as in other cases. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 309; affirmed 98 U. S., 179.)

By act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 768) it was provided that "all payments made out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by said temporary committee on accounts, shall be deemed, held and taken and are hereby declared to be conclusive upon all the departments and auditing officers of the government." Held, that the Comptroller of the Treasury has no jurisdiction to render a decision upon any question involved in the payment of accounts which have been so approved by the temporary committee on accounts; that Congress intended by the provision above quoted to place upon said committee the final responsibility of approving all payments to be made from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and to make their action conclusive. (2 Comp. Dec., 24.)

The certificate of the Speaker of the House of Representatives as to the salary and mileage of members, being by law (secs. 47, 48, R. S.) made conclusive upon all departments of the Government, the Comptroller has no jurisdiction to render a decision upon the amount due to a member for salary or mileage. (2 Comp. Dec., 339.)

The naval appropriation act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 619), provided that profits from sales by ships' stores in the Navy should be accounted for to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department. In view of this provision, the Comptroller of the Treasury is without jurisdiction to render a decision as to the legality of proposed expenditures from this fund. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 28, 1915, file 26254-1759-2.)

The accounting officers are without jurisdiction to receive and settle claims of individual officers and enlisted men of the organized militia for pay while engaged in field or camp service for instruction, and are without revisory power in such cases. The officers and men must look to the State, Territory, or District of Columbia in whose service they are engaged; when the United States turns over to the State, Territory or District of Columbia its allotted portion of the appropriation made by Congress for the militia, the disbursing officer is accountable in case he pays out said money for purposes other than that for which it was appropriated by Congress; but if he refuses to pay officers and enlisted men of the militia money to which they are entitled, they can not present individual claims and have them paid through the accounting officers. The accounting officers are without jurisdiction to compel the disbursing officer to make any payment or to afford said officers and enlisted men any remedy. (10 Comp. Dec., 635.) [But this does not apply to pay due the naval militia for joint service or maneuvers with the Navy, as payments in such cases are not required to be made through the disbursing officer of the naval militia organizations. (Comp. Dec., June 20, 1914, file 3973-64-2, and see act Feb. 16, 1914, sec. 12, 38 Stat., 286, later repealed).]

No jurisdiction to determine whether deductions shall be made from pay of public officers on account of alleged indebtedness.—The Comptroller of the Treasury is authorized by law (act July 31, 1894, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 207) to render decisions upon questions of payment to be made by disbursing officers of the Government. But the law confers no such function upon the Comptroller nor upon an auditor as deciding that the pay of public officers fixed by statute should be withheld on account of alleged indebtedness of such officers to the United States. When such indebtedness is denied by the officer to whom salary is lawfully due, the matter is one for judicial rather than administrative determination, and a decision of the Comptroller rendered in such case is extraofficial, not required by law, and affords no warrant for the action of the disbursing officer in withholding the officer's salary, in whole or in part. Payment of salary in such case may be enforced by mandamus proceedings, and the officer is not required to bring suit in the Court of Claims. (Smith v. Jackson, 241 Fed. Rep., 747; affirmed 246 U. S., 388.)

Jurisdiction limited to accounts.—The terms "debtors" and "creditors" used in this section limit and qualify the nature of the claims and demands which are to be settled and adjusted in the Treasury Department. The assumption of the adjudication of private claims against the government by the accounting officers, except as incident to the settlement of accounts, or except when authorized by private act, would impair their functions and defeat the real object for which their offices were created. (Dig. Dec. Second Comp. v. 3, par. 735.)

Where the Paymaster General of the Navy declined to pay a claim for death gratuity under the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), there was nothing in any account which had been rendered to the auditor upon which that officer could review the action of the Paymaster General. Accordingly, held that the Auditor for the Navy Department did not have jurisdiction to settle and adjust the claim in this case, although claimant took the matter up with the auditor's office; that under the law the duties of the auditor relate to the examination of accounts and the certification of balances; that if payment had been made to the beneficiary in this case of a less sum than claimed, the accounts, including the payment of such amount, would be before the auditor, but such was not the fact, as no payment at all had been made; and that claimant's appeal was to the Secretary of the Navy from the Paymaster General's action and not to the accounting officers of the Treasury. (File 26543-66, Sept. 8, 1911.)

Property accounts.—The settlement of property accounts is provided for by act of March 29, 1894 (28 Stat., 47). Under said act, the jurisdiction of the accounting officers does not extend back of the decision of the officer whose duty it is to audit property accounts in each department [in the Navy Department, the Paymaster General of the Navy, and the quartermaster of the Marine Corps]; and where such officer has fixed the responsibility for loss or damage to property, and ascertained its value and certified a charge against the responsible officer to the accounting officers, it is not within the jurisdiction of the accounting officers to remove the charge. (Comp. Dec., May 13, 1908, 87 S. and A. Memo., 703; Comp. Dec., July 26, 1915, 173 S. and A., Memo., 3728.) Appeal in such cases arising in the Navy or Marine Corps, may be taken to the Secretary of the Navy who has jurisdiction to cause the charge to be removed. (File 18140-10:2, May 16, 1911.)

and transactions of the officers of the Navy Department, and to relieve him of all responsibility in relation to the disposition of property intrusted to said officers. Under this act the duty and responsibility of determining questions relating to the correct disposition or loss of property have been transferred to and vested in the proper officer of the Navy Department, and it seems clear that the auditor will have no authority over or in relation to the property mentioned in a cash voucher evidencing the purchase of forage, until he has been furnished with a certificate of the Paymaster General in accordance with said act; jurisdiction over property accounts can not be given to the auditor by injecting papers into cash accounts tending to show what disposition has been made of such property. (2 Comp. Dec., 267; Comp. Dec., June 23, 1908, appeal No. 15210, file 26254-19; 23 Comp. Dec., 28.)

The accounting officers of the Treasury have no jurisdiction to settle accounts of rations issued in kind. (Comp. Dec., June 23, 1908, appeal No. 15210, file 26254-19; Comp. Dec., Mar. 19, 1909, 97 S. and A. Memo., 995.) It follows that the Comptroller of the Treasury has no jurisdiction to render a decision with reference to over-issues of rations to men absent with or without leave. (Comp. Dec., June 27, 1908, file 26254-17. [Quere, Whether Comptroller has jurisdiction to render decisions upon questions relating to the issue of heat and light in kind to officers of the Navy; this question discussed but not decided in file 26254-394, Jan. 29 and Feb. 8, 1910.]

The Comptroller of the Treasury is not authorized to render a decision to the Secretary of War upon the question whether certain members of the organized militia are entitled to issues of uniforms, etc.; as the accounting for such property is regulated by the act of March 29, 1894 (28 Stat., 47). (20 Comp. Dec., 49, 55; see also Comp. Dec., Feb. 3, 1917, file 26254-2177:1.)

Unliquidated damages.—Under section 236, Revised Statutes, the accounting officers have jurisdiction of all claims against the United States, whether liquidated or unliquidated, but by long-continued practice a rule of law has been established which precludes these officers from allowing claims for unliquidated damages. (5 Comp. Dec., 770.)

Section 236, Revised Statutes, refers to liquidated contract obligations. (Dig. Dec., Second Comp., v. 3, par. 735. See also 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 327, 627; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 524; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 424; Carmick v. U. S., 2 Ct. Cls., 126, 140.)

The accounting officers of the Treasury have no jurisdiction to settle claims for unliquidated damages, whether the claims arise from unavoidable accident or from torts. Accordingly, held that there is no jurisdiction to settle claim for damage done to wharf by navy yard tug. (1 Comp. Dec., 283.) [This in the absence of express statutory authority for payment of such claims.]

The head of an executive department is not authorized to pay the actual expenses of repairing a vessel injured in a collision with a Government vessel, the claim arising from the collision being one for unliquidated damages caused by the tort of the Government's officers.

(1 Comp. Dec., 261.) It seems to be the approved practice to commit such claims to the tender mercies of Congress for settlement. (1 Comp. Dec., 285.) [The Court of Claims has said: "We do not find it to be within the official duties of the head of any department to make estimates for appropriations to pay claims which the Government is not in law bound to pay, however much they may be urged to do so by claimants who feel aggrieved by the tortious conduct of public officers. An executive department is not the place to apply for redress of grievances not founded on legal rights." (Pitman v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 256.) The naval appropriation act, June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607), authorizes the Secretary of the Navy "to consider, ascertain, adjust and determine" the amounts due on all claims for damages occasioned by collisions for which vessels of the Navy are responsible, where the amount of the claim does not exceed $500; and to report the amounts due to Congress at each session, through the Treasury Department, for payment as legal claims." The naval appropriation act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 705), authorized the Secretary of the Navy to "consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay" amounts due, not exceeding $1,000, on claims for damages to and loss of private property of inhabitants of European countries not enemies or their allies, occasioned by men in the naval service during the existing war.]

The accounting officers of the Treasury have jurisdiction to settle claims based on a contract with the Government, either expressed or implied, where it is possible to ascertain either from the terms of the contract, or from extraneous proof, the justice of the claim and the correctness of the amount; but they can not take cognizance of claims for unliquidated damages arising from torts or breach of contract. This has been repeatedly held by the Court of Claims and in opinions of Attorneys General. (2 Comp. Dec., 174; citing McKee's case, 12 Ct. Cls., 556 [reversed, 97 U. S., 233]; Dennis v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 119, 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 24; and see 20 Comp. Dec., 661.)

The jurisdiction of the accounting officers is limited to claims arising on contracts, express or implied, and does not extend to a claim for unliquidated damages, even though such claim does not arise from the tort of an officer of the Government. Accordingly, held that accounting officers have no jurisdiction of claim for reimbursement for private property destroyed by fire. (2 Comp. Dec., 487.) [Reimbursement for loss or damage of private property belonging to persons in the Navy or Marine Corps has been provided for by various acts of Congress. (See sec. 290, R. S., and note thereto.)]

The accounting officers and heads of departments have no cognizance of claims for unliquidated damages founded on neglect or breach of duty of public officers, even where they grow out of nonperformance of written contracts, other than in payment for work actually done or material furnished and received. (Pitman v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 253; 1 Comp. Dec., 261.)

It is plain that the Government itself is not responsible for the misfeasances, or wrongs, or neglects, or omissions of duty of subordinate officers or agents employed in the public service; for it does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of any of the officers or agents whom it employs; since that would involve it, in all its operations, in endless embarrassments, and difficulties, and losses, which would be subversive of the public interests. (Pitman v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 255, quoting Judge Story in his work on Agency.)

Equitable claims.—The accounting officers have no jurisdiction in a case in which claimant has an equitable claim only, which, however just, the executive officers of the Government are not authorized to settle. (9 Comp. Dec. 663.) [See section 287, Revised Statutes, which requires accounting officers to settle certain classes of accounts in the Navy "on principles of equity and justice."]

IV. JURISDICTION, ACCOUNTING OFFICERS AND FEDERAL COURTS.

The Court of Claims at first had a rule that "in every case where the claim is such as is ordinarily settled in any Executive Department, the petition shall show that application for its allowance has been made to that department, and without success, and its decision thereon;" and a petition was dismissed because it did not set forth those facts. On appeal the Supreme Court decided the rule to be unauthorized and void, and remitted the case with directions to proceed to a hearing on the petition, and the rule was thereupon abrogated and the Court of Claims has ever since proceeded to hear cases without reference to the action of the accounting officers thereon. (McKnight v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 312; affirmed 98 U. S., 179; Clyde v. U. S., 13 Wall., 35.)

Decisions binding on accounting officers.—By express legislation (act Mar. 4, 1907, 34 Stat., 1356), as well as the ruling of the Supreme Court, the decisions of the Court of Claims, when not appealed from, furnish the rules by which the accounting officers are to be guided in their settlement and adjustment of like cases. (Leigh v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 387; 18 Comp. Dec., 493; Comp. Dec., Sept. 26, 1910, file 26254-539. But see 21 Comp. Dec., 431; reversed 21 Comp. Dec. 561; also, Comp. Dec., Apr. 13, 1916, file 26543-140-2, and 20 Comp. Dec., 821.)

"Clearly it is the duty of the accounting officers, as well as of all other officers of the Government in the discharge of their official duties, to follow the rulings of the United States courts where applicable. * * * Notwithstanding a claim may have been allowed or rejected, if subsequent thereto the Supreme Court or this court has adjudicated such claim or a like claim such adjudication creates a new rule of decision binding on the accounting officers in the subsequent consideration of like claims, whether then pending or subsequently filed." (Blazek v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 188, 191, 192.)

Any doubt which an auditor may have had as to the legality of making deductions from the salary of a public officer in a particular case "should have been subordinated, first, to the ruling of the Attorney General and, second, beyond all possible question to the judgments of the courts below." (Smith v. Jackson, 246 U. S., 388, affirming 241 Fed. Rep., 747.)

The judgments of the Court of Claims, not appealed from, are conclusive upon the accounting officers, who have no authority to reexamine such a judgment. (U. S. v. Jones, 119 U. S., 477; McKnight v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 309, affirmed 98 U. S., 179; Meigs v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls. 181; U. S. v. O'Grady, 22 Wall., 641; Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 190.)

The action of the accounting officers is not conclusive in a suit between the United States and the individual. (U. S. v. Harmon, 147 U. S., 274, 275); nor is it even prima facie evidence of the indebtedness of the Government. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 292.)

The Court of Claims has jurisdiction, upon reference of the head of any department, to report its findings of fact and conclusions of law with reference to any claim or matter pending in such department which involves controverted questions of fact or law; and the report of the Court of Claims in such a case shall be for the "guidance and action" of the department making the reference. Judiciary Act, March 3, 1911, section 148 (36 Stat., 1137). Where the Comptroller of the Treasury held a provision of the Army Regulations to be null and void, the question was referred by the Secretary of War to the Court of Claims, which reversed the Comptroller of the Treasury and sustained the validity of the regulation. (In re Smith, 23 Ct. Cls., 452; see also Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

Whenever any claim is made against any executive department over which it has jurisdiction, such department may, without action in the Treasury Department, refer such claim to the Court of Claims, provided it be one which the court might, under existing laws, take jurisdiction of on the voluntary action of the claimant. (Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 503.)

The Court of Claims has jurisdiction to try and adjudicate claims or matters which the Secretary of the Treasury may, upon the certificate of any auditor or of the Comptroller of the Treasury, direct to be transmitted to said court, and of which the court might have jurisdiction on the voluntary action of the claimant. (Act Mar. 3, 1911, sec. 148, 36 Stat., 1137.)

Suits for lost checks.—When a Government check is lost or stolen, the Revised Statutes (secs. 306-310, 3616) do not require that payment must be postponed for three years or preclude a suit. They simply authorize disbursing officers to duplicate small checks in certain cases. The power given to the accounting officers to duplicate lost checks is not exclusive and does not affect the jurisdiction of the courts. (Becker v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 172, 177.)

For other cases, see "VII. Effect of accounting officers' action."

V. JURISDICTION, ACCOUNTING OFFICERS AND HEADS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

- (A) Secretary of the Navy.
- (B) Secretary of War.
- (C) Miscellaneous.

Attorney General.—See note to section 356, Revised Statutes.

Secretary of the Treasury.—The Secretary of the Treasury, being the head of the department, has a right generally to control or revise to some extent the action of others in subordinate official positions. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 306, 307, affirmed 98 U. S., 179.) "The Secretary of the Treasury may, when in his judgment the interests of the Government require it, suspend payment, and direct the reexamination of any account." (Act July 31, 1894, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 208.)

The accounting officers of the Treasury have not the burden of responsibility cast upon them of revising the judgments, correcting the supposed mistakes, or annulling the orders of heads of departments. The Secretary of the Navy represents the President, and exercises his power on subjects confided to his department. He is responsible to the people and the law for any abuse of the powers intrusted to him. His acts and decisions on subjects submitted to his jurisdiction and control by the Constitution and laws do not require the approval of any officer of another department to make them valid and conclusive. The Executive Department of the Government to which is intrusted the control of the subject-matter must necessarily determine all questions appertaining thereto. Where the Comptroller of the Treasury was of the opinion that the Secretary of the Navy had mistaken the law or abused his discretion, and undertook to correct the Secretary's supposed mistake or abuse of discretion, held that the Comptroller "was not bound to assume this responsibility." The propriety of the action taken was a subject peculiarly within the jurisdiction and discretion of the head of the Navy Department, and not subject to revision or correction by the officers of any other department. (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92.)

In the Jones case, above-cited, the facts were that an officer of the Navy was detached on special duty in France, and a sum of money was transmitted to him by the Secretary of the Navy, to be disbursed for medical attendance required by said officer for a severe and dangerous wound accidentally received by him. The money was disbursed accordingly; however, the accounting officers of the Treasury charged the amount so disbursed by this officer against him on his pay account, and refused to recognize the authority of the Secretary of the Navy in the premises. The Supreme Court, for the reasons set forth above, sustained the Secretary's action and overruled that of the accounting officers.

The Jones case was decided by the Supreme Court in 1855. It has since been quoted and applied in numerous cases, including the following: U. S. v. Johnston, 124 U. S., 236, 252; Barnett v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 515; Waters v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 38; Dyer v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 340; Hayden v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 51; Billings v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 179; file 26260-347: C, Oct. 20, 1909, and 26543-66, Sept. 8, 1911; Op. Atty. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611. [In the case last cited it was held that a Navy regulation concerning responsibility of pay officers is binding on the accounting officers, and that a decision of the Comptroller to the contrary is not conclusive upon the Navy Department. See also file 26254-1451: 11, Apr. 1915.]

The designation of navy mail clerks is by act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 417), vested in the uncontrolled discretion of the Postmaster General and Secretary of the Navy, with like uncontrolled discretion to fix their compensation within the prescribed maximum. Accordingly, a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury that a certain Navy mail clerk designated pursuant to the statute had not been validly designated because such designation was not in accordance with certain general regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, was extra-official and not binding upon the Navy Department. Held further, that the designation in question was entirely valid. (Op. Atty. Gen. to Secy. Navy, July 19, 1918, file 26254-2476:5.)

The question whether or not the record of an enlisted man in the Marine Corps is "honest and faithful" within the meaning of section 1281, Revised Statutes, governing payment of retained pay, is one for the naval authorities to decide, and the accounting officers and the courts are not required to reconsider the alleged misconduct and add to the penalty prescribed by the military authorities. The President, acting through the Navy Department, not having declared a forfeiture of retained pay, in addition to discharge from the service, the record of the man in question cannot be reexamined in a collateral proceeding for the purpose of imposing such forfeiture. (Kingsley v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 219.) [In a decision rendered April 21, 1914 (20 Comp. Dec., 751), the Comptroller of the Treasury held that, while he has no jurisdiction to decide as to the character of an enlisted man's discharge, "from a naval standpoint," nevertheless, when a question of paying travel allowance to such man is presented, he may decide that a man discharged by the naval authorities on account of expiration of enlistment, was, "for the purposes of such payment" not so discharged; that "even though in terms a discharge by reason of expiration of enlistment, and properly so from a naval standpoint, it may for the purposes of this office be regarded otherwise." But see 21 Comp. Dec., 539, noted below, under "(B) Secretary of War"; and see 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 83, holding that when the Navy Department in discharging a man determines the character of his discharge, "the executive branch of the Government thereby becomes functus officio."

Secretary's discretion not reviewable.—It is not for the court, and it is not for the accounting officers, to say how much or how little shall be allowed to a naval attaché from the appropriation for "maintenance of students and attachés and information from abroad." There being no limit in the statute upon the amount of maintenance which may be allowed, that amount is necessarily within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Navy. The appropriation is in the nature of a contingent fund, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion, which is not subject to judicial review. (Dyer v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 340.)

An order of the Secretary of the Navy, appointing a retired officer of the Navy as meteorologist at a navy yard, to perform work ordinarily performed by officers of the Navy, is the order of the President, and the officer is entitled to the salary prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, from the appropriation for "National Defense," notwithstanding disallowance thereof by the accounting officers. The appropriation in question expressly provides that it is to be expended "at the discretion of the President." (Hayden v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 51.)

Secretary's approval of travel claims.—When the Secretary of the Navy has approved an amount claimed as actually expended for steward's fees by a naval officer traveling abroad under orders, it must be treated as conclusive under the provisions of the act August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), it being the practice to allow officers of the Government reimbursement for such expenditures, as a necessary expense of travel abroad. As to the amount of the claim, inasmuch as it has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy, it is clear that the accounting officers have no right to question the reasonableness of such amount, in view of the act above cited; by the terms of the statute, the reasonableness of expenses is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, and when determined by him, such determination must be taken as conclusive. [The law cited provided that officers traveling abroad under orders shall receive, in lieu of mileage, "only their actual and reasonable expenses, certified under their own signatures and approved by the Secretary of the Navy."] (3 Comp. Dec., 121.) In a later decision, the Comptroller of the Treasury, construing this same act, held that it was intended merely as a safeguard against the allowance of unjust and exorbitant claims, and to place a limit upon the jurisdiction of the accounting officers, and to preclude the allowance of anything not approved by the Secretary of the Navy; but that the accounting officers' jurisdiction remains unimpaired as to items and amounts approved by the Secretary; in other words, the accounting officers cannot allow any items not approved by the Secretary of the Navy; but they are not bound by his approval and may disallow items which he has approved. (14 Comp. Dec., 143.)

The Secretary of the Navy's approval or disapproval of a claim, while entitled to great weight, is not conclusive upon the accounting officers in cases arising under the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 662, 663), which provided that the Secretary of the Navy may direct that actual and necessary expenses only be allowed to officers performing travel repeatedly between two or more places. And the same thing applies to civilian employees performing travel under the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 452). (14 Comp. Dec., 143. But see 3 Comp. Dec., 121, noted above.)

The accounting officers are not bound by the approval by the Navy Department of traveling expense accounts of officers or employees of that department; nor are they bound by the disapproval by the Navy Department of such accounts, except in the case of officers of the Navy traveling abroad under orders. (14 Comp. Dec., 143.)

The determination of the classes of expenditure to be allowed as traveling expenses is a proper subject for regulation by the head of the department, and where such regulations have been made they must ordinarily be regarded as controlling. (14 Comp. Dec., 143; see also 9 Comp. Dec., 156.)

The approval by the Secretary of the Navy was held not conclusive upon the accounting officers in cases arising under the act of March 30, 1898 (published in note to sec. 290, R. S.), which provided that "the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and affidavit from each person making a claim" for losses incurred by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine, "such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy." The Comptroller of the Treasury held that the requirement that such schedules be approved by the Secretary of the Navy seems not only to be entirely consistent with the exercise by the auditor of his usual functions in the settlement of accounts, but to be a wise and salutary safeguard against the allowance of improper claims; that the reasonable construction of the act was that the schedule was required to be approved by the Secretary as a safeguard against the allowance of unjust and exorbitant claims arising from the fact that the accounting officers, without the advice and approval of the Navy Department, were not in position to judge so intelligently as to what articles were suitable and appropriate for an officer or enlisted man of the rank or rating and duty of the person by whom the claim was made; that the effect was to put a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the accounting officers and to preclude the allowance of anything not having the approval of the Secretary, but leaving their jurisdiction unimpaired as to items and amounts approved by him. While, therefore, the approved schedule and affidavit of an officer making claim under said act, were held to constitute a prima facie claim as contemplated by the act, it was further held that they were by no means conclusive upon the accounting officers, except to limit their jurisdiction to a consideration of the items and amounts so presented; that while the approved schedule and affidavit might be sufficient alone to justify the allowance of a claim, the auditor was not concluded by them if in his judgment additional proof was necessary and proper to a fair and just adjudication of the claim for which reimbursement was provided. (4 Comp. Dec., 587.)

Approval of medical claims.—The determination of the Secretary of the Navy that expenses of an officer of the Navy for medicines and medical attendance are incurred under circumstances entitling him to reimbursement (sec. 1586, R. S.), is conclusive. Although the Surgeon-General of the Navy declined to recommend this allowance, the Secretary of the Navy has approved same, and this action of the head of the department must be regarded as binding upon all. (2 Comp. Dec., 241, citing U. S. v. Eliason, 16 Pet., 291, 302.)

The approval of the administrative officer is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the items of the account; and in the absence of clear and unequivocal proof of mistake on the part of such officer, it should be conclusive. (U. S. v. Jones, 134 U. S., 483, 488.)

The date of appointment of an officer as specified in his commission, where such date is subsequent to the date of the vacancy he was appointed to fill, is conclusive upon the accounting officers, who have no authority to allow pay from a prior date. (9 Comp. Dec., 612, citing U. S. v. Vinton, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16624, and 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 603. See act of March 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892.)

The action of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in advancing an officer of the Navy on the retired list under the provisions of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), is not conclusive upon the accounting officers where it subsequently appears that the officer did not [in the opinion of the accounting officers] possess the qualifications necessary to entitle him to such advancement under the law. (14 Comp. Dec., 169.) [In this case, the question was whether the officer was retired for any of the causes mentioned in the act cited; the Comptroller first held, April 30, 1907, that he was not; subsequently, on September 20, 1907 (14 Comp. Dec., 162), the Comptroller reversed his previous decision, and held that the officer was retired for disability originating in line of duty, which was one of the causes mentioned in the act under consideration; thereafter it was held by the Attorney General in a similar case, that he could not agree with the decision of the Comptroller last cited, but concurred in the opinion of the Judge Advocate General that the officer was not retired for disability originating in line of duty (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221). Thereupon, the Comptroller of the Treasury reopened the case and followed the opinion of the Attorney General, reversing his own last previous decision. 15 Comp. Dec., 581; 97 S. and A. Memo., 1004. This final decision of the Comptroller was upheld by the Supreme Court in Morse v. U. S., 229 U. S., 208.]

Navy Department may decline to furnish information to accounting officers.—The Navy Department maintains that the promotion of officers of the Navy and the determination of all questions relating thereto, including the qualifications of the officer, the existence of the vacancy, and the application of section 1505, Revised Statutes, are matters exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, whose action thereupon is not subject to review by any other executive department of the Government or office thereof. The Navy Department accordingly would not furnish the Auditor for the Navy Department with certain information which he requested for the evident purpose of reviewing and possibly overruling the action taken by the department in the case presented. (File 26260-347; C, Oct. 20, 1909.)

In another case, the Navy Department declined to furnish the auditor with papers concerning a claim for payment of death gratuity under the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128); holding that the law cited reposes the responsibility for payment of said gratuity in the Paymaster General, under the Secretary of the Navy; that accordingly the decision of the Paymaster General as to the facts involved is necessarily conclusive; and inasmuch as the facts in the particular case showed that the beneficiary named by the deceased was not entitled to payment, the matter was regarded as closed by the Navy Department's decision to that effect, which was not subject to review by the Auditor for the Navy Department. It was also asserted in this case that the accounting officers have no jurisdiction to consider a claim for payment of death gratuity until the Paymaster General has acted upon and allowed same; and when a claim is allowed by the Paymaster General, this establishes claimant's right and he is entitled to demand payment without being required to establish his claim anew to the satisfaction of the accounting officers. (File 26543-66, Sept. 8, 1911; compare 22 Comp. Dec., 532; file 26543-148; see also 20 Comp. Dec., 93.)

The policy of the Navy Department has been to disapprove the submission to the Comptroller of the Treasury of specific questions involving administrative matters under its own jurisdiction, and the department has not been inclined to invite controversy by specifically requesting his decision upon questions which the law places under the cognizance of the Secretary of the Navy. (File 11112-476, Feb. 20, 1915.)

The Comptroller's decision upon a question of law involved in the settlement of accounts under his cognizance, is not binding upon the Navy Department in taking action upon matters under its cognizance, even though the identical question of law may be involved. There are many authorities to this effect. (File 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915, citing cases.)

Comptroller's decision as to validity of a Navy regulation held not binding on the Navy Department, but said regulation is binding on the accounting officers (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611, noted under secs. 161 and 285, R. S.)

A paragraph in the "Regulations Governing the Organization and Administration of the Naval Reserve Force, 1917," article 406, chapter 4, authorizing enrollment of aliens who are citizens of countries friendly to the United States and who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, held inconsistent with law and men enrolled in accordance therewith not entitled to pay and allowances. (Comp. Dec., Oct. 29, 1918, file 28550-470:3.) This decision modified and the regulation in question held to be valid as being specifically authorized by act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), overlooked when said regulation was held to be invalid. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 1, 1918, file 28550-470:5.)

Citizenship of enlisted men.—Where the Bureau of Navigation decided, after consideration of all the evidence in the case, that a Chinaman who was an enlisted man in the Navy, was a citizen of the United States, and changed his birthplace and citizenship on the department's records accordingly; and the Auditor for the Navy Department, upon a question of pay, decided, after consideration of the same evidence, that it was not sufficient to establish the fact of his birth in the United States; it was held by the Navy Department that the decision of the accounting officers is not in any sense binding upon the Navy Department in its determination of the citizenship or identity of an enlisted man, and that no new evidence having been obtained, the decision of the Bureau of Navigation would not be reopened. (File 26252-56, Feb. 1, 1910.) [Subsequently the Comptroller of the Treasury reversed the auditor's action upon consideration of the same evidence. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 12, 1910, file 26254-424.)]

Status of personnel question under Navy Department.—The Navy Department regards the status of an officer of the Navy, under his orders, as a question of fact for its determination, and not that of the accounting officers. (See 12 Comp. Dec., 563, 566; 9 Comp. Dec., 826; 29 Ct. Cls., 403; 16 S. and A. Memo., 145.) Accordingly, held that, upon the facts stated, an officer of the Navy was not detached from his vessel while in a naval hospital under treatment. This being so, he clearly comes within the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Court of Claims, which entitle him to sea pay when not detached from his vessel, and a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury in the specific case was not necessary. (File 26254-2, Apr. 29, 1908. See also 21 Comp. Dec., 539, noted below under "(B) Secretary of War.")

"If men are properly enlisted in the naval service, it is not material to the accounting officers in the settlement of their pay and allowances whether they are at all times lawfully engaged or not. That is a matter to be regulated by the Navy Department, and even though enlisted men be employed in service forbidden by law it is beyond the power of the accounting officers to withhold the pay and allowances which the law prescribes. The legality of such service can become material to the accounting officers only where the enlistments are made solely for such illegal purpose, and then only in passing upon the payments made under said enlistments." (6 Comp. Dec., 758.)

Comptroller can not relieve officers of duty to obey orders.—Officers of the Navy must at all times be governed by orders of the Navy Department, and the Comptroller of the Treasury has no jurisdiction to authorize a disreguard of such orders. The Navy Department having, by special order, limited the allowance to officers of travel, an officer performing travel governed by such order is guilty of impropriety in requesting the Comptroller of the Treasury to authorize him to exceed the allowance so fixed. His letter, which was addressed to the Comptroller through official channels, was accordingly placed on file in the Navy Department without reference to the Comptroller of the Treasury. (File 26254-58, June 27, 1908.)

The Navy Department fully understands that officers have a right at all times to make claim upon the auditor for any sums to which they may consider themselves legally entitled, and upon the auditor's disallowance to appeal therefrom to the Comptroller of the Treasury, the right of a pay officer in this respect being neither greater nor less than that of any other officer of the Navy. However, in cases where the officer has been guilty of direct disobedience of or negligent failure to comply with a lawful order of the Secretary of the Navy, it is obvious that the accounting officers can no more relieve him from responsibility for his conduct than they could in advance authorize a disobedience of such order. When an officer has been informed to this effect by the Navy Department, his action in thereafter taking the matter up with the accounting officers was not merely an impropriety on his part but was conduct indicative of a disposition to insubordination. (File 26251-3352-1, July 14, 1910.) [In this case the officer failed to comply with a general order requiring him to check the value of clothing outfit against an enlisted man on discharge. It was held by the Navy Department that under the law full discretion was conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy as to whether or not clothing outfit should be checked on discharge, and that the Comptroller of the Treasury had no jurisdiction to relieve a pay officer from responsibility for failing to check the value of clothing outfit when required so to do by the Secretary of the Navy.]

The accounting officers can not require a disbursing officer of the Navy to make a payment. Such power is possessed only by the officer's superior. (File 26543-66, Sept. 8, 1911; see also sec. 285, R. S.; Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 215; 10 Comp. Dec., 635.)

Questions pertaining to the correct pay and allowances of officers of the Navy are placed by law under the jurisdiction of the accounting officers of the Treasury, and do not in general come under the cognizance of the Navy Department, which can not with propriety express an opinion upon a question similar to one pending before the Comptroller. (File 26254-599, Jan. 4, 1911.)

If there is a balance due to officers of the Navy, the matter is one for adjustment between them and the accounting officers. The Navy Department can not be regarded as having such an interest in the adjustment of individual accounts as to warrant its appealing to the Comptroller of the Treasury in such cases, and feels that to do so in certain cases would set a bad precedent, following which numerous individual officers might thereafter endeavor to have the Navy Department prosecute their claims. [Letter, August 19, 1912, file 26254-1003, to the Auditor for the Navy Department, in reply to the latter's suggestion that the Secretary of the Navy appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury for revision of certain accounts in which errors in calculation were made, and the Comptroller had declined to make revision on his own motion at the suggestion of the auditor.]

The Navy Department can not be regarded as having such an interest in the adjustment of individual accounts as to warrant an appeal to the Comptroller of the Treasury; the matter is one for adjustment between such individuals and the accounting officers. (File 26254-431-1, May 4, 1910.)

(B) Secretary of War.

The decisions of the War Department should be regarded by the Treasury Department as establishing matters of fact concerning the military relations which exist between the Government and the officers; but upon the facts as thus determined by the War Department, all questions of law involving the financial relations existing between the Government and the officers, and the financial obligations of the Government to the officers must be determined and decided by the accounting officers of the Treasury. (Parkhurst v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cls., 403.)

The records of the War Department (apart from opinions and conclusions of the officer having the custody thereof) are the best evidence of an officer's status in the service; but if the record does not disclose the facts essential to the accounting officers administering the law they may accept from other sources the necessary competent evidence. (Northrup v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 50; see also Brewington v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 399; and act Apr. 19, 1910, 36 Stat. 324, making "the decision of the War Department" conclusive in certain cases.)

It is the province of the War Department to decide military questions which relate to the cause or manner of severance from the service of officers and enlisted men of the Army; and where that department has determined as a fact that an officer's services ended by the acceptance of his resignation the record of that fact will be accepted as correct by the Comptroller of the Treasury in the adjustment of the claim for pay and allowances in case of the officer. (21 Comp. Dec., 539.)

"It is peculiarly the province of the War Department to make deductions of fact from the records of military service of which that department is the natural and legal custodian, and to decide military questions which relate not only to the entrance into service but also the cause or manner of severance from service of officers and enlisted men." (21 Comp. Dec., 539, 547.)

Reason or wisdom of orders to officers cannot be reviewed by accounting officers.—Where the accounting officers held that the War Department had no authority to send a surgeon to the International Medical Congress at London at the expense of the Government, this decision was reversed by the Court of Claims, which held that the President himself, or through the War Department, may direct the movements of all officers of the Army, and to whatever place and on whatever business connected with the military service he may order them to proceed, they are bound to obey, at least when such order is not forbidden by law. And in such case the officer is entitled to mileage. It is not for the accounting officers to inquire into the reasons nor to take exceptions to the expediency and wisdom of the orders of the President or of a department when issued within the scope of their authority. Section 191, Revised Statutes [act July 31, 1894, section 8 (28 Stat., 208)], relates only to matters of accounting in the Treasury Department and of ascertaining the balance in each particular account which shall be drawn for the Treasurer. Before the enactment of the provisions of that section, it had been the practice of the President and the heads of departments to interfere and give directions to the accounting officers in the matter of settling accounts, and to change or attempt to change the balances stated by them. The accounting officers resisted the practice, and the controversy, in different forms, was several times referred to the Attorney General, who advised that the President was without such authority, but that the heads of departments, especially the Secretary of the Treasury, did have the power from the nature and general duties of their offices. (Citing 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 624, 678, 705; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 303, 652; 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 87, 630.) The act was passed apparently to settle conclusively that long standing controversy between executive officers, and to prevent the interferences of others in the settlement of accounts by the accounting officers. (Citing McKee's Case, 12 Ct. Cls., 554.) It makes conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government only the "balances" stated by the latter officers, and their "decision thereon," for the purpose of determining for what amounts, if any, warrants may be drawn on the Treasury. It does not make such decisions conclusive upon the head of a department in the exercise of his discretion as to orders to be issued to his subordinates in such connections as the one now under consideration. (Billings v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 179; file 26254-1451:11, April 12, 1915.)

The accounting officers are not authorized to inquire into the wisdom, expediency, or necessity of assigning an officer to a command above that pertaining to his grade; but it is within their authority to inquire whether the order of assignment to higher command was carried into effect according to law, and to what extent the officer performed the service to which he was assigned. (Glenn v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 254.)

Legal acts of Secretary are conclusive.—Whatever may be the legal prerequisites of brevet commanders in the Army, their existence is to be presumed from the order or decision of the Secretary of War assigning or determining those commands. That being a legal presumption is conclusive, and the fact must be regarded by the Auditor and Comptroller as established by and according to the Secretary's decision and orders. Acts done by the Secretary of War within the peculiar and legitimate sphere of his official duty are to be taken and understood as rightly done, and to preclude all collateral inquiry by accounting officers. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 386, quoted approvingly in Billings v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 179.)

Army Regulations binding on accounting officers.—Army Regulations issued pursuant to the explicit provisions of a statute, and in execution thereof, when sanctioned by the President, have the force of law, and are conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury; accordingly, when an officer of the Marine Corps presents with his account an authentic document or certificate of his having commanded a post or arsenal, for which an order has been issued from the War Department in conformity with the provisions of the Army Regulations, allowing double rations, his right to them is established, nor can they be withheld without doing him a wrong for which the law gives him a remedy. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 566.) For other decisions concerning executive regulations, see note to section 161, Revised Statutes.

Accounting officers refused to allow compensation for expert employed by authority of Secretary of War at a trial by court-martial. It was held by the Court of Claims, that the employment of experts before a court-martial is within the legal and proper discretion of the Secretary of War; and his order to employ and pay them is official authority to an officer who, in the ordinary discharge of his duty, makes such payments, and protects him from the summary remedy of having his pay stopped. (In re Maj. William Smith, 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

The accounting officers have no jurisdiction to review a decision of the Secretary of War that a soldier did not serve honestly and faithfully. Except in cases of deserters, the act (June 16, 1890, 26 Stat., 157), makes the Secretary of War the judge as to what misconduct shall constitute a failure to render honest and faithful service within the meaning of the laws relating to retained pay therein specified. The Secretary of War having decided that a soldier did not serve honestly and faithfully, he is not entitled to the retained pay therein specified. (3 Comp. Dec., 557.)

The accounting officers have no authority to review the action of the War Department refusing to discharge a soldier for disability and requiring him to purchase his discharge as a condition precedent to his release from the service, prior to the date on which he was entitled to his discharge. (2 Comp. Dec., 546.)

In the absence of fraud or plain error, a finding by the military authorities as to the cause of disease and the period of absence from duty on account thereof, is conclusive upon the accounting officers with reference to stoppage of pay in the accounts of an officer or enlisted man so absent. (20 Comp. Dec., 69.)

The powers of the Secretary of War, and the authority which had been attempted to be exercised by subordinate officers of other departments of reviewing and overruling the decisions of the Secretary of War upon military questions and matters arising in the administration of the War Department, were considered at some length in War Department Circular of November 2, 1901; and the decision of the Secretary of War (Mr. Root) was stated therein as follows: "The department will not hereafter furnish copies of records or statements from them to enable officers or employees of other executive departments to review decisions made by the War Department upon purely military questions, or to make independent decisions with regard to such questions." [This decision of the War Department was quoted by the Navy Department, October 20, 1909 (file 26260-347(C)), and September 8, 1911 (file 26543-66), in cases in which the Auditor for the Navy Department requested information for the evident purpose of reviewing and possibly overruling decisions of the Navy Department upon questions of a purely military nature.]

The War Department does not find it necessary or desirable to decide for the information of the Comptroller whether a former officer of the Army is regarded as having left his command without proper authority, when the records disclose that the War Department had previously determined that the officer's service terminated by acceptance of resignation, and that this decision was not followed by the auditor. (21 Comp. Dec., 540.)

The promotion of a civilian employee by the Secretary of War is not ordinarily open to question, but where it is patent upon its face that the increase of pay was to be temporary and merely for the purpose of accomplishing indirectly something that could not be accomplished directly, namely, to antedate an increase of pay, the accounting officers are warranted in refusing to recognize such promotion as having any legal effect. (23 Comp. Dec., 6.)

(C) Miscellaneous.

Approval of expense accounts.—Where the execution of a statute is committed to the head of a Department, subject to the President's approval of rules and regulations prescribed pursuant thereto, with no other restriction than that certain expenses be proper and necessary and approved by the Secretary, held that the approval of the Secretary of an account of expenses pursuant to said act is conclusive evidence that they were proper and necessary, unless it appears that their allowance was procured by fraud, or that they were incurred in violation of an act of Congress or of public policy; and that, if the law be held to require that the accounts be audited and passed by the accounting officers, then in auditing those accounts they would have been bound to regard the action of the Secretary in allowing certain expenses, as final. (U. S. v. Johnston, 124 U. S., 236, 252.)

It is impossible to suppose that Congress intended that every account, after being approved by the Secretary, should be subject to review by some subordinate officer of the Treasury, or even by the courts, and to be disallowed merely because in the judgment of that officer or of the courts, such expenses should not have been incurred. (U. S. v. Johnston, 124 U. S., 249, 250.)

Under a law providing that accounts of chief supervisors of elections were to be approved by the circuit or district court, such approval determines the fact that the services were necessary and proper, and of a character sufficient to entitle the officer to the fee prescribed by law for such services; but such approval of the court does not establish the accuracy of the account, nor take it, as an account, out of the supervision of the accounting officers whose duty still remains to examine it, revise it, verify its calculations, scrutinize its vouchers, and ascertain its true amount; nor will the approval of the court render the Government liable, either before the accounting officers or in the Court of Claims, for a service or expenditure not authorized by law. (Dennison v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 322.) But the approval of the court in such a case is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the items of the account; and in the absence of clear and unequivocal proof of mistake on the part of the court, it should be conclusive. (U. S. v. Jones, 134 U. S., 483, 488.)

Discretion of Secretary not reviewable.—Where Congress intrusts to a public officer the expenditure of a sum of money for a designated purpose, without restriction or limitation as to details, the exercise of judgment and discretion by such officer cannot be reviewed by the accounting officers or the courts, for the mere purpose of determining whether or not the authority was exercised in the most judicious manner. If the officer acts in good faith, keeps within the general scope and authority of the law, and does not undertake to apply the money to other and wholly different purposes from those designated in the act of appropriation, his action cannot be questioned in the final settlement of the accounts, especially as against an innocent employee who, though bound by the law, has no discretion to exercise over the propriety of the orders of his employers. (Plummer v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 519.)

It is the theory, and a wise one, upon which the final adjustment and settlement of accounts in the Treasury Department is founded, that the officers who pass upon them shall be wholly distinct from those who expend the money or incur the liabilities. For the manner in which these latter officers perform the trust imposed upon them, they alone are responsible; the Comptroller is only charged with the duty of seeing that they keep within the law. (Waters v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 38, citing Longwill's Case, 17 Ct. Cls., 288; Ridgway's Case, 18 Ct. Cls., 715; etc.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury has no power to review, revise, or alter items expressly allowed by statute, nor items of expenditure or allowances made upon the judgment and discretion of other officers charged with the duty of expending the money or of making the allowances. His duty extends no further than to see that the officers charged with that duty have authorized the expenditures or have made the allowances. (U. S. v. Waters, 133 U. S., 215; followed 17 Comp. Dec., 263.)

[This statement of the power of the Comptroller applies as well to the Auditors, who also have no power to disallow an item when the question involved in the expenditure is one committed to the judgment and discretion of the head of the Department. 2 Comp. Dec., 336.]

The duty of the accounting officers in respect to pensions is to audit the accounts relating to them, and to certify the balances. But this does not require that they shall take from the Commissioner of Pensions the jurisdiction with which the law clothes him to construe and administer the pension laws, or interfere with his instructions to pension agents. On the contrary, they are bound to conform to his decisions. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 339, 340; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.)

The propriety of keeping every branch of the executive government within its legal sphere is clear. The confusion which would unavoidably arise, if one branch was permitted to usurp the functions of another, would be disastrous to the proper working of the whole. When, therefore, a "difference of opinion" arises between several executive departments as to the construction of the law, the primary question is as to which is vested with the determination and responsibility of the question. That one only can have jurisdiction over the subject-matter is plain. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 178, 180.)

Whenever a statute gives a discretionary power to any person, to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, it is a sound rule of construction that the statute constitutes him the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts. In such a case, the courts must ordinarily assume that discretion conferred upon the officer was properly exercised. (Mullan v. U. S., 140 U. S., 245; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19, 31.)

It is fully recognized by the accounting officers that where a particular power or discretion has been conferred upon the head of a department or other officer, either by express law or by necessary implication, his acts within the scope of that power, or in the exercise of that discretion, if not prohibited by law, can not be set aside or called in question, either by the accounting officers or by the courts. (5 Comp. Dec., 410, 416; 14 Comp. Dec., 143.)

Where the law (sec. 4577, R. S.) makes it the duty of consular officers to provide subsistence and transportation for destitute seamen, the question whether an American seaman is or is not destitute within the meaning of the law is one to be determined by the consular officer to whom he applies for relief, and the latter's decision will, in the absence of fraud, be conclusive; and it is not within the power of the accounting officers to overrule his determination of that fact. (3 Comp. Dec., 40; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 631.)

Where an act of Congress vests in the Secretary of the Interior authority to determine the method of disbursing money due to Indians, either by paying them in cash or "by expending the same for their benefit, in such manner as he may deem for their best interests," and the Secretary has made such determination, all other officers are bound by this exercise of power by him. (2 Comp. Dec., 642.)

When the Secretary of the Interior in the exercise of a reasonable discretion determines as to the validity of title to rights and property to be acquired by him under the provisions of law, his decision is conclusive upon the accounting officers. (12 Comp. Dec., 691.)

When the head of a Department approves a voucher for the traveling expenses of an employee at sea, containing items for wine or carbonated waters used for the specific purpose of controlling seasickness, and not merely as a beverage, with knowledge that the liquids are so used, the amount thereof must be allowed. It is for the head of the Department to determine within his discretion whether such items are a necessary expense of travel under the circumstances. (1 Comp. Dec., 404.)

When an item is properly payable from an appropriation for contingent expenses, and is not prohibited by any law or regulation, the discretion of the officer charged with the duty of expending said fund is not subject to review by the accounting officers upon any question as to the necessity or advisability of his expenditures. The responsibility for incurring an expense, as to the necessity or expediency of which opinions may differ, must be assumed by the officer under whose control the appropriation is put. [The question in this case related to purchasing portraits of his predecessors for the office of a public officer. The Comptroller said: "I know of no provision of law prohibiting the purchase of portraits or pictures for your office. The responsibility for the payment of this bill, as an incidental expense of your office, rests with you."] (2 Comp. Dec., 80.)

In the absence of any law or regulation fixing the amount which may be allowed for the expenses of a secret agent, the matter is entirely within the discretion of the Postmaster General in the management of the postal service; and his decision as to the amount of expenses, when that discretion is properly exercised, is conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury. (2 Comp. Dec., 336, citing U. S. v. Waters, 133 U. S., 208.)

Where a statute provides that "heads of Departments shall cause this rule to be enforced," it is made their duty, and not that of the accounting officers, to determine questions of fact arising thereunder. (20 Comp. Dec., 10.)

It has frequently been urged upon the accounting officers that it is their duty to recognize the action of the heads of Departments in approving claims as conclusive. (14 Comp. Dec., 143.) The general provision of law governing the manner of settling claims against the Government is found in section 236, Revised Statutes. Such being the general law upon the subject of the settlement of claims against the United States, special acts, according to established rules of interpretation, must, if possible, be construed in harmony therewith. It is not to be supposed that Congress intended to repeal or modify the general law by implication. Such an intention should clearly appear by apt words to that end, or by necessary intentment. When it is designed to vest in some officer the power of determining certain questions of fact, it is usual to employ clear and unmistakable words to convey that intention. Where the approval of an expenditure is intended to be binding upon the accounting officers it is usual to so state. Where no such intention is expressed, the mere approval by an administrative officer carries with it no such conclusive force. When a statute designates an officer to determine some question of fact, and expressly or by necessary implication shows that such determination is to be conclusive, the validity of such action, in the absence of fraud, can not generally be questioned by officers of another department of the Government; and this is also true where the matter is one involving the exercise of discretion vested in an administrative officer. But in the determination of facts arising in the ordinary course of business in the several executive departments, the decisions of the administrative official, though of great weight, are not regarded by the accounting officers as conclusive. The opportunity for administrative officials to pass intelligently upon questions of fact arising in their departments is much greater than is that of the accounting officers, and it has accordingly been the purpose of legislation upon the subject of accounts to throw upon the administrative officers the burden of making such decisions. But this is far from admitting that the accounting officers are relieved of the responsibility of inquiring for themselves into the facts of any particular case. Claims bearing the approval of administrative officers and heads of departments are frequently disallowed. The approval of the head of the department does not control the action of the accounting officers, except to cause a disallowance of an expenditure not so approved, if such approval is required by law. (4 Comp. Dec., 587.)

Items of expense bearing the approval of heads of departments are disallowed every day by the accounting officers. The latter are required to examine accounts to see if the expenditures are allowed by law. If of such a character that the approval of the head of department is essential, items not approved are promptly disallowed. Only in rare instances, and when so provided by law, is the approval of the head of a department final and conclusive upon the accounting officers. Congress has provided that the approval of vouchers for its contingent expenses shall be final and conclusive, and that the certificate of the Speaker of the House of Representatives as to salary and mileage shall be final. When it is intended that the accounting officers shall not examine and audit accounts upon their merits—that is, determine questions of law and of fact arising therein—plain language can be and is employed by Congress. It is not to be understood that the Comptroller will refuse to give to the approval of the head of a department or of an independent commission that effect which is contemplated by law. Ordinarily that approval is conclusive as to the propriety of expending an appropriation for the purpose for which it is applicable. Nor does the Comptroller in an ordinary case question the necessity for travel made by an employee or the reasonableness of expenses incurred for subsistence, etc. But when the proper executive officer fixes a limit to such expenses, no employee's voucher for a greater amount will be passed, unless the regulation is waived by the one who made it. (4 Comp. Dec., 270, 271.)

Nothing short of a clear intent, unequivocally expressed in a statute, will warrant a court in holding that Congress has intended to create an extraordinary exception to the accounting system of the United States, where no need of such exception exists and where none is in terms declared. (Dennison v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 321.)

Evidence required.—The accounting officers are charged with the duty of settling the public accounts. The character and quantity of evidence needed to establish a fact must be determined by them; otherwise, the conclusion reached, which is "final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the government," will be in effect that of the officer who decides what evidence shall go to them. (20 Comp. Dec., 93.)

It is understood so generally as hardly to need a statement now, that the accounting officers do audit the public accounts upon the evidence furnished largely by the certificates of fact made by responsible government officers. But with very few exceptions, made by law, the certificate or approval of an officer is not intended to be conclusive upon the accounting officers. The latter must render a decision upon the legality of a claim for payment or for credit in an account, upon the facts. Upon them is cast the responsibility for securing the facts. Upon other officers is the duty of furnishing upon request such evidence, in addition to certificates, as may be called for by the accounting officers. This right to call for evidence is inseparable from the duty to audit and to decide questions of law and of fact. It must be exercised reasonably, as must any public duty, but the accounting officer, and not an administrative officer incurring liabilities or expending the public funds, must determine the extent to which it is necessary to go in any particular case in collecting the evidence to establish what he believes to be an essential fact as a basis for decision. (20 Comp. Dec., 93.)

In the expenditure of all public moneys it is the invariable rule to require that accounts shall be furnished itemized as far as practicable, in order that the accounting officers may properly audit them. The law may permit the exercise of discretion in the use of public funds, without dispensing with the usual requirement of an itemized account showing fully for what purposes the money has been expended. (4 Comp. Dec., 159; 4 Comp. Dec., 271.)

VI. SET-OFF.

Duty of accounting officers.—Where a person is both debtor and creditor of the United States in any form, the officers of the Treasury Department in settling the accounts not only have the power but are required, in the proper discharge of their duties, to set off the one indebtedness against the other, and to allow and certify for payment only the balance found due on one side or the other. Provisions on this subject are contained in section 1766, Revised Statutes, and act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 481); but the right to set off exists in such cases independently of those special statutory enactments, and is founded upon what is now section 236, Revised Statutes. (Taggart v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 327.)

It may be regarded as settled law, in accordance with the uniform practice, that the accounting officers have jurisdiction, in proper cases, in the course of settling accounts in the Treasury Department, to set off one debt against another, when a claimant is both debtor and creditor. (McKnight v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 306; affirmed 98 U. S., 179. See also The Schooner Henry, 35 Ct. Cls., 393; Bonnafon's case, 14 Ct. Cls., 489; Howe's case, 24 Ct. Cls., 170; Labadie v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 476.)

It is but the exercise of the common right, which belongs to any creditor, to apply the unappropriated moneys of his debtor, in his hands, in extinguishment of the debts due to him. (Gratiot v. U. S., 15 Pet., 336.)

I understand it to be the duty of the officers of the Government to enforce this right, as is constantly done by the courts. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 23, 1908, 86 S. and A. Memo., 638.) [In this case the Comptroller held that the indebtedness of naval court-martial prisoners should be set off against pay due such prisoners. In a previous decision the Comptroller based this ruling upon section 1766, Revised Statutes, which provides in part that "no money shall be paid to any person for his compensation who is in arrears to the United States." Subsequently that section was construed by the Attorney General as applicable only to persons who were in a relation of trust to the Government, as contractors or disbursers of the public funds, and as such would have in their hands sums or balances of the public funds for which they were bound to render accounts and to turn the balance of moneys into the Treasury; and that it did not apply to ordinary debtors of the Government. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 77.) This opinion of the Attorney General was brought to the Comptroller's attention by the Secretary of the Navy, in connection with the indebtedness of court-martial prisoners. The Comptroller, however, in the decision above cited, adhered to his former conclusion, holding that the result was the same irrespective of whether or not the matter was covered by section 1766, Revised Statutes.]

Extent of right.—The duty of the accounting officers in matters of set-off has been frequently recognized by the courts. But it does not extend beyond the interest of the United States in matters involved in the settlements. In the absence of statutory authority, neither the accounting officers of the Treasury nor any other public officer can make the United States agents or trustees for the collection of private debts between citizens, nor make contracts in relation to the taking of security for the payment of debts due to the Government so as to bind the United States for any breach of the contract by neglect or otherwise. (Taggart v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 327.) [In this case it was held that where the debtor assigned to the Government as collateral security for his debt, a judgment against a third person to whom the Government was indebted in a larger amount, the accounting officers were not bound to collect the whole amount of the judgment and pay the balance to the claimant; but performed their full duty in setting off against the Government's indebtedness to the third person so much of said judgment as was necessary to discharge the indebtedness of the claimant to the United States.]

Where a judgment creditor assents to the application of the amount of his judgment, or a part thereof, to the payment of a debt due from him to the United States, the action of the Auditor in settling his accounts accordingly will not be disturbed upon a subsequent objection by him to such action. (7 Comp. Dec., 585; act Mar. 3, 1875, 18 Stat., 481.)

Allowances made by mistake of law.—The Government has authority to withhold money due an officer of the Navy to whom an erroneous payment has been made, notwithstanding that the payment was found to be erroneous only upon a construction of law made after the settlement of an account in which payment was allowed. (8 Comp. Dec., 24, citing Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 190, 211; but see Hedrick's Case, 16 Ct. Cls., 103. For other cases, see below "VIII. REOPENING OF ACCOUNTS.")

Gratuities.—Extra pay in the nature of a gratuity, due at the time of his death to an officer of the temporary force of the Navy for the war with Spain, may be properly set off against a debt arising from an overpayment of pay to such officer, but not against a debt arising otherwise. [In this case the officer at the time of his death was entitled to the extra pay, but had not received it; however, any pay which he had received in excess of the amount to which he was entitled, was regarded as to that extent a prepayment of the extra pay.] (6 Comp. Dec., 353; explained, 8 Comp. Dec., 310; see also Semple v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 422.)

However, where extra pay in the nature of a gratuity was granted by statute to officers of the Navy who served during the war with Mexico, and the statute specified the beneficiaries to whom the gratuity should be paid in event of the death of the officer before receiving same, held that indebtedness of an officer to the United States, even because of overpayments of pay, could not be set off against the gratuity due his next of kin, the officer in this case having died before the statute was passed and therefore not having acquired any right to the extra pay at the time of his death. Under such circumstances the extra pay under the statute was in the nature of a direct grant to the officer's heirs. (8 Comp. Dec., 308.)

Where an appropriation was made to be paid to the administrator of a decedent's estate, said decedent having been an original sufferer from the French spoliations, the Secretary of the Treasury was not authorized to withhold the amount of decedent's indebtedness to the United States, the appropriation having been made for the benefit of the next of kin of the original sufferer. (5 Comp. Dec., 866.)

Indebtedness under a previous enlistment.—Where an enlisted man is discharged from the Navy in debt to the United States, and is subsequently reenlisted, the amount of his indebtedness on discharge from the previous enlistment may legally be set-off against pay coming due him under his current enlistment. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 7, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3037.)

However, where a man is discharged from the Navy upon expiration of enlistment without having been fully checked the amount of a summary court-martial sentence, because of sufficient pay not having accrued to satisfy the forfeiture, the amount of such sentence which remained unchecked at date of discharge, can not be set off against pay coming due the man under a subsequent enlistment in the Navy. His discharge from the previous enlistment operated as a remission of the unexecuted portion of the forfeiture, and the man was not, therefore, indebted to the United States on that account. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 6, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3035; file 7657-241, June 26, 1914.)

Where a man is paid all money coming due him under his current enlistment, without setting off his indebtedness to the United States under a former enlistment, the pay officer is not liable to checkage if it appear that he had no knowledge of the man's indebtedness accruing under a former enlistment; and there were not sufficient facts to put him on his inquiry. Presumption of indebtedness in such case does not arise from knowledge of former service, and it is not the duty of a pay officer in the Navy to investigate upon reenlistment the account of a man under a previous enlistment. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 7, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3037.)

Set-off of unadjudicated claim by the Government.—The salary of a public officer fixed by statute and indisputably due him, can not be withheld because of alleged indebtedness by him to the Government, denied by the officer, and never adjudicated against him by any court. The officer in such case can require payment of his lawful salary by mandamus proceedings, the question of his indebtedness being a matter for judicial determination upon suit against him by the Government. (Smith v. Jackson, 241 Fed. Rep., 747; affirmed 246 U. S., 388.)

Set-off against Government.—An officer of the Government who has in his hands money of the United States is entitled to retain it by way of set-off where the United States are indebted to such officer for fees of office; and on a motion made on the part of the United States to commit the officer for failure to pay over the money in his hands, he will be permitted to show that the United States are indebted to him, and if this be shown it is a sufficient cause why he should not be attached. (U. S. v. Mann, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15716, per Marshall, Circuit Justice. See also U. S. v. Ripley, 7 Pet., 24; compare U. S. v. Giles, 9 Cranch, 236.)

VII. EFFECT OF ACCOUNTING OFFICERS' ACTION.

Conclusive upon Executive Departments.—For a long series of years, extending from the first organization of the Treasury Department to 1868, there was a controversy as to how far, if at all, the balances and action of a Comptroller were subject to revision and change by the heads of departments or the President. Upon the advice of several Attorneys General, the question was practically settled against the right of the President, and in favor of the Secretary of the Treasury. But the Comptrollers yielded with reluctance, and in 1868 an act was passed which was afterwards incorporated into the Revised Statutes as section 191, which provided that the balances certified by the Comptrollers "shall be conclusive upon the Executive branch of the Government and be subject to revision only by Congress or the proper courts." (McKnight v. United States, 13 Ct. Cls., 307, affirmed 98 U. S., 179; McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 553, reversed 97 U. S., 233.) The object of this law (sec. 191, R. S.) appears to have been to settle a long-standing controversy and render the Comptrollers independent in their action of the heads of departments in certifying balances of accounts, and not to give to the decisions of those officers the character of awards absolutely binding upon the United States. It will be observed that the independence of the Comptrollers provided for by that act only extends to the certified balances which cannot be changed or modified by other executive officers; but in all other matters of accounting, the superiority of the power of the Secretary of the Treasury is not modified but is left as it was before. [Section 191, Revised Statutes, was repealed and superseded by the act of July 31, 1894, section 8 (28 Stat., 208), which also provided that "the Secretary of the Treasury may, when in his judgment the interests of the Government require it, suspend payment and direct the reexamination of any account."] (McKnight v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 307, affirmed 98 U. S., 179.)

Before the enactment of the provisions of that section (191, R. S.), it had been the practice of the President and heads of departments to interfere and give directions to the accounting officers in the matter of settling accounts, and to change or attempt to change the balances stated by them. The accounting officers resisted the practice, and the controversy in different forms was several times referred to the Attorney General, who advised that the President was without such authority, but that the heads of departments, especially the Secretary of the Treasury did have the power, from the nature and general duties of their offices. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 624, 678, 705; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 303, 652; 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 87, 630.) The act was passed apparently to settle conclusively the long-standing controversy between executive officers, and to prevent the interferences of others in the settlement of accounts by the accounting officers. (McKee's case, 12 Ct. Cls., 554, reversed 97 U. S., 233.) It makes conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government only the "balances" stated by the latter officers and their "decision thereon," for the purpose of determining for what amounts, if any, warrants may be drawn on the Treasurer. It does not make such decisions conclusive upon the head of a department in the exercise of his discretion as to orders to be issued to his subordinates. (Billings v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 179; see file 26254-1451:11; and see above, V (A)).

The law devolves upon the accounting officers of the Treasury the duties of examining, settling and adjusting all accounts, claims and demands in which the United States are concerned, either as debtors or as creditors, and to certify balances arising thereon, and their exercise of such duties, including the weighing of evidence, the construction of statutes, and the application of general principles of law in connection therewith, is exclusive unless otherwise provided by special statute. (14 Comp. Dec., 143.) [But see note to section 356, Revised Statutes, "Jurisdiction, Accounting Officers and Attorney-General."]

Where the action of the Comptroller of the Treasury is final and conclusive upon the head of an executive department, the latter's action in directing that the settled accounts be reexamined by a subordinate is of no validity. (Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 504.)

The act of July 31, 1894, section 8, provides that balances certified by the auditors shall be "final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government," except that a revision thereof by the Comptroller of the Treasury may be obtained within a year, "whose decision upon such revision shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government;" and "that the Secretary of the Treasury may, when in his judgment the interests of the Government require it, suspend payment and direct the reexamination of any account" (28 Stat., 207); the same section also authorizes the Comptroller of the Treasury to render a decision in advance of payments, "which decision, when rendered, shall govern the auditor and the Comptroller of the Treasury in passing upon the account containing said disbursement." (28 Stat., 208.)

Not conclusive upon Congress or Courts.—The action of the accounting officers of an executive department was never considered as a conclusive determination when the question was brought before a court of justice. The law intended to make the decisions of the accounting officers final and conclusive so far as the executive department was concerned, but not to affect the powers of the legislature or of the judiciary. The action of the accounting officers is not conclusive in a suit between the United States and the individual. (U. S. v. Harmon, 147 U. S., 274, 275.)

Whatever the conclusiveness of executive acts so far as executive departments are concerned, as a rule of administration, it has long been settled that the action of executive officers in matters of account and payment cannot be regarded as a conclusive determination when brought in question in a court of justice. (Wisconsin Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 205, citing U. S. v. Harmon, 43 Fed. Rep., 560, 147 U. S. 268; Hunter v. U. S., 5 Pet., 173; U. S. v. Jones, 8 Pet., 387; U. S. v. Bank of Metropolis, 15 Pet., 377.)

Accounts and balances stated and certified by the accounting officers are neither conclusive nor prima facie evidence of the indebtedness of the Government, in a judicial proceeding, nor can an action be brought upon them. (McKnight's case, 13 Ct. Cls., 292; affirmed 98 U. S., 179.)

A settlement of an account is not consummated and payment authorized until a warrant has been prepared and issued to the payee or his attorney; the different processes of accounting are not consummated beyond recall until the claimants receive the negotiable drafts of the Treasurer; such drafts are understood to constitute new contracts on the part of the Government, in which the previous claim, upon which they issue, are merged. The certificates and orders made previous to the issuing of the drafts are departmental proceedings. Parties gain no new rights thereby into which their former rights of action are merged, and upon which actions can and must be brought as upon an award. Accordingly, held that a certificate of the Comptroller of the Treasury, certifying the amount of a balance due to a Government contractor, and a warrant addressed to the Treasurer, duly countersigned and registered for payment of the same, did not constitute conclusive evidence in a suit in the Court of Claims to recover an unpaid balance of the original amount so certified to be due by the Comptroller, but which was withheld upon order of the Secretary of the Treasury as a set-off on account of a debt due the United States. Further, held that the decision of the accounting officers in favor of the claimant is not even prima facie evidence of indebtedness when suit is brought in the Court of Claims. The functions of that court are to hear and determine original claims and demands against the United States, founded on contract, statute, or Departmental regulation, and not upon the reports and action of accounting officers made for purposes altogether different from that of submission to any court. Claimants are required to establish their rights in the Court of Claims by original and legal evidence, and are not to rely upon reports and certificates of officers who pass upon claims without the formality of such evidence and proofs as are required in courts of justice; certificates made upon ex parte affidavits, often of claimants and interested parties; documents not proven under oath, and reports of other officers not sworn to, and other evidence satisfactory to them, and which under all the circumstances may be trustworthy to a greater or lesser extent, as is the unsworn and hearsay evidence on which most of the business of daily life outside of the courts is conducted, but which may be wholly incompetent in the Court of Claims. The statement of accounts upon such evidence, by accounting officers who have no other knowledge of the facts, would be an unsatisfactory foundation on which to rest a prima facie case against the United States when parties come into court to set up and enforce their legal rights. (McKnight v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 292; affirmed 98 U. S., 179.)

[However, there are certain classes of claims, where the claimant's rights and the liability of the United States are not fixed until the discretion of some designated officer has been exercised thereon, and an allowance made by him; in all these cases, the officer charged by statute with the duty of allowing or disallowing the claim in his discretion, or according to his judgment, must first act before the claimant's right is fixed. Then when claimant has obtained a decision of such officer in his favor his demand, of which that decision is a prima facie if not conclusive determination, if the officer acts within the scope of his authority and in accordance with the provisions of law, may be the foundation of an action in the Court of Claims or may pass the accounting officers and be paid by drafts upon warrant duly issued, as in other cases. (McKnight v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cls., 308, 309 affirmed 98 U. S., 179; file 26543-66, Sept. 8, 1911.)

The idea that the Government is finally concluded by the result at which the accounting officers of the Government may arrive, would be regarded as a novelty within and without the several departments. (Chorpenning v. U. S., 94 U. S., 397.)

In the case of an unliquidated claim against the United States, where such claim is settled by the accounting officers, and the claimant accepts payment under such settlement without objection, this is a complete discharge of his demand against the Government, and he can not thereafter recover a further sum by suit in the Court of Claims. [In this case, there was a contract by which the Government was bound to pay in accordance with the terms agreed upon, but the entire price to be paid was not fixed, a part being contingent and being made to depend upon a variety of circumstances.] (Baird v. U. S., 96 U. S., 430.)

In case of a liquidated debt or demand, part payment of the amount due cannot discharge the liability of the Government for the balance, any more than in similar transactions between individuals. (Baird v. U. S., 96 U. S., 430.)

For other cases, see "IV. Jurisdiction, Accounting Officers, and Federal Courts."

VIII. REOPENING OF ACCOUNTS.

- (A) In general.
- (B) Mistake of fact.
- (C) Mistake of law.
- (D) Subsequent administration.
- (E) Same administration.

See note to section 417, Revised Statutes, "Power of Secretary to review acts of predecessor."

The Secretary of the Treasury may, when in his judgment the interests of the Government require it, suspend payment and direct the reexamination of any account. (Act July 31, 1894, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 207.)

Any person whose accounts may have been settled, the head of the executive department, or of the board, commission, or establishment not under the jurisdiction of an executive department, to which the account pertains, or the Comptroller of the Treasury, may, within a year, obtain a revision of an account by the Comptroller of the Treasury, whose decision upon such revision shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. (Act July 31, 1894, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 207.)

(A) In general.

After the expiration of a year from the date of an auditor's settlement of an account, which has not been revised by the Comptroller of the Treasury, under the established rules for reopening accounts the auditor would be authorized to reopen his previous settlement upon newly discovered material evidence. (4 Comp. Dec., 303; 8 Comp. Dec., 24.)

Where the account of a disbursing officer of the Navy has been settled by the accounting officers, it is not competent for the auditor at an after time, upon an allegation of error or omission, or for other cause, to open the account, restate it, and upon the account thus restated to institute proceedings by a warrant of distress against the debtor. If, after the account had once been stated and closed, the accounting officers could open it again, there would be no limitation either as to the length of time or the frequency with which such action might be taken. Also, if it be competent to open the account in favor of the United States, the converse of the proposition must be equally true, upon the principles of justice. A doctrine which leads to such consequences can not be sound. The Government is not without ample remedy though this power should be denied to the auditor, as it could recover in an action at law any sums of which it had been unjustly deprived. (Ex parte Randolph, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11558, opinion of Barbour, J., concurred in by Marshall, Circuit Justice.)

The accounts of paymasters never being closed, the accounting officers may secure immediate payment of balances due from them and yet open and readjust their accounts at any time. (Stevens v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 344.)

Similarly, the account of a retired officer is never closed from the date of his retirement. Overpayments made at one time by mistake can be corrected and properly charged against credits coming in afterwards. (U. S. v. Burchard, 125 U. S., 176.)

No settlements are agreed upon as final between a contractor and the United States, where the contract relations still continue and have continued consecutively since the first overpayment; although it is true that accounts have been stated by the accounting officers and payments made quarterly. For the purpose of rectifying mistakes, the items of the several statements upon which the auditor certifies balances due for carrying the mails, ordinarily and in the absence of special circumstances, may be regarded as running accounts, at least while the parties continue in the same dealings between themselves. (Duval's case, 25 Ct. Cls., 46, 58; approved Wisconsin Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 190, 211.)

(B) Mistake of fact.

It is established by numerous decisions on the subject that where payments are made by a public officer in violation of law, but through mistake of fact as distinguished from mistake or error of law, the Government has a clear right to recover back the overpayment. (Duval's case, 25 Ct. Cls., 58.)

(C) Mistake of law.

1. OPINIONS OF ATTORNEYS-GENERAL.
2. COURT OF CLAIMS DECISIONS.
3. DECISIONS OF SUPREME COURT.
4. MISCELLANEOUS DECISIONS.

[In private dealings between individuals the general rule has been established that money paid with full knowledge of all the facts involved, but through a mistaken view of the law applicable to such facts, can not be recovered back, the rule being founded on the legal maxim "Ignorantia legis neminem excusat". In some cases it has been broadly stated that this rule applies to overpayments made by a public officer, the same as in the case of private parties; while in others it has been stated that upon grounds of public policy the rule has no application whatever to the Government, which can not be bound by the mistakes of its officers, whether of fact or of law. However, an examination of the authorities will disclose that the question whether or not the rule shall be applied to overpayments made by public officers has been governed by the facts of the particular case. Thus, where the circumstances are such that the one receiving the overpayment could not, ex aequo et bono, be required to refund same to the Government, the general rule has been applied; while, on the other hand, when the situation was reversed, it has been held that the Government was entitled to recover back the amount of the overpayment. (See file 26254-2160:2, June 7, 1917, Sec. Navy to Comp. Treas.)

[It is also settled that where the one receiving the overpayment does not acquiesce in the settlement, but himself seeks to have the account reopened and corrected to his advantage, the Government has the right, at the same time, to have corrected errors committed in the settlement, to its prejudice, although due to mistake of law. (See 2 Ency. U. S. Rept., 515.)

[The decisions on this subject are set forth below.]

1. OPINIONS OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL.

Where the Government has voluntarily paid money in consequence of an erroneous construction of the law, adopted without due reflection and examination of the Treasury Department, I do not recommend that the claimant be called upon to refund the moneys he has received. I am accustomed to advise acquiescence in what is done as done. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 568.)

But if claimant insists on having his accounts opened to readjust them, with a view to correcting errors committed to his prejudice, it would be right, and the duty of the accounting officers, to correct at the same time any error committed to the prejudice of the Government. The effect of this will be that if the accounts are reopened at the instance of the claimant, the readjustment must be complete and legal in all its parts, and he may be called upon to account for the money which he has received heretofore by mistake of law. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 576.)

Where an account has once been duly adjusted, settled, and closed by the proper officers, with full knowledge of all the facts and where no errors in calculation have been made, it has been repeatedly held that it can not be reopened without express authority of law, and must be regarded as final and conclusive. No subsequent decision upon a doubtful or controverted question of law, essentially modifying a prevailing rule which was applied to the settlement of an account, would authorize the reopening of it, with a view to a readjustment of it in accordance with such decision. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 386.)

Upon principles of administrative policy which ought to be considered firmly established, settlements made between an officer of the Army and the accounting officers in the matter of his pay are conclusive upon the executive department of the Government; and such settlements can not be reopened years afterwards, upon the allegation that overpayments had been made to the officer with full knowledge of all the facts, but under a mistaken view of the law, and that such overpayments should be recovered by set-off against allowances coming due and to which he is legally entitled. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 448; followed, 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 439.)

The principle that every one is assumed to know the law can be relied on by the citizen in his defense when sued by the Government for an overpayment made to him under a mistake of law; and the Government may equally rely on the same principle as a defense when sued by the citizen. Accordingly, a settlement of the accounting officers can not be reopened on application of claimant because of a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court holding the accounting officers' construction of the law to be erroneous. If it had happened that the claimant had, through a mistake of law of the accounting officers of the United States, been paid too much instead of too little, it would seem quite clear that the excess could not be recovered back, if the principle applicable to a similar case between individuals should govern; and the Supreme Court of the United States have said that, "with a few exceptions, growing out of considerations of public policy, rules of law which apply to the Government and to individuals are the same. There is not one law for the former and another for the latter." (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 439, citing McKnight v. U. S., 98 U. S., 186.)

A voluntary payment made with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances of the case, although made under a mistaken view of the law, can not be revoked and the money so paid can not be recovered back; this principle applies in the case where an officer of the Army was allowed a claim for service pay by the accounting officers, and the Supreme Court thereafter held all such allowances to be without authority of law. Afterwards the officer filed a claim for certain pay and allowances to which he was justly entitled, and it was proposed to set off against the amount of this claim the sum which had been improperly paid him. In such case the settlement could not be reopened upon the ground that it proceeded on a mistaken view of the legislation covering the subject involved. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 323, explaining 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 439.)

In the case of an ignorant and unlettered private soldier the rule of law should apply, a multo fortiori (for much stronger reasons), which has been invoked for the relief of educated and experienced officers of the Army, viz, that payments made by mistake of law can not be recovered by the Government. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 323.)

Navy pay officers are not responsible for payments made by mistake of law, if such payments are made on certified pay rolls, as required by the Navy regulations, and the items are fair on their face. (Op. Atty. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611.)

2. COURT OF CLAIMS DECISIONS.

The rule that the Government can not be held responsible for the mistakes of its agents includes mistakes of law as well as mistakes of fact, and extends to a mistake of law committed by the accounting officers in adjusting and allowing an account of one supposed to be but not an officer of the Government. (McElrath v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 202.) (See decision of Supreme Court affirming this case, noted below under "3. Decisions of Supreme Court.")

Where one has received money to which, ex aequo et bono, he is not entitled, the general rule of law and equity is that an action lies for its recovery. The only exception to this rule is that where between individuals the money has been paid by a mistake of law it can not be recovered; and we think this exception is not applicable to the United States. (McElrath v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 217.)

The United States do not guarantee either the capacity, the integrity, or the care of their officers, and are not responsible for their deficiencies in either. As the reason of this rule is the public protection, it overrules individual equities; and as this rule is founded on "a great public policy" established for the public protection, it does not admit of exceptions but includes mistakes of law as well as mistakes of fact, because the one may be as injurious to the public interests as the other. (McElrath v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 216.)

It is manifest the petitioner has no equitable claim to the money he received by mistake of the accounting officers. He was legally dismissed as an officer of the Marine Corps, and seven years later there was an attempted revocation of the order of dismissal, and claimant then tendered his resignation, which was accepted. He rendered no service to the Government after his dismissal and he intended to render none. But the accounting officers allowed him half pay for this period, when he was not in law or in fact an officer of the Marine Corps, and he thereupon sued for the difference between half pay and full pay for said period. Under such circumstances the Government is entitled to recover the unauthorized payment by counterclaim. (McElrath v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 217.) (The court gave judgment against McElrath because the accounting officers exceeded their jurisdiction in allowing him pay when he was not in office and rendered no service, and therefore had no legal claim to the money paid him and could not in conscience retain it. McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 562, dissenting opinion Richardson, J.)

The principles stated in McElrath's case might not apply if the Comptroller were to give a construction to a statute different from that which the judiciary might subsequently give, whereby the officer would receive greater pay or larger allowances than the law intended. In such a case I am not prepared to say that the Government could reopen the transaction and recover back the overpayment as money paid without legal authority in its official agents. But in this case the claimant was an utter stranger to the Government. No business or official relations subsisted between him and the Government and he had no claim or account against the Government for the Comptroller to adjust. (McElrath v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 218, concurring opinion, Nott, J.)

McElrath was not an officer in the Navy, nor had he been for any part of the period over which his pretended account extended; nor had he rendered any service as such; nor had any legal relations between him and the Government existed. The Comptroller therefore acted ab initio without authority; and his mistake, whether of law or of fact, that he had jurisdiction of the pretended account, gave him none. There is a very broad difference between that case and one in which the Comptroller has jurisdiction of the account, where the claimant is a veritable officer of the Navy, but through an incidental mistake of law in the settlement of the account, the officer is allowed some item of pay which in the judgment of the courts should have been disallowed. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 532.)

In the case of disbursing officers the policy of the Government has been to acknowledge no payments as made on its behalf save those which were authorized by law. If a disbursing officer makes a mistake of law, the payment is disallowed when his accounts come in for settlement and charged to him as if the money were still in his hands. But the Comptrollers of the Treasury are not disbursing officers. Within the proper functions of their offices, they are above the review of the highest executive authority and their decisions are subject only to judicial revision. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 532, 533.)

Settlements made by the accounting officers of the Government with its creditors, untainted by fraud, and free from mistake of fact, possess the element of finality. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 532.)

A practical construction going back to the very beginning of the Government is overwhelming, and can not be overturned with safety by anything short of statutory amendment. From the first day the Treasury did business until this case was brought (1876), it is safe to say that the Government has never gone into any court as plaintiff and sued the party to whom money was paid in mistake of law. The courts have been open to the Government ever since courts were established and it has never been supposed that such an action could be maintained. If the Government has such power, all the settlements which present and past comptrollers have ever made will be liable to be reopened, as no statute of limitations runs against the Government. Such a ruling can not promote the public welfare but would be prolific in public mischiefs. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 533, 534.)

The true rule to be laid down is this: Where the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to settle an account or claim against the Government, a mistake of law committed incidentally in the adjustment will not, after payment of the balance found to be due, affect the finality of the settlement or entitle the Government to recover back the money paid in mistake of law ex aequo et bono. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 534.) Reversed on other grounds (U. S. v. McKee, 97 U. S., 233).

The question to be determined in these cases, when public money is paid away by public officers with full knowledge of the facts but in mistake of law upon an honest interpretation and decision, is how far those officers have been intrusted by the Government with the authority to decide, because if they have no such authority, the Government would under no circumstances be bound by their decisions. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 552; dissenting opinion, Richardson, J., concurred in by Drake, Ch. J.)

The accounting officers stand in different relations to the Government from disbursing officers who have only ministerial duties to perform; they must of necessity decide questions of law and fact which arise in the settlement of accounts. To some extent the Comptrollers are quasi judicial officers. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 553, 554, opinion Richardson, J.)

Public policy requires that the Government should not be bound by the mistakes of its officers; it also requires that the settlements of the accounting officers, within the exact scope of their authority, when followed by payment and acquiesced in by the claimants, should be held final and conclusive on the Government unless impeached by fraud, or mistake of fact, as in like cases between individuals. Such settlements involve vast accounts of collectors and disbursing officers under heavy bonds; the complicated accounts of persons furnishing supplies to the Army, Navy, and other branches of the Government; the accounts of individuals dealing in thousands of ways with the constituted authorities, as well as accounts for the salaries of public officers to whom it is often of great importance to know exactly how much they can depend upon receiving. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 557, opinion Richardson, J.)

If nothing could be regarded as settled against the Government in the adjustment of accounts except what is determined by the final judgment of the courts, it would follow that whenever a new construction is placed on a statute different from that which the same or a former comptroller adopted in the settlement of earlier accounts, although there were no frauds, mistakes or concealments of facts, and the parties had dealt with the Government on the basis of the former rulings, and had long acquiesced in the settlement, the accounts might nevertheless be reopened and the parties brought into court upon a claim for money paid them in mistake of law. And as no statute of limitations bars actions brought by the United States, any account settled since the first organization of the Government might be so reopened. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 559, opinion Richardson, J.)

If claimant does not acquiesce in the settlement but brings an action in the Court of Claims to recover an additional amount, he can not, in law or justice, well complain if the United States on their part no longer acquiesce in the payment, and, in defending themselves, have the account opened throughout, stated anew, and a balance found against him, when it appears that the officers of the department exceeded their powers in exercising jurisdiction over the claim and mistook the law applicable thereto, and the money paid was not legally due to the claimant and could not have been recovered by an action in the Court of Claims or otherwise, and can not in conscience be retained by him. Had claimant himself not disturbed the settlement by bringing suit, the United States would, no doubt, have abided by the action of their officers as they have done before in hundreds of similar cases where executive officers have acted upon a mistaken interpretation of statutes, honestly and fairly arrived at. And because the United States do not in their ordinary business disturb settlements in which the claimants acquiesce, it does not follow that they have no right to recover back payments illegally made on those which the claimants themselves reopen by actions bringing the Government into court. (McKee v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 560, 561, 564, opinion Richardson, J.; Baxter v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 75, 80.)

The Government can no more recover back money paid under a mistake of law than an individual, in a case where a settlement made by the parties in good faith, under a mistaken construction of the statute, is sought to be reopened by the United States without the consent of the other party for the purpose of recovering back money paid under it for services actually rendered at an honest valuation. [In this case it was decided that settlements made with a supervisor of internal revenue, crediting him with clerk hire paid to a person who was at the same time a gauger, and who could not, therefore, legally receive additional compensation as clerk, were conclusive on the judicial department of the Government; that there was nothing contrary to good morals or conscience in the payment or receipt of the money; and that in allowing the payments the Treasury officers acted strictly within the scope of official authority and discretion.] (Hedrick's case, 16 Ct. Cls., 88, distinguishing McElrath's case.)

"No money shall be paid to any person for his compensation who is in arrears to the United States, until he has accounted for and paid into the Treasury all sums for which he is liable * * * (Sec. 1766, R. S.) This section applies only to cases in which the party is liable to the United States. But the parties are not liable to the United States for moneys paid and received under the circumstances shown in this case (payments made in good faith, by mistake of law, for services actually rendered). (Hedrick's case, 16 Ct. Cls., 104.) (See "VI. SET-OFF" above.)

Where payments sought to be recovered back were made in good faith, with no improper purpose on either side, with full knowledge of all the facts but under a mistaken construction of the law, it is quite clear that, if the controversy were between private parties, the money under such circumstances could not be recovered back. The fact that the transactions took place with an agent of the Government does not change the rule. (Arthur v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 433, citing and following U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 564.)

Salary paid by mistake of law can not be recovered back by the Government, even though the recipient was not, in law, a public officer; where both parties proceeded in good faith, and the claimant did occupy the position, in fact, of an officer on the retired list of the Army, and as such was subject to the disqualifications of law, and the performance of such duties as by law are incident to that relation. This case differs from McElrath's case in the essential particular that the claimant has made no effort to disturb the settlement; and also in that McElrath rendered no service and occupied no relation to the Government either in law or in fact. (Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 353.)

Where money is paid in mutual mistake of law, and the court can not restore the parties to their original position before the happening of their mutual error, it will leave them in statu quo. (Palen v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 389; Bennett v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 388.)

The doctrine does not have such general application to public officers as to individuals, that money paid can be recovered back when paid in mistake of fact and not of law. Public officers use the funds of the people, while individuals deal with their own money, where nobody but themselves suffer for their ignorance, carelessness, or indiscretion. In the former case, the elements of agency, and the authority and duty of officers and their obligations to the public, of which all persons dealing with them are bound to take notice, are always involved. (Barnes v. District of Columbia, 22 Ct. Cls., 336, 394; approved Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 212.)

A manifest wrong and injury will be caused by a subsequent judicial interpretation which leaves the party without redress in a case where an executive department charged with the administration of a statute has previously given to it an interpretation upon the faith of which the party acts. For if the construction afterwards adopted had been given the statute by the executive officers at the proper time, the claimant might have declined to enter into the contract and to perform the service. (Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 468; explaining and distinguishing U. S. v. Ala. R. R. Co., 142 U. S., 621, noted below.)

A different question is presented in a case where the claimant had no option but to render the service which formed the basis of the claim; as where a land-grant railroad had to perform the required service for the Government and to perform it under the terms prescribed by Congress. If the executive department in that case had originally given the statute the same construction afterwards given it by the court, the claimant could not have declined to perform. The only effect which the original interpretation of the department caused in this case was that the claimant, by reason of overpayment, had in its possession money which it was not entitled to have, and that it had the use of such money without the payment of interest. Therefore no injury was done the claimant in such a sense as to prevent the proper construction now being given the law. (Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 468.) (See decision of Supreme Court in this case, noted below.)

When money is paid after careful consideration by the proper officers of the Government, upon settlements made by the accounting officers, it can not be recovered back because paid in mistake of law. (Hillborn v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 547; 28 Ct. Cls., 237.)

"Whatever doubt may have existed heretofore as to the right of the Government to maintain a counterclaim for money paid by its agents or officers without authority of law or paid through a misconstruction of the law has now been removed by the decision in the case of the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company v. United States, 164 U. S., 190, 210 (affirming the decision of this court)." (Baxter v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 75, 81; Wis. Cent. R. Co. v. U. S., noted below.)

"It has been held in many cases that payments made in good faith through a mistaken interpretation of the law may not be recovered." (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 327.)

3. DECISIONS OF SUPREME COURT.

The settlements of the accounting officers have always been considered as conclusive upon the Government, but not as against the individual. The law expressly provides that rejected items may be allowed by the court. Accounts amounting to many millions annually come under the action of these officers. It is therefore of great importance to the public and to individuals that the rules by which they exercise their powers should be fixed and known. (U. S. v. Jones, 8 Pet., 375.)

What has been done under an erroneous construction of the law is binding upon the Government and can not be recalled to the pecuniary disadvantage of any officer who may have received pay and emoluments under such erroneous practice. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 564; followed Arthur v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 433.)

If a credit has been given or an allowance made by the head of a department, and it is alleged to be an illegal allowance, the judicial tribunals of the country must be resorted to to construe the law under which the allowance was made, and to settle the rights between the United States and the party to whom the credit was given. (U. S. v. Bank of the Metropolis, 15 Pet., 377.) ["The mistake referred to in this citation was assumed and expressed to be a mistake of law, for the resort to the judicial tribunals was to be had 'to construe the law under which the allowance was made.' And we think that the citation is an authoritative declaration of the Supreme Court that where a payment is made to an officer by a mistake of law in a department, a suit may be maintained by the United States for the recovery of the money paid." (McElrath v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cls., 217.) "The view thus indicated that executive decisions in cases like the present are not binding on the courts, has been repeatedly affirmed and steadily adhered to." (Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 207.)]

Had the appellant rested upon the settlement of his account by the proper officers of the Government, his right to invoke the general rule (that payments made under a mistake of law can not be recovered back) would have been entitled to more consideration than it can now receive. If the general rule applicable in such cases would preclude the Government from reclaiming money which had been paid under a mistake of law simply, that rule is inapplicable under the circumstances disclosed in the present case. Upon receiving the amount awarded to him by the representatives of the Government, he distinctly announced his purpose not to abide by their settlement of his accounts; but in disregard thereof to demand an additional sum upon the basis of full pay and allowances. * * * This suit itself invites the court to go behind that settlement to reexamine all the questions arising out of appellant's claim for full pay and allowances and to correct the error which he insists was committed to his prejudice by the accounting officers of the Government. The Government, declining to plead the former settlement in bar of suit, meets him upon his own chosen ground, and insisting that its officers, misapprehending the law, paid to him out of the Treasury money to which he was not legally entitled, asks as we think it may rightfully do judgment for the amount thus improperly paid to him. (McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S., 441; distinguished Hedrick's case, 16 Ct. Cls., 88, Miller's case, 19 Ct. Cls., 353, Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. Rep., 409, 418; affirmed 148 Fed. Rep., 1022; followed U. S. v. Dempsey, 104 Fed. Rep., 197.)

The Government is not bound by the action of the Navy Department in delivering old materials to a contractor at an agreed price, considerably less than their real value. Such action was without warrant of law, and in a suit brought by the contractor for payment on his contract, it was held that, the material having been disposed of, he should be required to account for it at its true value. The fact that the account of appellant was settled by the officers of the Navy Department by charging him with the value of the old material at the agreed price is no bar to the recovery of its real value by the Government. The whole transaction was illegal and the appellant is chargeable with knowledge of the fact. (Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128.)

When the remedy of the party against the Government is barred by the statute of limitations, and the remedies of the United States on the other side are intact, owing to its not being subject to any statute of limitation, settled accounts, where the United States has paid the balance found due, can not be opened and set aside on account of technical irregularities in the allowance of expenses, or merely because some of the prescribed steps in the accounting, which it was the duty of a head of a department to see had been taken, have in fact been omitted. (U. S. v. Johnston, 124 U. S., 236, 254.) [This observation of the Supreme Court illustrates the danger of the doctrine which the Government pushes in a case where it attempts to recover back overpayments, years after final settlement, on the ground that such overpayments were made by mistake of law. (Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. Rep., 409, 417.)]

When an officer brings suit in the Court of Claims to recover a balance claimed to be due him on his pay account, the Government by counterclaim can recover overpayments made to him on that account. Whether the Government can in any case be precluded from reclaiming money which has been paid by its disbursing and accounting officers under a mistake of law is a question which it is not now necessary to decide any more than it was in McElrath v. U. S. (above). This is a case where the disbursing officer, supposing that a retired officer of the Navy was entitled to more than it turns out the law allowed, overpaid him. Certainly under such circumstances the mistake may be corrected. The action was brought to recover a balance claimed by the officer to be due him on pay account from the date of his retirement. In reality the account had never been closed and was always open to adjustment. His pay was fixed by law, and the disbursing officers of the department had no authority to allow him any more. If they did, it was in violation of law, and he has no right to keep what he has thus obtained. (U. S. v. Burchard, 125 U. S., 176.)

Where money has been paid under a mistake of law it can not be recovered back. It is denied that this rule is applicable to the United States upon the ground that the Government is not bound by the mistakes of its officers, whether of law or of fact; but inasmuch as the claimant's name was placed in the retired list of the Army by the Secretary of War in apparent compliance with the provisions of law, and as he acted as an officer de facto (in fact), we are not inclined to hold that he has received money as salary which, ex aequo et bono, he ought to return. (Badeau v. U. S., 130 U. S., 439.)

Where payment was made by the United States in consequence of a misrepresentation by the defendant to the Secretary of the Treasury which created a misapprehension on his part of the nature of the defendant's services, the amount so paid ought in equity and good conscience to be returned to the United States. (Sanborn v. U. S., 135 U. S., 271.)

It is a settled doctrine of this court that in case of ambiguity the judicial department will lean in favor of a construction given to a statute by the department charged with its execution, and if such construction be acted upon for a number of years will look with disfavor upon any sudden change whereby parties who have contracted with the Government upon the faith of such construction may be prejudiced. It is especially objectionable that a construction of a statute favorable to the individual citizen should be changed in such manner as to become retroactive and to require from him the repayment of moneys to which he had supposed himself entitled and upon the expectation of which he had made his contracts with the Government. (U. S. v. Ala. R. R. Co., 142 U. S., 621.)

Where a naval officer sues for a deficiency claimed to exist in his previous grade, and his contention is sustained, there may be deducted from the sum due him the amount of overpayments made in his present grade upon a difference of opinion as to the law. (U. S. v. Stahl, 151 U. S., 366.)

Where no peculiar circumstances appear to make such recovery inequitable and unjust, money paid in violation of law upon balances certified by the accounting officers generally may be recovered back by counterclaim or otherwise; the items of the several statements upon which the auditor certifies balances due for carrying the mails, ordinarily and in the absence of special circumstances, may be regarded as running accounts, at least while the parties continue the same dealings between themselves. This statement was made by the Court of Claims in a case in which the mistake was treated as one of fact, but the governing principle is the same in the present case which is one of misconstruction of law. (Wisconsin Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 211, quoting Duval v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 46.)

As a general rule and on grounds of public policy the Government can not be bound by the action of its officers, who must be held to the performance of their duties within the strict limits of their legal authority, where, by misconstruction of the law under which they have assumed to act unauthorized payments are made. The question is not presented as between the Government and its officer, or between the officer and the recipient of such payments, but as between the Government and the recipient, and is then a question whether the latter can be allowed to retain the fruits of actions not authorized by law, resulting from an erroneous conclusion by the agent of the Government as to the legal effect of the particular statutory law under or in reference to which he is proceeding. (Wisconsin Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 210; followed U. S. v. Dempsey, 104 Fed. Rep., 197.) (In the decision of the Court of Claims in this case, noted above, it was pointed out that the claimant was not equitably entitled to retain the overpayments; and the Supreme Court's conclusion was, "that there is nothing on this record to take the case out of the scope of the principle that parties receiving moneys illegally paid by a public officer are liable, ex aequo et bono, to refund them.")

Where money has been paid without authority of law, and the Government has money of the same claimant in its hands, it is not compelled to pay such money over and sue to recover the illegal payments; but may hold it subject to the decision of the court when the claimant sues. And in that way multiplicity of suits and circuitry of action are avoided. (Wisconsin Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 211.) (See "VI. Set-Off" above.)

4. MISCELLANEOUS DECISIONS.

Where the accounting officers have passed the account, and payment is made, it seems clear that the officer whose accounts are thus approved and paid can not afterwards be called upon for repayment. The Government's claim in such case could have no possible standing, except upon the ground of fraud or palpable mistake. (Tuthill v. U. S., 38 Fed. Rep., 538.) [This decision seems to approve the same doctrine which was applied by the Court of Claims in Hedrick's case, above noted. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 441.)]

The United States may recover an overpayment made by mistake of law, with interest from the date when the officer's accounts were settled by the Treasury Department. (U. S. v. Dempsey, 104 Fed. Rep., 197.) [In this case an Army officer was, by mistake of law, paid commutation of quarters for a period during which he occupied a building provided by the United States for his occupancy and use, and which was suitable for an officer of his rank. The United States brought suit to recover the overpayment. The court said that the paymaster who paid the defendant the above sum of money could go no further in this matter than he was authorized by law. The law limited his powers. The Government was not bound when he exceeded the authority given him by the Federal statutes. The Government having provided the defendant with suitable quarters free of charge, the paymaster was not authorized to pay him this money. That under such circumstances, the following decisions maintain the rule that the Government may sue for and recover back this sum of money so paid—citing decisions of Supreme Court in McElrath v. U. S. and Wisconsin Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., noted above.] Compare U. S. v. Sanborn (135 U. S., 271).

Whatever may be the general rule, the United States stands upon no better footing than would a private citizen in a case where money has been paid by its officers under mistake of law, and the circumstances are such that the Government is not entitled, ex aequo et bono, to recover such money from the recipient. (Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. Rep., 409; affirmed 148 Fed. Rep., 1022.) [In this case the money was paid to a United States marshal as fees, and in the course of his duty he "paid three-fourths of the amount of these fees to his deputies, from time to time as he made settlements, and retained the balance, as was his duty to do, under the law as then construed by every department of the Government which had acted or spoken on the subject." It was held that the Government could not recover either the amount paid to his deputies or the portion retained by the marshal, after years had elapsed and the marshal had gone out of office, and was without remedy to recoup his losses, and during which time no objection had been made to such payments by the executive departments or by Congress, which continued to appropriate money therefor, even though the allowances may have been made under an erroneous construction of the law.]

Where, by mistake of law for which he was not responsible, an officer of the Navy was paid increased compensation as an appointee from civil life, when he was not, under the law as construed by the Supreme Court, entitled to such additional compensation, held that the Government could not recover the amount of the overpayment for the period from the date of his appointment until the time when his rating was corrected. (U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co., 244 Fed. Rep., 310.)

The underlying principle of the decisions is that when the sovereign comes into court to assert a pecuniary demand against the citizen, the court has authority and is under the duty to withhold relief to the sovereign except upon terms which do justice to the citizen or subject as determined by the jurisprudence of the forum in like subject matter between man and man. (Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. Rep., 409, 413.)

It is not material whether the payments were in fact authorized by the existing statutes at the time they were made, if it appears that the transactions have been executed and closed, and Congress, the legislative power which could treat them as legal at that time and thereby make them legal, did treat them as legal at that time. (Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. Rep., 409, 416.)

It would seem the burden is on the Government to show that the accounts could be reopened without doing injustice to the citizen in a case where money has been paid to him as a public officer by mistake of law, and the settlements closed and executed before he went out of office, and he accepted them as finalities. (Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. Rep., 409, 417.)

When an officer accepts the final settlements made with the auditing department in full of his accounts, and does not commence suit against the Government to avoid its ruling as to any matters involved in those settled accounts, his conduct does not bring him within the principle of McElrath v. U. S. (noted above). His attitude does not, as did that of the plaintiff in McElrath's case, "invite the court to go behind the settlement." (Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. Rep., 409, 418.)

In general, the holding of the courts is that the Government is not bound by the acts of its officers or agents, but exceptions are made by the courts in cases where the circumstances are such that the refundment under compulsion of moneys so paid would be a violation of equity and good conscience. (Comp. Dec., July 17, 1914, 161 S. and A. Memo., 3303; Comp. Dec., Dec. 1, 1914, 165 S. and A. Memo., 3409; Comp. Dec., Mar. 26, 1915, file 26254-1748.)

cers of the Navy, and who have accordingly been allowed the additional pay provided for citizens of the United States, have not received money "which in equity and good conscience they ought to be required to return to the United States." There is no principle of law which in such case requires the accounting officers to reopen, upon their own motion, accounts which have been settled and closed, although such payments would not be conclusive upon the Government if the men should seek, through the accounting officers or the courts, to reopen their pay accounts in order to secure something claimed to be due them under a new ruling or decision. (Comp. Dec., July 28, 1913, 149 S. and A. Memo., 2715. Where, contrary to these principles, the Comptroller holds an officer indebted for overpayments made by mistake of law, the Secretary of the Navy will not take any action tending to the collection of the amount from such officer, but should the Comptroller attempt to have suit brought against the officer the Secretary will present all facts in the case to the Department of Justice. (File 26254-2160:4, Aug. 7, 1917; see also 26254-2160:2, June 7, 1917.)

Where payments have been made under a long-continued practice of the administrative department, sanctioned by the accounting officers of the Treasury, payments so made by disbursing officers prior to the promulgation of a Comptroller's decision reversing the former construction of the law, if otherwise correct, will be passed to their official credit. (20 Comp. Dec. 182; 72 S. and A. Memo., 225; see also Comp. Dig., 295, 296.)

Errors of judgment in the application of legal rules to the facts which were before the accounting officers can not be corrected by any subsequent action of the accounting officers themselves. (Dec. of Second Comptroller, Sept. 9, 1885, quoted in 34 Ct. Cls., 490, 493, Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. U. S.) [In this case the accounts had been settled by a former administration.]

(D) Subsequent administration.

Can not generally reopen accounts settled by predecessors.—After a final settlement of a claimant's accounts by the Comptroller, the same can not be reopened by his successor in office, except to correct "mistakes in matters of fact arising upon errors in calculation, and in cases of rejected claims in which material testimony is afterwards discovered and produced." (Balto. & Ohio R. R. Co. v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 504; U. S. v. Bank of the Metropolis, 15 Pet., 377, 401; Rollins and Presbrey v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 123.) This has become the settled rule of administrative law. (Balto. & Ohio R. R. Co. v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 504, citing Jackson v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 505, 509.)

Except in cases of fraud, mistakes in calculation, or the filing of material new evidence, the disallowance of a claim by the Comptroller is final and conclusive and the case is res judicata (a thing adjudicated) in the department. (Armstrong's case, 29 Ct. Cls., 148, 169.)

The allowance of a claim by an auditor under a special act of Congress, followed by payment, can not be set aside by his successor. Where one auditor settles an account, his successors are bound by his decision. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 97.)

It has repeatedly been held by the Court of Claims and by the Supreme Court that the final decision of a matter by a public officer is binding upon his successor, and that the right of an incumbent to review a predecessor's decision extends only to mistakes of fact arising from errors in calculation, and to cases of rejected claims in which material evidence is afterward discovered and produced. (Cotton case, 29 Ct. Cls., 207, 223.)

The right of a public officer to review a predecessor's decisions extends to mistakes in matters of fact arising from errors of calculation, and to cases of rejected claims in which material testimony is afterwards discovered and produced; but if a credit has been given or an allowance made by the head of a department, and it is alleged to be an illegal allowance, the judicial tribunals of the country must be resorted to to construe the law under which the allowance was made and to settle the rights between the United States and the party to whom the credit was given. It is no longer a case between the correctness of one officer's judgment and that of his successor. A third party is interested, and he can not be deprived of a payment, on a credit so given, but by the intervention of a court to pass upon his right. (U. S. v. Bank of the Metropolis, 15 Pet., 401.)

It is well settled that the Comptroller has no right to review the decision of his predecessor upon a question of law, whether such decision be correct or erroneous. This principle has been so long recognized and exercised, as evidenced by numerous rulings of the Comptrollers, opinions of the Attorneys-General, and decisions of the courts, that citations are scarcely necessary. (20 Comp. Dec., 680, 687. See also 19 Comp. Dec. 110, and authorities there cited; compare 4 Comp. Dec., 697.)

By act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1356), relating to the payment of back pay and bounty in certain cases, it was provided that thereafter in all such cases, "the said accounting officers shall, in stating balances, follow the decisions of the United States Supreme Court or the Court of Claims of the United States after the time for appeal has expired, if no appeal be taken, without regard to former settlements or adjudications by their predecessors." (See Leigh v. U. S. 43 Ct. Cls., 387.)

(E) Same administration.

May reopen accounts settled by themselves.—"It has never been doubted that any public officer in the departments may correct his own errors, and open, reconsider, and reverse, in whole or in part, any case decided by himself." (Rollins and Presbrey's case, 23 Ct. Cls., 123.) [In this case, the officer's action did not purport to be a final settlement, and the case was treated by him as still pending.]

The accounting officers have a right to reopen accounts which have been settled by themselves, to correct errors either of law or fact, but they are not authorized to reopen accounts which had been settled by their predecessors except upon the production of newly discovered material evidence, or to correct mistakes of fact, or for fraud or collusion. (11 Comp. Dec., 459; followed 15 Comp. Dec., 584, 97 S. and A. Memo., 1004. But see above, "(C) Mistake of Law.") [Previously it had been decided by the Comptroller that the accounting officers of the Treasury are not authorized to reopen accounts for the purpose of correcting decisions upon questions of law subsequently held to be erroneous; and that to admit such a proposition would bring endless confusion into the settlement of accounts and substitute the judgment of one officer for that of another on doubtful questions of law (6 Comp. Dec., 91); and again, that it is an established rule that the accounting officers are not authorized to reopen accounts which have been settled, either by themselves or their predecessors, for the purpose of correcting decisions of law subsequently held to be erroneous (8 Comp. Dec. 24); but that "the Government has authority to withhold money due to an officer of the Navy to whom an erroneous payment has been made, notwithstanding that the payment was found to be erroneous only upon a construction of law made after the settlement of an account in which the payment was allowed; the burden is upon claimant to bring suit therefor and have the question of right determined by the courts. (8 Comp. Dec., 24, citing Wis. Cent. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 190, 211.)]

IX. MANDAMUS PROCEEDINGS TO COMPEL PAYMENTS.

Mandamus will lie against an auditor in the Treasury Department to compel the taking of such steps by him as may be necessary to accomplish the payment to a public officer of the salary of his office as fixed by law, where there is no dispute that the amount of such salary is lawfully due the officer, but its payment has been withheld in accordance with decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury and contrary to an opinion of the Attorney General, on the ground that said officer was indebted to the United States, which alleged indebtedness was denied by the officer and had not been adjudicated in any court. (Smith v. Jackson, 241 Fed. Rep., 747; 246 U. S., 388.)

The courts have no power to issue a writ of mandamus commanding the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw money from the Treasury to pay the claim of an individual. The only acts to which the power of the courts by mandamus extends are such as are purely ministerial—that is, which do not require the exercise of judgment or discretion—but whenever the right of judgment or discretion is left to an officer, he can not be controlled in its exercise by the courts. (U. S. v. Guthrie, 17 How., 284.)

The duties of the accounting officers are not merely ministerial. (20 Comp. Dec., 741.)

The suggestion that a court can command the withdrawal of a sum of money from the Treasury of the United States, to be applied in satisfaction of disputed or controverted claims against the United States, is such that its simple statement must carry with it the most startling considerations and unavoidable negative; for it would occur, a priori, to every mind that a Treasury not fenced round and shielded by fixed and established modes and rules of administration but which could be subjected to any number or description of demands, assorted and sustained through the undefined and undefinable discretion of courts, would constitute a feeble and inadequate provision for the great and inevitable necessities of the Nation. The Government, under such a régime, or rather such an absence of all rule, would, if practicable at all, be administered not by the great departments ordained by the Constitution and laws, and guided by the modes therein prescribed, but by the uncertain, and perhaps contradictory, action of the courts in the enforcement of their views of private interest. (U. S. v. Guthrie, 17 How., 303; State of Mississippi v. Durham, 4 Mackey (D. C.), 238. See also Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524; Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet., 497, 515; Brashear v. Mason, 6 How., 101.)

The Department of the Treasury seems fully equipped for the discharge of every fiscal duty and exigency; and therefore, independently of general considerations of abstract policy, the Government would seem to be justified in maintaining, in all its integrity, the dogma that it can not by any form of process, base its rights of property subjected to the arbitrament of a judicial tribunal, without its explicit consent in due form of law. (State of Mississippi v. Durham, 4 Mackey (D. C.), 237.)

Mandamus will not lie against an officer of the Treasury Department who refuses to allow and pay a claim against the United States; for, however obviously without legal justification his refusal may be, mandamus against him to compel such allowance is none the less, in effect, a suit against the United States, and it is well settled that no action can be sustained against the Government itself, for any supposed debt, unless by its consent under some special statute allowing it. (State of Mississippi v. Durham, 4 Mackey (D. C.), 235.) [But in Moser v. Meyer, which was a mandamus proceeding against the Secretary of the Navy, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia said: "Nor are we prepared to give the opinion that the Secretary of the Navy, sued with respect to a matter lying entirely within the duties of his office, is the same defendant as the United States when sued for pay by an officer of the Navy." 38 App. (D. C.), 13, and see Goldberg v. Daniels, 231 U. S., 218, holding that the United States is not a party to mandamus proceedings against the Secretary of the Navy.]

For other decisions see note to section 417, Revised Statutes; and see McElrath v. McIntosh (16 Fed. Cas. No. 8781.)

Sec. 237. [Commencement of fiscal year.] The fiscal year of the Treasury of the United States in all matters of accounts, receipts, expenditures, estimates, and appropriations, except accounts of the Secretary of the Senate for compensation and traveling expenses of Senators, and accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives for compensation and mileage of members and delegates shall commence on the first day of July in each year; and all accounts of receipts and expenditures required by law to be published annually shall be prepared and published for the fiscal year, as thus established. The fiscal year for the adjustment of the accounts of Secretary of the Senate for compensation and traveling expenses of Senators, and of the Sergeant-of-Arms of the House of Representatives for compensation and mileage of members and delegates shall extend to and include the third day of July.

This section was amended to read as above by act October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 646). Originally it provided as follows:

"SEC. 237. The fiscal year of the Treasury of the United States in all matters of accounts, receipts, expenditures, estimates, and appropriations, except accounts of the Secretary of the Senate for compensation and traveling expenses of Senators, shall commence on the first day of July in each year; and all accounts of receipts and expenditures required by law to be published annually shall be prepared and published for the fiscal year, as thus established. The fiscal year for the adjustment of the accounts of the Secretary of the Senate for compensation and traveling expenses of Senators shall extend to and include the third day of July."—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 207, ss. 1, 2, v. 5, p. 536; 8 May, 1872, c. 139, s. 1, v. 17, p. 61; 3 Mar., 1873, c. 226, s. 1, v. 17, p. 486.)

Purpose and effect of law.—Before the passage of the act of August 26, 1842 (5 Stat. 536), afterwards incorporated in section 237, Revised Statutes, the fiscal year commenced with and ended with the calendar year; but for the convenience of the public service, in the administration of the expense, accounts, and estimates of the Government, Congress changed the law so as to make the first day of July the commencement of the fiscal year. (Sweet v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 377, 385.)

This section does not forbid a public officer to demand payment of fees due him at any time. It merely provides that the fiscal year shall commence on the first day of July, and that the annual accounts shall be for the fiscal year. There is not a word that bears even remotely upon the time when accounts or claims shall become due or when they shall be paid. No payments are hastened and none deferred by this law. It might be claimed with equal propriety that this enactment postpones to the end of the fiscal year the liquidation of all claims which have no special day designated for payment. (Patterson v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 322.)

However, where officers are entitled to annual salaries, varying in amount according to the amount of business transacted in their offices during each current year, the maximum compensation to which they are entitled is an annual compensation, and is not due until the end of each fiscal year. (Bachelor v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cls., 239; Patterson v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 324.)

CHAPTER TWO.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Sec. 248. [Forms of keeping and rendering accounts; etc.] The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, digest and prepare plans for the improvement and management of the revenue, and for the support of the public credit; shall superintend the collection of the revenue; shall, from time to time, prescribe the forms of keeping and rendering all public accounts and making returns; shall grant, under the limitations herein established, or to be hereafter provided, all warrants for moneys to be issued from the Treasury in pursuance of appropriations by law; shall make report, and give information to either branch of the legislature in person or in writing, as may be required, respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, or which shall appertain to his office; and generally shall perform all such services relative to the finances as he shall be directed to perform. [See §§ 3660–3665, 3669, 3670, 3672].—(2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, s. 2, v. 1, p. 65; 8 May, 1792, c. 37, s. 9, v. 1, p. 281; 3 Mar., 1849, c. 108, s. 3, v. 9, p. 395, 20 June, 1874, c. 344, v. 18, p. 127; Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet., 230; Neilson v. Lagow, 12 How., 98, (107).)

This section was amended by act of July 31, 1894, section 5 (28 Stat., 206), which provides that "The Comptroller of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe the forms of keeping and rendering all public accounts, except those relating to the postal revenues and expenditures therefrom."

In the expenditure of all public moneys it is the invariable rule to require that accounts shall be furnished itemized as far as practicable, in order that the accounting officers may properly audit them. * * * The law may permit the exercise of discretion in the use of public funds, without dispensing with the usual requirement of an itemized account showing fully for what purposes the money has been expended. (4 Comp. Dec., 159; 4 Comp. Dec., 271.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury has no jurisdiction to approve or disapprove forms which are not accounting forms; as, for example, forms issued by the Secretary of the Navy for the use of the naval service in designating beneficiaries to receive death gratuity under the act May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128). (Comp. Dec., June 8, 1908, file 26254–44.)

The Secretary of the Treasury may impress his name with a stamp or copperplate upon a document, provided he keep the stamp or copperplate in his own possession and apply it himself or cause it to be applied in his presence; and this is a sufficient signing in law where a statute requires that certain documents be signed by him. The word "signing" does not necessarily imply, in legal acceptance at least, the use of pen and ink, held and guided by the hand of the person himself. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 670.)

Sec. 250. [Settlement of accounts within fiscal year. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 250. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all accounts of the expenditure of public money to be settled within each fiscal year, except where the distance of the places where such expenditure occurs may be such as to make further time necessary; and in respect to expenditures at such places, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the assent of the President, shall establish fixed periods at which a settlement shall be required."—(3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, s. 13, v. 3, p. 368.)

It was superseded and repealed by act July 31, 1894, section 12 (28 Stat., 209).

Sec. 251. [Rules, regulations, and forms.] The Secretary of the Treasury shall make and issue from time to time such instructions and regulations to the several collectors, receivers, depositaries, officers, and others who may receive Treasury notes, United States notes, or other securities of the United States, or who may be in any way engaged or employed in the preparation and issue of the same, as he shall deem best calculated to promote the public convenience and security, and to protect the United States, as well as individuals, from fraud and loss; he shall prescribe forms of entries, oaths, bonds, and other papers, and rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, to be used under and in the execution and enforcement of the various provisions of the internal-revenue laws, or in carrying out the provisions of law relating to raising revenue from imports, or to duties on imports, or to warehousing; he shall give such directions to collectors and prescribe such rules and forms to be observed by them as may be necessary for the proper execution of the law; he shall also prescribe the forms of the annual statements to be submitted to Congress by him showing the actual state of commerce and navigation between the United States and foreign countries, or coastwise between the collection districts of the United States, in each year.—(10 Feb., 1820, c. 11, ss. 14, 15, v. 3, p. 543; 6 Aug. 1846, c. 84, s. 5, v. 9, p. 55; 30 June, 1864, c. 172, s. 8, v. 13, p. 221; 14 July, 1870, c. 255, s. 34, v. 16, p. 271; 14 May, 1856, Res. 9, v. 11, p. 144; Lennig v. Maxwell, 3 Blatch., 125; Munsell v. Maxwell, 3 Blatch., 364.)

On general subject of regulations, see section 161, Revised Statutes, and note thereto. As to forms of keeping and rendering accounts, see section 248, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Persons connected with the Navy are forbidden to import in a public vessel any article which is liable to the payment of duty. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 12.)

Punishment by general court-martial is provided for transporting on naval vessels any goods or merchandise for freight, sale, or traffic, except gold, silver, or jewels for freight or safekeeping. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 8, clause 13.)

The Naval Instructions, 1913, contain the following rules relative to customs inspections of naval vessels:

"1321. (1) When any ship under the control of the Navy Department arrives within the territory of the United States, after having visited a foreign port or ports, the commanding officer thereof or, in the case of a number of ships in company, the senior officer present, shall inform the collector of such United States port of the arrival of the said ship or ships, and shall hold such ship or ships subject to such customs inspection as the collector of the port shall be directed to make by the Treasury Department. Commanding officers shall see that no dutiable articles are landed until after such action has been taken by the collector of the port. If the first port visited be not a port of entry, the provisions of this order shall be complied with at the first port of entry visited thereafter.

"(2) The commanding officer of each such ship shall cause each person on board who has purchased or otherwise acquired articles abroad which he intends to land from the ship to furnish a list of such articles and the prices paid therefor, separately stating articles of wearing apparel and similar personal effects intended for their personal use and articles intended for others. All such articles shall be conveniently packed, ready for examination by the customs officials upon arrival.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury has instructed the customs officers to examine and appraise such articles and to collect the duties accruing thereon, after allowing the one hundred dollars exemption upon wearing apparel and similar personal effects intended for personal use. No customs examination of baggage other than that so listed and presented for examination will be made.

"(4) The provisions of this article shall not be construed to delay the movements of any naval vessel engaged in the performance of her duty."

Treasury Regulations, scope and effect of.—Where a statute is silent in matters of detail, the Secretary of the Treasury is doubtless vested with a certain discretion under the power given him by this section to make rules and regulations not inconsistent with law for carrying out the provisions of law relating to raising revenue from imports. In construing regulations so adopted, it must be borne in mind that the Secretary of the Treasury is an officer of the Government; that his powers are limited by law; that his duty is to protect the revenues of the Government and to prevent smuggling or other illegal practices whereby the Government may be defrauded of its revenue; and that he owes no duty to individuals beyond seeing that their rights are not prejudiced any further than is necessary by the action of customs officers. (Constable v. National Steamship Co., 154 U. S., 75, 76.)

The contention that under the guise of regulations the Secretary of the Treasury has assumed legislative power confided by the Constitution solely to Congress, does not constitute a real and substantial dispute or controversy concerning the construction or application of the Constitution, so as to authorize a direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals. (American Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., 211 U. S., 161.)

Where regulations of the Treasury Department are such as are warranted by, and not inconsistent with, the law, they have the effect of law. (Von Cotzhausen v. Nazro, 15 Fed. Rep., 897.)

However extensive may be the general powers of the Secretary of the Treasury under this and other sections, they can not authorize any acts in conflict with the particular provisions of the law. (U. S. v. Leng, 18 Fed. Rep., 21.)

A regulation and circular which the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to make and issue under this section, not being inconsistent with any provision of law, objections to their admission in evidence (their authentication being conceded) are unsound. (U. S. v. Brendel, 136 Fed. Rep., 740.)

Where regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury under this section are substantially followed by Government officers, the findings by those officers are conclusive. (U. S. v. Lueder, 154 Fed. Rep., 1.)

Congress may enact a law and delegate the power of finding some fact or state of things upon which the operation of the law is made to depend. Where Congress instead of including in a statute a matter of detail, left the determination of the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, a regulation of the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant thereto, determining the act, is as conclusive as if the standard fixed by the regulation had been named in the law itself. If in fixing the standard, the Secretary of the Treasury does not legislate by amending the law or altering it, nor act judicially by deciding a fact which was one which, in its intrinsic nature, required judicial determination, it is difficult to see, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, upon what theory a fact which Congress has submitted to his determination can be subject to review. (Cooperville, etc., Co. v. Lemon, 163 Fed. Rep., 145, decided by Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.) [The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit reached a directly opposite conclusion as to the validity of the particular regulation which was sustained in this case, holding that the legal effect of said regulation was to modify, radically, an act of Congress, and to bring under its penal provisions property and persons expressly excluded therefrom by the terms of the law, and therefore that the regulation was void, as the Secretary of the Treasury has no authority thus to create and punish crimes. (U. S. v. Butter (Milton Dairy Co., Claimant) 195 Fed. Rep., 657.)]

Regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the internal revenue and for the government of the officers of the Revenue Department, have the force and effect of law and are as binding as if incorporated in the statute law of the United States. (Stegall v. Thurman, 175 Fed. Rep., 813.)

Sec. 255. [Appointment of disbursing agents.] The Secretary of the Treasury may designate any officer of the United States, who has given bonds for the faithful performance of his duties, to be disbursing agent for the payment of all moneys appropriated for the construction of public buildings authorized by law within the district of such officer.—(3 Mar., 1869, c. 122, s. 1, v. 15, pp. 301, 306.)

Employment of special disbursing agents by the Secretary of the Navy: See section 3614, Revised Statutes.

The Secretary of the Treasury can not designate an officer in the city of Washington to be a disbursing agent in another place under this section; because, not being attached to any district, the buildings for which his disbursements would be made would not be within his district; nor can a special disbursing agent be designated at a place where there is a collector of customs, in view of the provisions of section 3658, Revised Statutes (Bartlett v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 389; affirmed 197 U. S., 230.)

This law is general and without limitation as to place. It applies to "all moneys appropriated for the construction of public buildings authorized by law, within the district of such officer." (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 393.)

Additional pay prohibited.—An officer of the United States designated as disbursing agent within his district under this section, would not be entitled to any additional pay, because of the provisions of sections 1764, 1765, Revised Statutes. (Bartlett v. U. S., 197 U. S., 234.)

Sec. 260. [Reports upon appropriations for Departments of War and Navy.] The Secretary of the Treasury shall lay before Congress at the commencement of each regular session, accompanying his annual statement of the public expenditure, the reports which may be made to him by the Auditors charged with the examination of the accounts of the Department of War and the Department of the Navy, respectively, showing the application of the money appropriated for those Departments for the preceding year.—(3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, s. 6, v. 3, p. 367.)

By act of June 19, 1878 (20 Stat., 167) it was provided: "That from and after the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to Congress annually a tabular statement showing in detail the receipts and expenditures in the naval service under each appropriation, as made up and determined by the proper officers of the Treasury Department, upon the accounts of disbursing officers rendered for settlement. Sec. 2. There shall be appended to this statement an account of balances in the hands of disbursing agents at the close of each fiscal year, and a report of any amounts lost or unaccounted for by vouchers."

Sec. 264. [Report of Coast Survey expenditures.] The Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress annually the number and names of the persons employed during the last preceding fiscal year upon the Coast Survey and business connected therewith; the amount of compensation of every kind respectively paid them, for what purpose, and the length of time employed; and shall report a full statement of all other expenditures made under the direction of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.—(3 Mar., 1853, c. 97, s. 3, v. 10, p. 209; 15 Aug., 1876, c. 287, v. 19, p. 156.)

The Coast and Geodetic Survey was transferred from the Treasury Department to the Department of Commerce and Labor by acts of February 14, 1903 (32 Stat., 826), and March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. 1082). The name of the Department of Commerce and Labor was changed to Department of Commerce by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 736). Transfer to the War or Navy Department, in time of national emergency, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, was authorized by act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87). The President was authorized to employ public vessels in Coast Survey by section 4686, Revised Statutes.

Employment of Navy officers in Coast Survey was provided for by sections 4684 and 4687, Revised Statutes.

Employment of enlisted men of the Navy in the Coast Survey was authorized by annual appropriations under "Pay of the Navy" prior to act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 684). See Comp. Dec., Oct. 27, 1910 (116 S. and A. Memo., 1595); and file 3809-434, Nov. 17, 1914.

Officers of the Navy are entitled to sea pay while attached to and serving on board any ship in commission under the control of the Coast Survey. (Art. R-4405 (1), Navy Regs., 1913.)

Officers of the Navy ordered to report by letter to the Secretary of Commerce for duty in the Coast Survey, are entitled to shore pay from the date they so report. (Art. R-4407 (4), Navy Regs., 1913.)

Members of the Naval Hospital Corps were required to perform all necessary hospital and ambulance service in vessels of the Coast Survey by act of June 17, 1898 (30 Stat., 475), superseded by other provisions contained in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573); see also art. I-3261, Naval Instructions, 1913.

Extra allowance for subsistence of officers and men of the Navy employed in Coast Survey was authorized by section 4688, Revised Statutes, which was amended by acts of August 4, 1886 (24 Stat., 233), and March 3, 1887 (24 Stat., 521), prohibiting allowance for subsistence to Navy officers attached to Coast and Geodetic Survey. Further amendment was contained in acts of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 952), and August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 382), authorizing allowance for subsistence to detailed Navy officers, detached to do work away from their vessels under circumstances involving extra expenditures.

Annual reports were required of Coast Survey by section 4690, Revised Statutes; provisions for printing and distribution of reports were contained in acts of January 12, 1895 (28 Stat., 613), and April 20, 1896 (29 Stat., 471).

Sec. 266. [Quarterly publication of receipts and expenditures.] The Secretary of the Treasury, at the expiration of thirty days from the end of each quarter, shall cause to be published in some newspaper at the seat of government a statement of the whole receipts of such quarter, specifying the amount received from customs, from public lands, and from miscellaneous sources, and, also, the whole amount of payments made during the said quarter, specifying the general head of appropriation, whether for the civil list, the Army, the Navy, Indian Affairs, fortifications, or pensions.—(17 June, 1844, c. 105, s. 6, v. 5, p. 696.)

CHAPTER THREE.

THE COMPTROLLERS.

[FOR LAWS IN EFFECT MARCH 4, 1921, WITH REFERENCE TO THE POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY AND THE AUDITOR FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT, SEE ACT OF JULY 31, 1894 (28 STAT., 205). SECTION 9 OF SAID ACT (28 STAT., 208) PROVIDED THAT "THIS ACT, IN SO FAR AS IT RELATES TO THE FIRST COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY AND THE SEVERAL AUDITORS AND DEPUTY AUDITORS OF THE TREASURY, SHALL BE HELD AND CONSTRUED TO OPERATE MERELY AS CHANGING THEIR DESIGNATION AND AS ADDING TO AND MODIFYING THEIR DUTIES AND POWERS, AND NOT AS CREATING NEW OFFICERS."]

Sec. 268. [Comptrollers.] There shall be in the Department of the Treasury a First Comptroller and a Second Comptroller, each of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of five thousand dollars a year.—(2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, s. 1, v. 1, p. 65; 3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, s. 3, v. 3, p. 366; 18 May, 1872, c. 172, s. 1, v. 17, p. 127; 3 Mar., 1875, c. 130, s. 2, v. 18, p. 396.)

For modification of this section see act of July 31, 1894, section 4 (28 Stat., 206), which abolished the office of Second Comptroller and changed the designation of the First Comptroller to Comptroller of the Treasury.

Sec. 269. [Duties of First Comptroller. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 269. It shall be the duty of the First Comptroller:

"First. To examine all accounts settled by the First Auditor, except those relating to receipts from customs, and all accounts settled by the Fifth Auditor, and by the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, and to certify the balances arising thereon to the Register.

"Second. To superintend the adjustment and preservation of the public accounts subject to his revision.

"Third. To countersign all warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury, which shall be warranted by law.

"Fourth. To superintend the recovery of all debts certified by him to be due to the United States, and for that purpose to direct all such suits and legal proceedings, and to take such measures as may be authorized by law, and are adapted to enforce prompt payment thereof." [See § 1660.]—(2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, s. 3, v. 1, p. 66; 3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, ss. 8, 10, v. 3, p. 367; 3 Mar., 1849, c. 108, s. 12, v. 9, p. 396; Neilson v. Lagow, 12 How., 98.)

It was expressly repealed by act of July 31, 1894, section 11 (28 Stat., 209); the designation of the First Comptroller was changed to Comptroller of the Treasury by section 4 of the same act (28 Stat., 206).

Sec. 271. [Power to direct settlement of accounts. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 271. The First Comptroller, in every case where, in his opinion, further delays would be injurious to the United States, shall direct the First and Fifth Auditors of the Treasury forthwith to audit and settle any particular account which such officers may be authorized to audit and settle, and to report such settlement for revision and final decision by the First Comptroller."—(3 Mar., 1809, c. 28, s. 2, v. 2, p. 536.)

It was superseded by act of July 31, 1894, section 6 (28 Stat., 206), which authorized the Comptroller of the Treasury to direct any of the Auditors to audit and settle any particular account.

Sec. 272. [Report of officers failing to make settlement. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 272. The First Comptroller shall make an annual report to Congress of such officers as shall have failed to make settlement of their accounts for the preceding fiscal year, within the year, or within such further time as may have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for such settlement." [See §§ 195, 196.]—(3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, s. 13, v. 3, p. 368.)

It was expressly repealed by act of July 31, 1894, section 12 (28 Stat., 209). Provision for annual report to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, of officers delinquent in rendering accounts, is contained in act of May 28, 1896, section 4 (29 Stat., 179).

Sec. 273. [Duties of Second Comptroller. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 273. It shall be the duty of the Second Comptroller:

"First. To examine all accounts settled by the Second, Third, and Fourth Auditors, and certify the balances arising thereon to the Secretary of the Department in which the expenditure has been incurred.

"Second. To countersign all warrants drawn by the Secretaries of War and of the Navy, which shall be warranted by law. [See § 3673.]

"Third. To report to the Secretaries of War and of the Navy the official forms to be issued in the different offices for disbursing the public money in those Departments, and the manner and form of keeping and stating the accounts of the persons employed therein.

"Fourth. To superintend the preservation of the public accounts subject to his revision."—(3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, s. 9, v. 3, p. 367; 7 May, 1822, c. 90, s. 3, v. 3, p. 689.)

It was expressly repealed by act of July 31, 1894, section 7 (28 Stat., 206).

Sec. 274. [Arrears of pay due deceased seamen.] The Second Comptroller may prescribe rules to govern the payment of arrears of pay due to any petty officer, seaman, or other person not an officer, on board any vessel in the employ of the United States, which has been sunk or destroyed, in case of the death of such petty officer, seaman, or person, to the person designated by law to receive the same.—(4 July, 1864, c. 248, s. 3, v. 13, p. 390.)

The duties of the Second Comptroller were transferred to the Comptroller of the Treasury by act of July 31, 1894, section 4 (28 Stat., 205).

The manner of settling accounts of deceased officers and enlisted men in the Navy where the amount due is less than $500, is provided for by act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 373).

Disposition of pensions and other moneys due deceased beneficiaries of Naval Home is provided for by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 398).

Payment of pension money in case of death of pensioners in Government Hospital for the Insane is provided for by section 4839, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 2, 1909 (35 Stat., 592).

Payment in case of death of persons in the Navy, entitled to reimbursement for losses at sea, was provided for by section 289, Revised Statutes, repealed by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 390).

Disposition of money and other effects of deceased persons in the naval service is regulated by act of March 29, 1918 (40 Stat., 499).

Sec. 275. [Signing bounty certificates. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 275. The Second Comptroller may detail one clerk to sign, in the place of the Comptroller, all certificates and papers issued under any provisions of law relating to bounties; but the Comptroller shall be responsible for the official acts of such clerk."—(19 Mar., 1868, c. 31, s. 4, v. 15, p. 44.)

It was expressly repealed by act of July 31, 1894, section 7 (28 Stat., 206).

CHAPTER FOUR.

THE AUDITORS.

[FOR LAWS IN EFFECT MARCH 4, 1921, WITH REFERENCE TO THE POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY AND AUDITOR FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT, SEE ACT OF JULY 31, 1894 (28 STAT., 205). SECTION 9 OF SAID ACT (28 STAT., 208) PROVIDED THAT "THIS ACT, IN SO FAR AS IT RELATES TO THE FIRST COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY AND THE SEVERAL AUDITORS AND DEPUTY AUDITORS OF THE TREASURY, SHALL BE HELD AND CONSTRUED TO OPERATE MERELY AS CHANGING THEIR DESIGNATION AND AS ADDING TO AND MODIFYING THEIR DUTIES AND POWERS, AND NOT AS CREATING NEW OFFICERS. ALL LAWS NOT INCONSISTENT WITH THIS ACT, RELATING TO THE AUDITORS OF THE TREASURY IN CONNECTION WITH ANY MATTER, SHALL BE UNDERSTOOD IN EACH CASE TO RELATE TO THE AUDITOR TO WHOM THIS ACT ASSIGNS THE BUSINESS OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OR OTHER ESTABLISHMENT CONCERNED IN THAT MATTER."]

Sec. 276. [Auditors.] There shall be connected with the Department of the Treasury six auditors of accounts, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be known as the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Auditors, respectively. Each Auditor is entitled to a salary of four thousand dollars a year.—(2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, s. 1, v. 1, p. 65; 3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, ss. 3, 15, v. 3, pp. 366, 368; 2 July, 1836, c. 270, s. 8, v. 5, p. 81; Ibid., s. 44, p. 89; 8 June, 1872, c. 335, s. 21, v. 17, p. 287; 2 Mar., 1799, c. 38, s. 1, v. 1, p. 729; 3 Mar., 1873, c. 226, s. 3, v. 17, p. 508; 3 Mar., 1875, c. 130, s. 2, v. 18, p. 397.)

The designation of the Auditors was altered by act of July 31, 1894, section 3 (28 Stat., 205), which changed the title of "Fourth Au-	ditor" to "Auditor for the Navy Department."

Sec. 277. [Duties of Auditors.] The duties of the auditors shall be as follows:

* * * * * *

Fifth. The Fourth Auditor shall receive and examine all accounts accruing in the Navy Department or relative thereto, and all accounts relating to Navy pensions; and, after examination of such accounts, he shall certify the balances, and shall transmit such accounts, with the vouchers and certificate, to the Second Comptroller for his decision thereon.

* * * * * *

The duties of the Auditor for the Navy Department, designated in the above section as Fourth Auditor, are prescribed by act of July 31, 1894, section 7 (28 Stat., 207). The	duties of the Second Comptroller were transferred to the Comptroller of the Treasury by section 4 of the same act (28 Stat., 205).
--	--

Sec. 283. [Accounts of Departments of War and the Navy.] The Auditors charged with the examination of the accounts of the Departments of War and of the Navy, shall keep all accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the public money in regard to those Departments, and of all debts due to the United States on moneys advanced relative to those Departments; shall receive from the Second Comptroller the accounts which shall have been finally adjusted, and shall preserve such accounts, with their vouchers and certificates, and record all requisitions drawn by the Secretaries of those Departments, the examination of the accounts of which has been assigned to them. They shall annually, on the first Monday in November, severally report to the Secretary of the Treasury the application of the money appropriated for the Department of War and the Department of the Navy, and they shall make such reports on the business assigned to them as the Secretaries of those Departments may deem necessary and require.—(3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, ss. 5, 6, v. 3, p. 367.)

So much of this section as requires accounts to be kept by certain auditors was repealed by act of July 31, 1894, section 10 (28 Stat., 208), which provides that all accounts of receipts and expenditures of public money, except those relating to the postal revenues and expenditures therefrom, shall be kept in the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Treasury Department.

The office of Second Comptroller was abolished and his duties transferred to the Comptroller of the Treasury by section 4, act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 205).

Sec. 284. [Accounts of pay officer of lost vessel.] In every case of the loss or capture of a vessel belonging to the Navy of the United States, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, are authorized, in the settlement of the accounts of the [paymaster] [purser] of such vessel, to credit him with such portion of the amount of the provisions, clothing, small stores, and money, with which he stands charged on the books of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, as they shall be satisfied was inevitably lost by such capture or loss of a public vessel; and such purser shall be fully exonerated by such credit from all liability on account of the provisions, clothing, small stores, and money so proved to have been captured or lost.—(3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 6, v. 9, p. 173; 18 Feb., 1875, c. 80, v. 18, p. 317.)

See note to section 287, Revised Statutes.

The title "Fourth Auditor of the Treasury" was changed to "Auditor for the Navy Department" by act of July 31, 1894, section 3 (28 Stat., 205).

By the Judicial Code, March 3, 1911, sections 145, 147 (36 Stat., 1136, 1137), it is provided that the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to relieve any disbursing officer of responsibility on account of loss, by capture or otherwise while in the line of his duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records or papers in his charge, where such loss occurred without fault or negligence on the part of the officer, but he has been held responsible therefor. ["Capture or otherwise" means not only loss by capture and kindred ways, under the rule of ejusdem generis, but loss occurring in any other way while the officer was in line of duty and free from fault. (Stevens v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 344.)]

"In case of fire or shipwreck, it shall be the special duty of every officer of the Pay Corps to secure and preserve the accounts of officers and men, the public money, and such other public papers and property, in the order of their value, as circumstances permit." (Art. R-3004 (1), Navy Regs., 1913.)

Sec. 285. [Disbursements by order of commanding officer.] Every disbursement of public moneys, or disposal of public stores, made by a disbursing officer pursuant to an order of any commanding officer of the Navy, shall be allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in the settlement of the accounts of the officer, upon satisfactory evidence of the making of such order, and of the payment of money or disposal of stores in conformity with it; and the commanding officer by whose order such disbursement or disposal was made, shall be held accountable for the same.—(3 Mar., 1849, Res. No. 17, s. 2, v. 19, p. 419. [This reference is in error in the Revised Statutes. Should be "v. 9, p. 419."])

Order of Secretary of the Navy.—An order by the Secretary of the Navy to an officer has been held to be within this section: If money is disbursed by an officer of the Navy in faithful compliance with the Secretary's order, under this law the Secretary and not the officer must account and answer to the United States. (Opinion of Dunlop, Circuit Judge, in U. S. v. Jones, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15493a, p. 653.) [In this case, on appeal to the Supreme Court, it was argued by the Attorney General that this law applies only to disbursements made "in pursuance of an order from an officer in command." For the defendant, it was argued that this law "requires the disbursement to be allowed and the commanding officer to be held responsible. In this case it would be the President." The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Circuit Court, which was for the defendant, without referring to this statute. (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92.) Accordingly, the case must be deemed an authority for the proposition that the order of the Secretary of the Navy was the order of defendant's "commanding officer of the Navy" within the meaning of section 285, Revised Statutes. (File 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915, citing Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 557; Op. Atty. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611.)

Regulations adopted under this section.—This section does not authorize an advance of public money by the pay officer to the commanding officer or to any other person by his order. The disbursement presupposes an indebtedness, and whether the objects for which the indebtedness accrued were sanctioned or not by law or regulation, the pay officer would be entitled to a credit for payment therefor, when made by order of the commanding officer; but the disbursement must be for some service or article furnished in accordance with law. (Art. R-4310 (2), Navy Regs., 1913.)

When ordered by his commanding officer to make an expenditure of money or stores which the pay officer believes to be illegal or contrary to regulations, the latter shall state in writing the grounds on which he objects to obeying the order, and request that the order be reiterated in writing. On receipt of such order, the expenditure shall be made. (Art. R-4309, Navy Regs., 1913.)

The commanding officer will be held accountable by the Navy Department for every expenditure of funds or property made by his authority; but in order to charge a commanding officer with pecuniary responsibility for a payment made by his order, it is necessary that there should be a compliance with the preceding paragraph, for in the absence of such written order from the commanding officer, after a statement of objections has been duly made, the pay officer and not the commanding officer will be held responsible. (Art. R-4310 (3) Navy Regs., 1913.)

Regulations must be complied with.—In order to charge a commanding officer of the Navy with a payment made by his order under this section, it is necessary that there should be a compliance with the Navy regulation as to an order in writing. This requirement is eminently proper and fair. (8 Comp. Dec., 756; 1 S. and A. Memo., June 1, 1902, p. 28.)

Neither the regulation nor the Comptroller's ruling alters fundamentally the scope of this section. The regulation relates merely to the responsibility of the commanding officer, and has nothing to do with the position of the paying officer; it also presupposes a belief on the part of the latter that the expenditure is illegal; it does not apply to any case in which the pay officer, in good faith, renders his obedience. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611.)

A pay officer making a payment assumes responsibility for its accuracy. Therefore, in withholding payment until the receipt of full information necessary to a correct settlement, the paymaster is doing no more than his duty and is acting strictly within his authority. If the commanding officer feels satisfied that a payment should be made in advance of the receipt of full information, he is at liberty to order said payment, assuming the responsibility therefor in accordance with section 285, Revised Statutes. (3 Comp. Dec., 449.)

Responsibility of pay officer.—Whenever Congress has desired to relieve disbursing officers from liability for payments made on the authority of others, it has had no difficulty in finding language to express that intent. Examples of this are found in sections 285 and 846, Revised Statutes; act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat., 419); and paragraph 6 of section 8, act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 208). Under the last-mentioned act, general provision has been made by which disbursing officers can avoid responsibility by applying to the Comptroller of the Treasury for an advance decision in cases where they may have doubts. The enactment of the special provisions above mentioned is a clear indication that Congress intended that the general rules of accounting should apply in other cases, upon the well-known rule of construction, expressio unius est exclusio alterius [the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another]. (7 Comp. Dec., 271.)

The party to whom payment has not been made by a disbursing officer may present his demand, or claim, to such disbursing officer's superior, who, if he deems the claim to be a just one, may require the subordinate to make the payment. But in such a case, the pay officer is no longer responsible financially; the order of his superior has relieved him from danger of checkage, and the disallowance, if any, would fall upon the superior. In such cases it is not the accounting officers who have power to order payment, but the disbursing officer's superior. (File 26543-66, Sept. 8, 1911.)

Congress never intended that a Secretary of War should order a paymaster or quartermaster to make a payment, and then upon the requisition of the accounting officers of the Treasury, punish the officer for having made it by stopping his pay. (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 215.)

A disbursing officer is not responsible for illegal payments made by him in good faith and in accordance with the certificate of another officer as to the facts. An appropriation being under the control of the head of a department it is within the latter's power to prescribe rules governing the disbursing agent in making disbursements therefrom. (9 Comp. Dec., 545; see also, Maj. Smith's case, 23 Ct. Cls., 452; 21 Comp. Dec., 314; Comp. Dec., Nov. 21, 1914, file 26254-1672; 21 Comp. Dec., 357, file 26254-1451:5, Oct. 31, 1914; file 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915. But see Comp. Dec., Mar. 26, 1914, App. No. 23482, file 26254-1451:2; Comp. Dec., Oct. 9, 1914, App. No. 23482, file 26254-1451:12; 21 Comp. Dec. 245, reversed 21 Comp. Dec., 357.)

A Navy regulation (art. R-3991, 1913) requiring pay officers to disburse money under certain contingencies is an order of the Secretary of the Navy, and as such protects the pay officer from responsibility and is conclusive upon the accounting officers. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611, reversing 21 Comp. Dec., 554, 357, 245; see also file 26254-1451:11.)

Sec. 286. [Fixing date of loss of missing vessels.] The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, in settling the accounts of seamen, and others, not officers, borne on the books of any vessel in the Navy which shall have been wrecked, or which shall have been unheard from so long that her wreck may be presumed, or which shall have been destroyed or lost with the rolls and papers necessary to a regular and exact settlement of such accounts, to fix a day when such wreck, destruction, or loss shall be deemed to have occurred.—(4 July, 1864, c. 248, s. 1, v. 13, p. 389.)

The Secretary of the Navy issued orders on March 15, 1910, declaring the U. S. S. Nina to have been lost, and that the commanding officer and enlisted men attached to said vessel "will be regarded as having died on this date." (File 7054—136.)

Jurisdiction of accounting officers.—Under this section, the determination by the Secretary of the Navy of the day when the wreck, destruction, or loss shall be deemed to have occurred is binding upon the accounting officers of the Treasury in settling the accounts of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of the vessel. (32 Op. Atty. Gen., 427, file 26254—3048:2; contra, 26 Comp. Dec., 336.)

All presumptions of death, other than the legal presumption of death after seven years' unexplained absence, should be disregarded unless the evidence leaves no conclusion reasonable other than that, under the known facts, death must have resulted. Where it is possible that the men may have been picked up by a sailing vessel, payment of death gratuity under the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), should not be made to the designated beneficiaries of such men until further time has elapsed without their being heard from. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 15, 1910, file 26254—399, 109

S. and A. Memo., 1352.) In the same case, on January 20, 1911, nothing further having been heard from the men supposed to have been drowned by the capsizing of their boat, the Comptroller held that "the presumption of the existence of life for seven years after a person was last heard from, is not an absolute presumption, but is a disputable one, and is subject to be controlled by facts and circumstances and other legitimate evidence;" that so long a time had elapsed that, if the men had been picked up by a passing vessel, they doubtless would have been heard from; and it is improbable that they all agreed to desert. Accordingly, held that the men in question were drowned on November 27, 1909, and payment of death gratuity should be made. (File 26254—399:1; see also 17 Comp. Dec., 528; compare Dig. Comp. Dec. (1902), p. 144.)

"If I am to draw a conclusion at all, I should infer that a person in the position of a sergeant [U. S. Marine Corps] having nothing against his character would not desert, and that he died while on leave, and so was not heard of by the authorities." (In re Phené's Trusts, L. R. 5 ch. 139; Thayer's Cases on Evidence, 57.)

"Vessel" defined.—See section 3, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 287. [Accounts of seamen on lost vessel.] The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized, in settling the accounts of the petty officers, seamen, and others, not officers, on board of any vessel in the employ of the United States, which by any casualty, or in action with the enemy, has been or may be sunk or otherwise destroyed, together with the rolls and papers necessary to the exact ascertainment of the several accounts of the same at the date of such loss, to assume the last quarterly return of the paymaster of any such vessel as the basis for the computation of the subsequent credits to those on board, to the date of such loss, if there be no official evidence to the contrary. Where such quarterly return has, from any cause, not been made, the accounting officers are authorized to adjust and settle such accounts on principles of equity and justice.—(4 July, 1864, c. 948, s. 2, v. 13, p. 390.)

See note to section 284, Revised Statutes.

The Navy Regulations, 1913, contain the following article:

"2042. (1) In case of the loss of the ship, her commanding officer shall remain by her with officers and crew as long as necessary and save as much Government property as possible. Every reasonable effort shall be made to save the log book, muster roll, accounts of officers and crew, and other valuable papers.

"(2) If it becomes necessary to abandon the ship, he should be the last person to leave her.

"(3) He shall make a report of the circumstances to the Secretary of the Navy as soon as possible and, if wrecked within the United States, shall repair to the nearest naval station with the crew of the ship.

"(4) He shall, if in a foreign country, lose no time, after making all efforts to save property, in returning with the officers and crew to the fleet or squadron to which they belong or, if acting singly, to the United States. He shall take steps for the preservation of the Government property saved, until it shall be disposed of in such manner as the department may direct.

"(5) In the event of the loss of accounts of any person in the Navy, caused by wreck or otherwise, he shall proceed in accordance with article I-4924."

The following article is from Naval Instructions, 1913:

"4924. In the event of the loss of accounts occurring from the loss or capture of a ship of the Navy, the pay officer, on receiving a written order from the commanding officer, shall open other accounts with the survivors, from the date of the disaster, giving to each person the rating he held at the time the accounts were lost; and the accounts so made out shall accompany the survivors on their transfer to a ship or station, the pay officer of which is to govern himself by these accounts in making payments or issues, until he receives further instructions from the Navy Department or the Auditor for the Navy Department."

Sec. 288. [Compensation for personal effects lost. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"The proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department are authorized, in settling the accounts of the petty officers, seamen, and others, not officers, on board of any vessel in the employ of the United States, which, by any casualty, or in action with the enemy, has been or may be sunk or otherwise destroyed, to allow and pay to each person, not an officer, employed on the vessel so sunk or destroyed, and whose personal effects have been lost, a sum not exceeding sixty dollars, as compensation for the loss of his personal effects."—(4 July, 1864, c. 248, s. 2, v. 13, p. 390.)

It was repealed by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 390).

See note to section 290, Revised Statutes.

A permanent annual appropriation is made by section 3689, Revised Statutes, for "indemnity to seamen and marines for lost clothing: To allow and pay to each person, not an officer, employed on a vessel of the United States sunk or otherwise destroyed, and whose personal effects have been lost, a sum not exceeding $60. In the event of the death of the person, this sum is to be paid to his proper legal representatives."

Sec. 289. [Payment in case of death. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"In case of the death of any such petty officer, seaman, or other person, not an officer, such payment shall be made to the widow, child or children, father, mother, or brothers and sisters jointly, following that order of preference; such credits and gratuity to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."—(4 July, 1864, c. 248, s. 3, v. 13, p. 390.)

It was repealed by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 390).

See notes to sections 286, 288, and 290, Revised Statutes.

The manner of settling accounts of deceased officers and enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps, where the amount due is less than $500, is provided for by act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 373).

Payment of arrears due deceased enlisted men was provided for by section 274, Revised Statutes.

Payment of pension money in case of death of pensioners in Government Hospital for the Insane is provided for by section 4839, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 2, 1909 (35 Stat., 592).

Disposition of pensions and other moneys due deceased beneficiaries of Naval Home is provided for by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 398).

Disposition of money and effects of deceased persons in the naval service is regulated by act of March 29, 1918 (40 Stat., 499). See also 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494.

Sec. 290. [Allowance to officers for personal effects lost. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"In case any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps on board a vessel in the employ of the United States which, by any casualty, or in action with the enemy, at any time since the nineteenth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, has been or may be sunk or destroyed, shall thereby have lost his personal effects, without negligence or want of skill or foresight on his part, the proper accounting officers are authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to allow to such officer a sum not exceeding the amount of his seapay for one month as compensation for such loss. But the accounting officers shall in all cases require a schedule and certificate from the officer making the claim for effects so lost."—(6 April, 1866, c. 27, s. 1, v. 14, p. 14.)

It was repealed by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 390), which contained new and complete provisions on the subject.

Losses in time of peace.—By act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 962), provision was made for adjustment of losses of officers and men in the naval service, in time of peace, due to shipwreck or other marine disaster, limiting reimbursement to such articles of personal property as are required by the Navy Regulations, and requiring all claims to be submitted within two years from the occurrence of the loss; and stipulating that reimbursement shall be based on value of articles at the time of loss. Under this act it was made the duty of the accounting officers of the Treasury to determine the value of the property so lost, and the Secretary of the Treasury was required to certify all such losses to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the commencement of each regular session, who should lay same before Congress for consideration.

This act was repealed and new provisions substituted therefor by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 390).

Destruction of U. S. S. "Maine."—By act March 30, 1898 (30 Stat. 346), provision was made for relief of sufferers by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine, as follows:

"That to reimburse the survivors of the officers and crew of the United States steamer Maine, destroyed by an explosion in the harbor of Havana, Cuba, on the fifteenth day of February, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, for losses incurred by them, respectively, in the destruction of said vessel, there shall be paid to each of said survivors, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to the losses so sustained by them: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and affidavit from each person making a claim under this act, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and reimbursement shall be made for such articles of clothing, outfit, and for such personal effects only as are of a character and value and in quantity suitable and appropriate to the rank or rating and duty of the person by whom the claim is made: Provided further, That in no case shall the aggregate sum allowed for such losses exceed the amount of twelve months' sea pay (without rations) of the grade or rating held by such person at the time the losses were incurred.

"SEC. 2. That the widow, child, or children, and in case there be not such, that the parent or parents, and if there be no parent, the brothers and sisters, of the officers, enlisted men, and others who were lost in the destruction of said vessel, or who have died or who may die within one year from date of the disaster in consequence of injuries received in the destruction of said vessel, shall be entitled to and shall receive, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to wit: The relative, in the order named, of the persons heretofore referred to, a sum equal to twelve months' sea pay of the grade or rating of each person deceased as aforesaid: Provided, That the legal representatives of the deceased persons heretofore referred to shall also be paid from the Treasury of the United States any arrears of pay due the deceased at the time of their death: Provided further, That if any person who shall receive reimbursement under this act, for losses incurred in said disaster, shall die within the year in consequence of injuries incurred in the destruction of said vessel, the amount so paid shall be deducted from the amount of twelve months' sea pay (without rations) allowed to such beneficiary by virtue of this act of relief.

"SEC. 3. That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to continue for a period of three months any allotments which may have been made in favor of any relatives of the degrees hereinbefore enumerated by any of the officers and men attached to the United States ship Maine who lost their lives in or in consequence of the disaster to that vessel: Provided, That the amount of the allotments so continued shall be deducted from the amount of twelve months' sea pay allowed to such beneficiaries by virtue of this act for their relief.

"SEC. 4. That the relief granted by the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of any and all claims whatever against the United States on account of losses or death by the destruction of the United States steamer Maine, and any claim against the United States which shall be presented and acted upon under the authority of this act shall be held to be finally determined and shall not in any manner thereafter be reopened, reconsidered, supplemented nor be subject to appeal in any form; and the method of presenting and establishing said claims heretofore presented shall be followed in lieu of those prescribed by acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted relating to the presentation and allowance of similar claims: Provided, That nothing herein shall affect the right of any of the beneficiaries under this act to any pension to which they may be entitled under existing law after the expiration of one year from said fifteenth day of February, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight.

"SEC. 5. That no claims shall be allowed under the provisions of this act which shall not be presented within two years after the date of its passage.

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized, whenever in his discretion it may be deemed practicable and expedient, to cause the remains of all or any of those who perished in consequence of said disaster to be removed to the United States cemetery at Arlington: Provided, That the relatives of any of such deceased officers and others mentioned in this act who prefer that the remains of such be taken to their homes within the United States shall have such privilege extended to them, and the expense thereof shall be borne by the United States; and the sum of ten thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this section."

Fires at Washington Navy Yard.—The naval appropriation act, May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 388), contained the following clause:

"To reimburse the enlisted men of the United States Marine Corps who incurred loss of clothing by the fires which occurred at the navy-yard, Washington, District of Columbia, on the twenty-second and twenty-ninth days of April, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, fifty-one dollars and seventy-three cents: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and certificate from each person making a claim under this act."

Wreck of U. S. S. "Charleston."—By act of February 7, 1903 (32 Stat., 804), provision was made for reimbursement of losses sustained in the wreck of the U. S. S. Charleston, as follows:

"That to reimburse the officers and crew of the United States steamship Charleston, destroyed on a coral reef off Camiguin Island, in the Philippines, November second, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, for losses incurred by them, respectively, in the destruction of said vessel, there shall be paid to each of said officers and crew or to the personal representatives of any which may be deceased, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to the losses so sustained by them: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and certificate from each person making a claim under this act, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, who may require other satisfactory proof of said losses, and reimbursements shall be made for such losses as are of a character and value suitable and appropriate to the rank, rating, or duty of the person suffering such loss: Provided, however, That in no case shall the aggregate sum allowed any claimant or person for such loss exceed the value of such articles of personal property as were required by the United States Naval Regulations in force at the time of such loss, and there shall be deducted therefrom any sum heretofore paid any of them under section two hundred and ninety of the Revised Statutes.

"Sec. 2. That the relief granted by the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of any and all claims whatever against the United States on account of losses by the destruction of the United States steamship Charleston, and any claim which shall be presented and acted upon under the authority of this act shall be held to be finally determined, and shall not in any manner thereafter be reopened, reconsidered, supplemented, nor be subject to appeal in any form.

"Sec. 3. That no claim for losses by reason of the destruction of said vessel not heretofore presented shall be allowed under the provisions of this act which shall not be presented within two years after the date of its passage.

"Sec. 4. That any amounts that have been paid under sections two hundred and eighty-eight, two hundred and eighty-nine, and two hundred and ninety of the Revised Statutes shall be deducted in the settlement of all claims under this act."

San Francisco fire.—The naval appropriation act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), contained the following:

"To reimburse officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who were on duty under orders in San Francisco during the recent fire in that city for losses of clothing and other personal effects sustained by them through said fire, seven thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That such reimbursement shall be made under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and upon vouchers to be approved by him in each case."

Effects destroyed to prevent spread of disease.—The Naval Instructions, 1913, contain the following provisions:

"4750. (1) Should it become necessary to destroy clothing or other personal effects of officers or men to prevent the spread of disease, the commandant of the station or commanding officer of the ship shall direct a survey to be held on the articles, and the report, containing a list of the articles, with an estimate of their value, approved by him, shall be transmitted to the Navy Department. The surveying officer shall base his estimate on the actual value of the articles destroyed and not on the original cost of the articles.

"(2) No issue shall be made to persons in lieu of their effects so destroyed. They can only be reimbursed for such loss by certificate from the Treasury Department after the approval of the report of survey by the Secretary of the Navy."

The annual deficiency appropriation acts contain appropriations under "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the Navy Department," for payment of claims "for destruction of clothing and bedding for sanitary reasons," certified to Congress under section 2, act of July 7, 1884 (23 Stat., 254), which reads in part as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the commencement of each session of Congress, report the amount due each claimant whose claim has been allowed in whole or in part to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the presiding officer of the Senate, who shall lay the same before their respective Houses for consideration."

In the Army the Secretary of War is authorized to order gratuitous issues of clothing to soldiers who have had contagious diseases, and to hospital attendants who have nursed them, to replace any articles of their clothing destroyed by order of the proper medical officers to prevent contagion. (Sec. 1298, R. S.; 4 Comp. Dec., 26; see also act June 30, 1902, 32 Stat., 517.)

Where private property is destroyed by the Government for its own benefit, with the assent of the owner, a contract is implied to make compensation for its value. (7 Comp. Dec., 767.)

Payment of the value of a house belonging to an Indian and located on an Indian reservation, which was destroyed by officers of the Government to prevent the spread of disease, may be made from an appropriation providing for the support and civilization of Indians. (12 MSS. Comp. Dec., 1098.)

Reimbursement for articles of clothing belonging to Government employees, destroyed to prevent the spread of smallpox, may fairly be considered as coming within the scope of medical attendance to which such employees were entitled. (12 MSS., Comp. Dec. 462. See Comp. Dig., p. 610.)

New statutory provisions superseding prior laws and providing generally for the reimbursement of persons in the naval service for property lost or destroyed in such service, are contained in the act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 389.)

CLAIMS FOR REIMBURSEMENT.

Jurisdiction was not conferred upon the Court of Claims by the act of March 2, 1895, and suit for such losses was not authorized under that act. (Harlee v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 342; see also U. S. v. Babcock, 250 U. S., 328.)

Marine Corps.—Officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps are not entitled to reimbursement for loss of personal effects in accordance with laws relating to the Army; but are entitled to such reimbursement under the same circumstances as if they were in the Navy proper. (3 Comp. Dec., 659; Harlee v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 342; compare 4 Comp. Dec., 26.)

Not a gratuity.—The amount to which an officer or enlisted man is entitled under the law for private property lost or destroyed is by way of reimbursement, and is not a gratuity; and accordingly, where an officer died before receiving the amount due him for private property lost by the wreck of a vessel, held that such amount may be paid to the legal representatives of the deceased officer or to the persons entitled to take his personal property upon his decease. (8 Comp. Dec., 688.) [See note to section 289.]

Losses in time of war.—The act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 962), above noted, which provided for reimbursement for private property belonging to officers or enlisted men of the Navy, lost or destroyed by shipwreck or other marine disaster, and which further provided "that this act shall not apply to losses sustained in time of war," was not applicable to private property lost on the U. S. S. Charleston while operating with the land forces of the United States in the suppression of the local insurrection in the Philippine Islands on November 2, 1899. While the United States was not at war with any recognized power, nevertheless, held, for the purpose of this act (Mar. 2, 1895), a state of war existed as to all the military forces of the United States directly engaged in the suppression of said insurrection. However, in such cases reimbursement was allowed under sections 288-290, Revised Statutes. (7 Comp. Dec., 345; see also, 9 Comp. Dec., 527.) [Special provision was subsequently made by Congress for the relief of officers and crew of the Charleston, as shown by act above quoted.]

Prior laws enlarged by act of March 2, 1895.—Sections 288-290 provided for certain limited payments to officers and men, only when they were "on board a vessel in the employ of the United States." Under the act of March 2, 1895, payment was authorized in any case where the property was lost in the naval service by shipwreck or marine disaster, without regard to the character of the vessel the goods were on at the time of the loss. The claimant, however, was required to show that such loss was without fault or negligence on his part, unless the property was shipped in an unseaworthy vessel by order of an officer authorized to give such order, in which case such proof was not required. (2 Comp. Dec., 30.)

The act of March 2, 1895, was intended to be an enlargement of previous laws providing for the reimbursement of officers and seamen for property lost or destroyed in the naval service, and therefore was to be liberally construed. It appeared from this act that sections 288-290, Revised Statutes, were directly under the consideration of Congress at the time of its enactment. (2 Comp. Dec., 30; 1 Comp. Dec., 441.)

The act of March 2, 1895, authorized payment in the case of petty officers and seamen who died prior to the passage of the said act. It has several times been held that acts making provision for the payment of additional compensation or bounty are personal and for the benefit only of those living at the time the act takes effect, unless something therein clearly indicates that the intention of Congress was that others should receive the benefit of the provision. As section 289, Revised Statutes, provided for payment in the cases of persons, other than officers, who had died, and as the act of March 2, 1895, required any payment under section 289 to be deducted from the amount to be paid under the provisions of said act, an intention upon the part of Congress to make the act apply to petty officers, seamen, and others in the naval service, not officers, who were already dead when the act was passed, seems clear. Whether the act also applied to the cases of officers who had died before that date was not decided in this case. (1 Comp. Dec., 473.) [As to officers who die before receiving payment, see note above, "Not a gratuity."]

"Shipwreck or other marine disaster," within the meaning of the act of March 2, 1895, was intended to cover shipwreck or marine disaster to the ship itself, involving a total or partial destruction or casting away of the ship, and not such a temporary disaster as waves washing over the ship's decks or like misfortune necessarily incident to sea service. (1 Comp. Dec. 441; followed Comp. Dec., Apr. 25, 1911, App. No. 19972, file 26254-692.)

JURISDICTION, ACCOUNTING OFFICERS AND SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

See note to section 236, Revised Statutes, on general subject of jurisdiction of accounting officers and heads of executive departments.

Secretary's approval not conclusive.

In settlements under section 290, Revised Statutes, it was never regarded that the schedule and certificate of the officer, with the approval of the Secretary, were conclusive upon the accounting officers or relieved them from responsibility of making further investigations and disallowing any portion of a claim which to them seemed unwarranted by the law or the facts. (4 Comp. Dec., 590.)

Under the act of February 7, 1903, for reimbursing the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Charleston, an officer was not entitled to reimbursement of a greater amount than the aggregate value of the articles of personal property which were required by the naval regulations in force at the time of the loss, even though his claim for a greater amount had been approved by the Secretary of the Navy. (10 Comp. Dec., 456; see also Little v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 408.)

See act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 389), and see United States v. Babcock (250 U. S., 328).

Secretary's approval limits maximum amount to be allowed.—Under the act of March 30, 1898 (quoted above), providing that "the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and affidavit from each person making a claim" for losses incurred by them by the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine, "such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy," the approval by the Secretary of the Navy was not conclusive upon the accounting officers. The reasonable interpretation of the act was that the schedule was required to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy as a safeguard against the allowance of unjust and exorbitant claims, arising from the fact that the accounting officers, without the advice and approval of the Navy Department, were not in a position to judge so intelligently as to what articles are suitable and appropriate for an officer or enlisted man of the rank or rating and duty of the claimant. The effect was to put a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the accounting officers, and to preclude the allowance of anything not having the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, but leaving their jurisdiction unimpaired as to items and amounts approved by him. While, therefore, the schedule and affidavit of an officer making claim under this act (Mar. 30, 1898), when approved by the Secretary, made out on their face a prima facie claim as contemplated by the act, they were by no means conclusive upon the accounting officers except to limit their jurisdiction to a consideration of items and amounts so presented. The approval of the Secretary of the Navy was required by the law before the claim could be considered by the accounting officers, and while the Auditor might be justified in allowing a claim upon such approval of the Secretary of the Navy, the Auditor was not concluded thereby if in his judgment additional proof was necessary and proper to a fair and just adjudication of the claim. In reaching his conclusions, great weight should, of course, be given to the decision of the Secretary, both as to what articles were necessary and appropriate for the rank of the claimant, and also as to the value of such articles. But within the limitations imposed by the Secretary's approval, the claim should be settled in the same manner as other claims of a similar nature. (4 Comp. Dec., 587.)

[It will be noted that the act of June 29, 1906, above quoted, relative to the San Francisco fire, was broader in its terms than that considered in the Comptroller's decision last above cited. No question of jurisdiction arose under the San Francisco act, which provided that "reimbursement shall be made under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and upon vouchers to be approved by him in each case." Only one claim under this act was considered by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and was allowed as of course, the Comptroller saying: "The said claim was approved on August 27, 1907, by the Secretary of the Navy in the amount of $47.44. Upon this revision, therefore, the claimant will be allowed $47.44, the amount approved by the Secretary of the Navy." (Comp. Dec., Sept. 16, 1907, Appeal No. 12726, file 4753-95.)]

Accounting officers bound by naval regulations.—Under the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 962, above noted), the accounting officers were bound by the official statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation as to what articles were a part of the necessary outfit required by the regulations. While the number required by the regulations might be below that with which the men were usually provided, still no discretion lay in the accounting officers to go behind the regulations fixed by the naval authorities who were familiar with the needs of the men. (2 Comp. Dec., 150.)

LIMITATIONS UPON CLAIMS.

Value at date of loss.—In settling claims under the act of March 2, 1895 (above noted), it was held that the accounting officers must allow the actual value of private property at the date of the loss or destruction, when such actual value is proved by the claimant. As petty officers and seamen in the naval service are not required to procure their clothing and personal effects from the paymaster upon requisitions, they are not limited to the paymaster's issuing price, but may prove their claims by such evidence as is required to clearly establish the actual value of their property at the date of loss or destruction. In the absence of such proof, the "issuing price" may be accepted as a fair valuation. (2 Comp. Dec., 150.)

Articles required by regulations.—Officers and men presenting claims under the act of March 2, 1895 (above noted), could be reimbursed only for "such articles of personal property as are required by the U. S. Naval Regulations" both as to number and kind, and the accounting officers could not allow claims for articles in excess of the regulation requirements, which they were permitted to carry for their personal comfort or convenience. (2 Comp. Dec., 150; 1 Comp. Dec., 441.)

Articles not required by regulations but within limit of amount.—The act of February 7, 1903 (quoted above), did not limit reimbursement for losses on the Charleston to articles required by the regulations, but on the contrary permitted payment to be made for any article lost that was suitable and appropriate to the rank, rating, or duty of the person suffering such loss, though such article may not have been required by the regulations; but the whole amount which could be allowed was strictly limited to the total value of articles required by the Navy Regulations. To illustrate, if a special full dress suit was required, and it appeared that the officer did not lose such an article, the value of that article could be allowed him through reimbursement for the loss of some other article or articles which, while not required by the regulations, were nevertheless suitable to the rank or duty of the officer. It was possible under this law for an officer or enlisted man who had lost no article required by the regulations, to receive a large sum for the loss of other articles, but the sum allowed could be no greater than the total value of the articles required by the regulations. (Letter of Comptroller of the Treasury to the Secretary of the Navy, Nov. 5, 1903, Appeal No. 9569, file 9410, 2527, 1903; 1370-1903.)

What articles required by regulations.—An examination of the volume entitled "U. S. Navy Regulations" fails to disclose information as to what articles are required. Under these circumstances, not only have the Uniform Regulations been followed, but also, in order to ascertain what was required by the regulations of the Navy, an official itemized statement was obtained from the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, giving the character and number of such articles. If this statement could not be accepted, then it appears that there were in fact no Naval Regulations as contemplated in the act (Mar. 2, 1895). However, the expression "naval regulations" should be construed in accordance with the intention of Congress, and the manifest purpose of the act being to reimburse the officers and seamen for the loss of clothing required by the rules and regulations of the Navy, the statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, transmitted by the Secretary of the Navy, giving the number and character of the articles required by the regulations, must be treated as the best evidence of what was required by the U. S. Naval Regulations referred to in the act. (2 Comp. Dec. 150.) [See note to section 161, Revised Statutes.]

Sec. 297. [Auditors may administer oaths.] The several Auditors are empowered to administer oaths to witnesses in any case in which they may deem it necessary for the due examination of the accounts with which they shall be charged.—(3 Mar., 1817, c. 45, s. 12, v. 3, p. 368. S June, 1872, c. 335, s. 24, v. 17, p. 228.)

See sections 184, 185, and 186, Revised Statutes, relative to securing attendance of witnesses.

See note to section 183, Revised Statutes, concerning oaths in cases arising in the Navy.

Sec. 300. [Allowance of lost checks.] Whenever the disbursing officer or agent by whom was issued any check which has been lost, destroyed, or stolen, is dead, or no longer in the service of the United States, the proper accounting officer shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, state an account in favor of the owner of such original check for the amount thereof, and charge such amount to the account of such officer or agent.—(2 Feb., 1872, c. 12, ss. 1, 2, v. 17, p. 29.)

The substance of this provision is repeated in section 3647, Revised Statutes, which section was amended and reenacted by act of February 23, 1909 (35 Stat., 643.) Regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury concerning lost checks are given in article 4337, Navy Regulations, 1913. See note to section 251, Revised Statutes, on general subject of regulations of the Treasury Department.

CHAPTER FIVE.

THE TREASURER.

Sec. 301. [Treasurer.] There shall be in the Department of the Treasury a Treasurer of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of six thousand five hundred dollars a year.—(2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, s. 1, v. 1, p. 65. 23 July, 1866, c. 208, s. 2, v. 14, p. 206. 3 Mar., 1875, c. 130, s. 2, v. 18, p. 397.)

The salary of the Treasurer of the United States was fixed at $8,000 per annum by the act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1065).

The rooms provided in the Treasury Building at the seat of government for the use of the Treasurer are by law the "Treasury of the United States" (sec. 3591, R. S.); assistant treasurers are authorized and have been appointed to serve at New York and other cities (sec. 3595, R. S.); the rooms assigned by law to be occupied by them are appropriated to their use and for the safekeeping of the public money deposited with them (sec. 3598, R. S.); the assistant treasurers are to have the charge and care of the rooms, etc., assigned to them, and to perform the duties required of them relating to the receipt, safekeeping, and disbursement of public money (sec. 3599, R. S.); all collectors and receivers of public money of every description within the city of New York and other cities are required, as often as may be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, to pay over to the assistant treasurer in their respective cities all public money collected by them or in their hands (sec. 3615, R. S.); the Treasurer of the United States and all assistant treasurers are required to keep all public money placed in their possession until the same is ordered by the proper department or officer of the Government to be transferred or paid out, and when such orders are received, faithfully and promptly to comply with same; and to perform all other duties as fiscal agents of the Government that may be imposed by any law or by any regulation of the Treasury Department made in conformity with law (sec. 3639, R. S.); all money paid into the Treasury of the United States is subject to the draft of the Treasurer; and for the purpose of payment on the public account the Treasurer is authorized to draw on any of the depositories as he may think most conducive to the public interest and the convenience of public creditors. (Sec. 3644, R. S.) (Cooke v. U. S., 91 U. S., 398.)

Adjustment of accounts.—All claims against the United States are to be settled and adjusted in the Treasury Department, and that is located "at the seat of Government." The assistant treasurer in New York [or elsewhere] is a custodian of public money which he may pay out or transfer upon the order of the proper department or officer; but he has no authority to settle and adjust—that is to say, to determine upon the validity of, any claim against the Government. He can pay only after the adjustment has been made "in the Department of the Treasury," and then upon drafts drawn for that purpose by the Treasurer. (Cooke v. U. S., 91 U. S., 399.)

Sec. 303. [Assistant Treasurer.] There shall be in the Department of the Treasury an Assistant Treasurer of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of two thousand eight hundred dollars a year.—(3 Mar., 1863, c. 89, s. 1, v. 12, p. 761. 25 June, 1864, c. 147, s. 2, v. 13, p. 159.)

See note to preceding section.

The compensation of the Assistant Treasurer has been increased in annual appropriation acts to $3,600 per annum. See act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 755).

Additional "assistant treasurers of the United States," located in various cities, are provided for by sections 3594 and 3595, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 305. [Duties of the Treasurer.] The Treasurer shall receive and keep the moneys of the United States, and disburse the same upon warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury, countersigned by either Comptroller, and recorded by the Register, and not otherwise. He shall take receipts for all moneys paid by him, and shall give receipts for all moneys received by him; and all receipts for moneys received by him shall be indorsed upon warrants signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, without which warrant, so signed, no acknowledgment for money received into the public Treasury shall be valid. He shall render his accounts to the First Comptroller quarterly, or oftener if required, and shall transmit a copy thereof, when settled, to the Secretary of the Treasury. He shall at all times submit to the Secretary of the Treasury and the First Comptroller, or either of them, the inspection of the moneys in his hands.—(2 Sept., 1789, c. 12, s. 4, v. 1, p. 65.)

See note to section 301, Revised Statutes.

So much of this section as required the Register of the Treasury to record warrants was repealed by act of July 31, 1894, section 11 (28 Stat., 209).

The title "First Comptroller" was changed to "Comptroller of the Treasury" and the office of Second Comptroller was abolished by act of July 31, 1894, section 4 (28 Stat., 206).

The accounts of the Treasurer are to be received and examined by the Auditor for the Treasury Department. (Act July 31, 1894, sec. 7, 28 Stat., 206.)

Payments upon warrants.—The judgments of the Court of Claims, even when affirmed by the Supreme Court, and allowances made by the Secretary of the Treasury or other public officers under authority of law, can not be paid by the Treasurer except upon a warrant drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury, countersigned by the Comptroller of the Treasury, in pursuance of appropriations made by law. (Ravesies v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 243.) [See note to section 236, Revised Statutes.]

All warrants are required to be countersigned by the Comptroller of the Treasury under section 11, act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 209); under section 4 of the same act (28 Stat., 206), power is given to the Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury, under direction of the Comptroller of the Treasury, to countersign all warrants; and the chief clerk in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury is empowered, in the name of the Comptroller of the Treasury, to countersign all warrants except accountable warrants.

Sec. 306. [Liabilities outstanding three or more years.] At the termination of each fiscal year all amounts of moneys that are represented by certificates, drafts, or checks, issued by the Treasurer, or by any disbursing officer of any Department of the Government, upon the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer, or designated depositary of the United States, or upon any national bank designated as a depositary of the United States, and which shall be represented on the books of either of such offices as standing to the credit of any disbursing officer, and which were issued to facilitate the payment of warrants, or for any other purpose in liquidation of a debt due from the United States, and which have for three years or more remained outstanding, unsatisfied, and unpaid, shall be deposited by the Treasurer, to be covered into the Treasury by warrant, and to be carried to the credit of the parties in whose favor such certificates, drafts, or checks were respectively issued, or to the persons who are entitled to receive pay therefor, and into an appropriation account to be denominated "outstanding liabilities."—(2 May, 1866, c. 70, ss. 1, 4, v. 14, pp. 41, 42.)

See sections of the Revised Statutes set forth below, and notes thereto.

Regulations in pursuance of sections 306-310, Revised Statutes.—The Navy Regulations, 1913, contain the following article:

"4334. The following regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury, in pursuance of sections 306 to 310 of the Revised Statutes, shall be observed by all officers:

"(a) Any Treasury draft or any check drawn by a public disbursing officer still in service, which shall be presented for payment before it shall have been issued three full fiscal years, will be paid in the usual manner by the officer or bank on which it is drawn, and from funds to the credit of the drawer. Thus, any such draft or check issued on or after July 1, 1909, will be paid as above stated until June 30, 1913, and the same rule will apply for subsequent years.

"(b) Any such draft or check which has been issued for a longer period than three full fiscal years will be paid only by the settlement of an account in the Treasury Department, as provided in section 308, Revised Statutes, and for this purpose the draft or check will be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for the necessary action.

“(c) At the close of each fiscal year, the Treasurer, the several assistant treasurers, and the national-bank depositaries will render to the Secretary of the Treasury, as required by section 310, a list of all disbursing officers' accounts still unclosed which have remained unchanged on the books of their respective offices or banks, either by debit or credit, more than three fiscal years, giving in each case the name and official designation of the officer, the date when the account with him was opened, the date of last debit and last credit, and the balance remaining to his credit.

“(d) Every disbursing officer will, on the 30th of June of each year, as also required by section 310, make a return to the Secretary of the Treasury of all checks drawn by him which have been outstanding and unpaid for three full fiscal years, stating the number of each check, its date, amount, in whose favor, on what office or bank, and for what purpose drawn, the number of the voucher in payment of which it was drawn, and, if known, the residence of the payee.

“(e) Whenever any disbursing officer of the United States shall cease to act in that capacity, he will at once inform the Secretary of the Treasury whether he has any public funds to his credit in any office or bank, and, if so, what checks, if any, he has drawn against the same which are still outstanding and unpaid. Until satisfactory information of this character shall have been furnished, the whole amount of such moneys will be held to meet the payment of his checks properly payable therefrom.

“(f) In case of the death, resignation, or removal of a public disbursing officer, any check previously drawn by him and not presented for payment within four months of its date will not be paid until its correctness shall have been attested by the Secretary or Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

“(g) If the object or purpose for which any check of a public disbursing officer is drawn is not stated thereon, as required by the following article, or if any reason exists for suspecting fraud, the office or bank on which such check is drawn will refuse its payment.”

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Does not run until demand and refusal.—

Where the amount of lost checks was covered into the Treasury in pursuance of this section, the promise of the Government, contained in the statute, to hold money so paid into the Treasury, was a continuing promise, available to the drawee or his administratrix at any time, to which full force should be given; when application was made by the administratrix to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of the checks by the issue of Treasury warrants under the authority conferred by sections 306, 307, 308, Revised Statutes, and such application was refused, then for the first time a claim for the breach of the contract accrued, and the statute of limitations began to run from the date of the refusal. (U. S. v. Wardwell, 172 U. S., 48; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 194.)

Where it is established that funds in the hands of the Government are held in trust, it follows that no part of such funds is subject to the operation of the statute of limitations. (State of Louisiana v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 53.) The claim for such funds first accrues, within the meaning of the statute of limitations, when it is first presented to the Secretary of the Treasury. (Harrison v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 175.) [In U. S. v. Taylor, 104 U. S., 216, it was held that when the surplus proceeds of real estate, sold for a direct tax due the United States, is deposited in the Treasury to be there held for the use of the owner of the property, the statute of limitations runs from the date of his application to the Secretary of the Treasury for that surplus.]

Analogous to trust fund.—Where the amount of an unclaimed draft issued by the Government was covered into the Treasury, and about 16 years later demand for payment was made and refused; held, that after the draft was issued the Government held the fund in the nature of a trust, and that the statute of limitations as to claims cognizable by the Court of Claims did not begin to run until the date of demand. (Ray v. U. S., 50 Fed. Rep., 166. See also Ravenel et al. v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 192.)

Disavowal of trust.—An act repealing an appropriation must be regarded as a disavowal of the trust; and it must be held that the statute of limitations began to run at the date of the repealing act. (Russell v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 113.)

Where money appropriated by Congress is not paid to the beneficiary but is covered into the Treasury under this section and carried to the credit of the party for whose benefit the appropriation was made, it may be regarded as an express trust, subject to the qualification that the statute of limitations will begin to run as soon as the trust is openly disavowed by the trustee. (Russell v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 113.)

The statute of limitations can not be set up against money credited to a claimant in the appropriation account of “outstanding liabilities.” Such money is held as a trust fund, payable on demand without limit of time. The statute of limitations does not run against it until the trustee disavows the trust. (Wayne v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 274.)

Proof of identity sufficient.—There is much indebtedness of the United States which no lapse of time in making application for payment renders stale, such as interest on registered bonds and other balances stated in favor of parties on the books of the Treasury Department, as to which the only proof to be made is the identity of the claimant or his right to represent the record creditor. (Waddell v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 323, citing secs. 306, 307, 308, R. S., and Hall's Case, 17 Ct. Cls., 39.)

Merger of original claim.—It has been held that an action may be maintained against the Government upon a Treasury draft issued in payment of an account which has been audited and certified at the Treasury, notwithstanding that the original cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. (Buffalo Bayou R. Co. v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 238.)

When a claim passes into the form of checks, its legal character changes from that of a demand for goods sold and delivered to a claim represented by the checks given in liquidation of the original demand. It then becomes a legal obligation arising upon the new form of indebtedness. The fund established by section 306, Revised Statutes, bears upon it the impress of a trust, payable on demand without limit of time; and the statutes of limitations can not be set up against money so credited to the claimant in the permanent appropriation for outstanding liabilities. (Wardwell v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 30.)

Jurisdiction of Court of Claims.—Where a Government check is lost or stolen, the Revised Statutes (secs. 306-310, 3646) do not require that payment must be postponed for three years or preclude a suit. They simply authorize disbursing officers to duplicate small checks in certain cases. The power given to the accounting officers to duplicate lost checks is not exclusive and does not affect the jurisdiction of the courts. (Becker v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 172, 177.)

Character of outstanding draft.—A Treasury draft outstanding for more than three years, the appropriation to pay it covered into the Treasury, has ceased to be negotiable paper. (Harris v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 177.)

A claimant having an amount rightly due to her, standing to her credit on the books of the Treasury under section 306, Revised Statutes, is entitled to recover though a draft more than three years outstanding for the same debt is in the hands of a third person. (Harris v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 177.)

Sec. 307. [Vouchers for drafts remaining unpaid.] The certificate of the Register of the Treasury, stating that the amount of any draft issued by the Treasurer, to facilitate the payment of a warrant directed to him for payment, has remained outstanding and unpaid for three years or more, and has been deposited and covered into the Treasury in the manner prescribed by the preceding section, shall be, when attached to any such warrant, a sufficient voucher in satisfaction of any such warrant or part of any warrant, the same as if the drafts correctly indorsed and fully satisfied were attached to such warrant or part of warrant. And all such moneys mentioned in this and in the preceding section shall remain as a permanent appropriation for the redemption and payment of all such outstanding and unpaid certificates, drafts, and checks.—(2 May, 1866, c. 70, s. 2, v. 14, p. 41.)

This section was amended by act of July 31, 1894, section 16 (28 Stat., 210); by substituting the words "Secretary of the Treasury" for the words "Register of the Treasury" as given above.

See note to preceding section.

Sec. 308. [Payment upon presentation of outstanding drafts.] The payee or the bona-fide holder of any draft or check the amount of which has been deposited and covered into the Treasury pursuant to the preceding sections, shall, on presenting the same to the proper officer of the Treasury, be entitled to have it paid by the settlement of an account and the issuing of a warrant in his favor, according to the practice in other cases of authorized and liquidated claims against the United States.—(2 May, 1866, c. 70, s. 3, v. 14, p. 42.)

See note to section 306, Revised Statutes.

Not merely matter of bookkeeping.—If bookkeeping was the only matter sought to be provided for by sections 306, 307, and 308, Revised Statutes, there were no need of section 308. That prescribes payment, and payment in a particular way. The payee does not simply surrender his check and receive money; but "on presenting the same to the proper officer" he is "entitled to have it paid by the settlement of an account and the issuing of a warrant in his favor." This may be mere machinery for payment, but it is machinery not used or required until after the money has been "covered into the Treasury by warrant" and "carried to the credit" of the payee. The right given is the right to surrender the check and receive a warrant on the Treasury. It will also be noticed that the purpose of the act of 1866 upon which these sections are based was, as expressed in its title, not merely to "facilitate the settlement of the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States," not merely to perfect a system of bookkeeping, but also "to secure certain moneys * * * to persons to whom they are due and who are entitled to receive the same." In other words, the purpose of the Government by this statute is to secure to each party who holds Government paper the amount thereof, to place it in the Treasury to his credit, and to prescribe a method by which, whenever he wishes, he can obtain it. No time is mentioned in which he must apply for a warrant or after which the money is forfeited to the Government. When the contract created by the promise made in section 308 is broken, then a claim for the breach of such contract first accrues and the limitation begins to run. (U. S. v. Wardwell, 172 U. S., 48; see also Ray v. U. S., 50 Fed. Rep., 166.)

Payment without bond.—The nonproduction of a Treasury draft is sufficiently accounted for by proof that it was stolen and has not been heard of for more than seventeen years. In such a case it is not necessary for the claimant to give a bond of indemnity. (Wayne v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 274. See also U. S. v. Wardwell, 172 U. S., 48.)

Sec. 309. [Accounts of disbursing officers unchanged for three years.] The amounts, except such as are provided for in section three hundred and six, of the accounts of every kind of disbursing officer, which shall have remained unchanged, or which shall not have been increased by any new deposit thereto, nor decreased by drafts drawn thereon, for the space of three years, shall in like manner be covered into the Treasury, to the proper appropriation to which they belong; and the amounts thereof shall, on the certificate of the Treasurer that such amount has been deposited in the Treasury, be credited by the proper accounting officer of the Department of the Treasury on the books of the Department, to the officer in whose name it had stood on the books of any agency of the Treasury, if it appears that he is entitled to such credit.—(2 May, 1866, c. 70, s. 5, v. 14, p. 42.)

See notes to sections 306–308, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 310. [Annual reports of disbursing officers, etc.] The Treasurer, each assistant treasurer, and each designated depositary of the United States, and the cashier of each of the national banks designated as such depositaries, shall, at the close of business on every thirtieth day of June, report to the Secretary of the Treasury the condition of every account standing, as in the preceding section specified, on the books of their respective offices, stating the name of each depositor, with his official designation, the total amount remaining on deposit to his credit, and the dates, respectively, of the last credit and the last debit made to each account. And each disbursing officer shall make a like return of all checks issued by him, and which may then have been outstanding and unpaid for three years and more, stating fully in such report the name of the payee, for what purpose each check was given, the office on which drawn, the number of the voucher received therefor, the date, number, and amount for which it was drawn, and, when known, the residence of the payee.—(2 May, 1866, c. 70, s. 6, v. 14, p. 42.)

For modification of this section, see act of July 1, 1916, section 5 (39 Stat., 336).
Disbursing officers are required to furnish heads of departments with certain information for annual report to Congress (sec. 193, R. S.)

TITLE VIII.

THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Sec.

- 346. Establishment of Department of Justice.
- 347. Solicitor General.
- 349. Naval solicitor, etc.
- 354. Opinions of Attorney General required by the President.
- 355. Title to and jurisdiction over land purchased by the United States.
- 356. Opinions of Attorney General required by heads of departments.
- 357. Legal advice to Departments of War and Navy.
- 358. Reference of questions by Attorney General to subordinates.
- 359. Conduct and argument of cases.
- 360. Performance of duty by officers of Department of Justice.

Sec.

- 361. Legal services required by the President, heads of departments, and subordinates.
- 362. Superintendence of district attorneys and marshals.
- 363. Retaining counsel to aid district attorneys.
- 364. Attendance of counsel to be provided by Attorney General.
- 365. Counsel fees restricted.
- 366. Appointment and oath of special attorneys or counsel.
- 367. Interest of United States in pending suits, who may attend to.
- 383. Publication of opinions.

Sec. 346. [Establishment of Department of Justice.] There shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Justice, and an Attorney-General, who shall be the head thereof.—(24 Sept., 1789, c. 20, s. 35, v. 1, p. 92. 22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 1, v. 16, p. 162.)

See sections 187, 188 and 189, Revised Statutes, and sections 180, 185, Judicial Code, act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat., 1142), as to duties of the Attorney General.

See note to section 158, Revised Statutes, as to organization and growth of executive departments, etc.

There is no very specific statement of the general duties of the Attorney General, but it is seen from the whole chapter that he has authority, and it is made his duty, to supervise the conduct of all suits brought by or against the United States, and to give advice to the President and the heads of other departments of the Government. He is invested with the general superintendence of all suits to be brought against the debtors of the Government, or upon bonds, or to begin criminal prosecutions or to institute proceedings in any of the numerous cases in which the United States is plaintiff. All the district attorneys who do bring them in the various courts in the country are placed under his immediate direction and control. He is undoubtedly the officer who has charge of the institution and conduct of the pleas of the United States and of the litigation which is necessary to establish the rights of the Government. He is the officer to determine when the United States shall sue, for what it shall sue, and to be responsible that such suits are brought in appropriate cases. In all this, however, the Attorney General acts as the head of one of the executive departments, representing the authority of the President in the class of subjects within the domain of that department and under his control. (U. S. v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U. S., 273.)

The Attorney General is given "general superintendence and direction" of the district attorneys, in whom Congress has vested the initial power of prosecution. (In re Beavers, 131 Fed. Rep., 366.)

The provisions of law concerning the Department of Justice "are too conclusive and too specific to leave any doubt that Congress intended to gather into the Department of Justice, under the supervision and control of the Attorney General, all the litigation and all the law business in which the United States are interested, and which previously had been scattered among different public officers, departments, and branches of the Government, and to break up the practice of frequently employing unofficial attorneys for the public service." (Perry v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 491.)

Proceedings before grand jury.—Neither the Attorney General, the Solicitor General, nor any officer of the Department of Justice is authorized by sections 359, 367, or other provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to conduct or to aid in the conduct of proceedings before a grand jury, nor has a special assistant to the Attorney General such power. (U. S. v. Rosenthal, 121 Fed. Rep., 862.) [This is now authorized by act of June 30, 1906, noted under section 359, Revised Statutes.]

Relation of Attorney General to Congress.—The Attorney General is not authorized to give his official opinion upon a call of either House of Congress or any committee or Member thereof. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 358. For other cases, see note to sec. 356, R. S.)

Sec. 347. [Solicitor General.] There shall be in the Department of Justice an officer learned in the law, to assist the Attorney-General in the performance of his duties, called the Solicitor-General, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of seven thousand five hundred dollars a year. In case of a vacancy in the office of Attorney-General, or of his absence or disability, the Solicitor General shall have power to exercise all the duties of that office.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 2, v. 16, p. 162.)

See sections 177–182 Revised Statutes, as to officers authorized to act temporarily in cases of death, resignation, absence, or sickness of heads of Departments, generally.

The salary of the Solicitor-General has been increased to $10,000 per annum.

Where the Solicitor General signs a document as “Acting Attorney General,” the absence of the Attorney General will be presumed in support of the legality of the document so signed. (U. S. v. Twining, 132 Fed. Rep., 129. For other decisions, see notes to secs. 161 and 177, Revised Statutes.)

Sec. 349. [Naval Solicitor, etc.] There shall be in the Department of Justice a Solicitor of the Treasury, an Assistant Solicitor of the Treasury, a Solicitor of Internal Revenue, a Naval Solicitor, and an Examiner of Claims for the Department of State, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to the following salaries: The Solicitor of the Treasury to four thousand dollars a year, the Assistant Solicitor of the Treasury to three thousand dollars a year, the Solicitor of Internal Revenue to five thousand dollars a year, the Naval Solicitor to three thousand five hundred dollars a year, and the Examiner of Claims for the Department of State four thousand dollars a year.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, ss. 3, 9, 10, v. 16, pp. 162, 3. 29 May, 1830, c. 153, s. 1, v. 4, p. 414. 3 Mar., 1865, c. 76, s. 1, v. 13, p. 468. 23 July, 1866, c. 208, s. 5, v. 14, p. 207. 13 July, 1866, c. 184, s. 64, v. 14, p. 170. 23 July, 1866, c. 208, s. 5, v. 14, p. 207. 27 May, 1870, Res. 66, s. 1, v. 16, p. 378. 3 Mar., 1873, c. 226, s. 3, v. 17, p. 508.)

So much of the above section as provided for the appointment of, and payment of a salary to, a “naval solicitor,” was repealed and that office abolished by act June 19, 1878 (20 Stat., 205).

The office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy was established by act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164). And see act of May 22, 1908 (35 Stat., 218), noted under section 419, Revised Statutes, as to office of the solicitor in the Navy Department.

Other amendments to this section do not relate to the Navy, and are not noted.

Sec. 354. [Opinions of Attorney General required by the President.] The Attorney General shall give his advice and opinion upon questions [of] law, whenever required by the President.—(24 Sept., 1789, c. 20, s. 35, v. 1, p. 92. 27 Feb., 1877, c. 69, v. 19, p. 241.)

The President's right to call for an opinion from the Attorney General is not limited to questions of law. Article II, section 2, clause 1, of the Constitution, provides that he “may require the opinion of the principal officer of each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.” (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 360. For other cases see note to section 356, Revised Statutes.)

Sec. 355. [Title to, and jurisdiction over, land purchased by United States.] No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purposes of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy-yard, custom-house, light-house, or other public building, of any kind whatever, until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land or site may be, to such purchase, has been given. The district attorneys of the United States, upon the application of the Attorney-General, shall furnish any assistance or information in their power in relation to the titles of the public property lying within their respective districts. And the Secretaries of the Departments, upon the application of the Attorney-General, shall procure any additional evidence of title which he may deem necessary, and which may not be in the possession of the officers of the Government, and the expense of procuring it shall be paid out of the appropriations made for the contingencies of the Departments respectively.— (11 Sept., 1841, Res. No. 6, v. 5, p. 468.)

Art. R-117 (1) Navy Regulations, 1913, provides that the solicitor in the Navy Department "shall be charged, under the special instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, with the searching of titles, purchase, sale, transfer, and other questions affecting lands and buildings pertaining to the Navy, and with the care and preservation of all muniments of title to land acquired for naval uses."

By act of February 27, 1877, it was provided that "it shall be the duty of all officers of the United States having any of the title papers (of property purchased, or about to be purchased, for the erection of public buildings) in their possession, to furnish them, forthwith, to the Attorney General. No public money shall be expended until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had." (19 Stat., 242. This act was amendatory of sec. 1136, R. S., relating to the Army.)

By act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 941) it was provided that "Hereafter all legal services connected with the procurement of titles to sites for public buildings, other than for life-saving stations and pierhead lights, shall be rendered by United States district attorneys: Provided further, That hereafter, in the procurement of sites for such public buildings, it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to require the grantors in each case to furnish free of all expense to the Government, all requisite abstracts, official certificates, and evidences of title that the Attorney General may deem necessary."

By joint resolution, April 11, 1898, it was provided that the requirements of this section shall not be applicable to cases in which a temporary fort or fortification may be constructed upon the written consent of the owner of the land in an emergency in which, in the opinion of the President, the immediate erection of such temporary fort or fortification is deemed important and urgent. (30 Stat. 737.)

By act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 427), it was provided that this section "shall not apply to the expenditure of appropriations for the Ordnance Department of the Army now available for the purchase of land and for improvements upon such land."

By act of March 30, 1900, the provisions of this section were "waived" in a case in which it was impracticable to apply to the State legislature for consent to the purchase until its next session, and the buildings were urgently required for the shelter of troops. (31 Stat., 55.)

Other statutes making exception to the provisions of this section in specific cases include the following: July 2, 1917 (40 Stat., 241); October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 353); March 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 439); March 28, 1918 (40 Stat., 460); April 11, 1918 (40 Stat., 519); May 6, 1918 (40 Stat., 552); July 8, 1918 (40 Stat., 818); July 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 860, 888); July 18, 1918 (40 Stat., 916).

By act of June 20, 1878, it was provided that the provisions of this section and section 4661, Revised Statutes, should not apply to the erection of a small pierhead light. (20 Stat., 214.) Exception has also been made in the case of a lighthouse and fog signal. (See 2 Comp. Dec., 626.)

The acquisition of land by condemnation for public use is provided for by act of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat., 357).

The President is authorized to procure assent of the legislature of any State in which lands have been purchased for the erection of forts, etc., without such consent having been obtained. (Sec. 1838, R. S.) ["Have been purchased" construed: 10 Op. Atty. Gen. 34.]

The President is authorized to obtain a release to the United States from any person to whom lands are conveyed for the use of the United States. (Sec. 3752, R. S.)

The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever * * * over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings." (Art. I, sec. 8, clause 17.)

The punishment of offenses committed on lands used for public purposes, the punishment of which is not provided for by any law of the United States, shall be the same as provided by laws of the State in which situated. (Sec. 289, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1145; file 4143-04; 5103-164:4.)

The punishment for cutting or injuring trees, breaking fences, etc., on lands of the United States reserved or purchased for public use, is governed by Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 49-58 (35 Stat., 1098, 1099).

Private persons prohibited from asserting a right to the exclusive use and occupancy of pub-lie lands; civil proceedings to be instituted by United States in such cases; and President authorized to employ civil or military force to remove and destroy any unlawful inclosure of said lands; etc. (Act Feb. 25, 1885, 23 Stat., 321.)

No contract shall be made for the erection of any public building or for any improvement in excess of the amount specifically appropriated therefor. (Sec. 3733, R. S.; Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 98, 35 Stat., 1106.)

No land shall be purchased on account of the United States, except under a law authorizing such purchase. (Sec. 3736, R. S.)

Authority to purchase a site and erect a public building thereon is not appropriation therefor. (Act Aug. 7, 1882, 22 Stat., 305.)

I. EFFECT OF SECTION.

II. WHAT LANDS INCLUDED.

III. VALIDITY OF TITLE.

IV. CONSENT OF LEGISLATURE.

V. JURISDICTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

VI. JURISDICTION, NAVAL RESERVATIONS.

VII. MISCELLANEOUS.

I. EFFECT OF SECTION.

It is clear this section was drafted with a view to the language of the Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 17, although section 355 says nothing about a cession of jurisdiction. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 12.)

This section demands that a transfer of jurisdiction, in order to satisfy its requirements, must be coextensive with that contemplated by the Constitution. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 611.)

The prohibition seems to be against expenditures for improvements or structures upon land purchased, that is, already acquired, by the Government until the consent is obtained, and not against the expenditure of money for the purchase of the land. Section 1838, Revised Statutes, appears to contemplate, as something permissible under the existing law, that land may be purchased for the Government without the consent of the State thereto previously being given. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 212.)

The payment of the purchase money for land before the consent of the legislature of the State is given to the purchase is not forbidden by the law embodied in this section; but it does prohibit the expenditure of public money upon the improvement of the land by the erection of needful buildings thereon until consent is given to the purchase. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 212; 3 Comp. Dec., 530; 17 Comp. Dec., 242; Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 3, 1908, file 7101-6. See below, "Validity of title.")

The Government has tied its own hands if the State legislature for any or no assigned reason withholds its consent to a purchase of the site. It may purchase and hold the land, yet it can not spend a dollar of money upon the site for the erection of the necessary buildings thereon. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

The public money expended on such places, and the public property deposited in them, require that they shall be exempt from the authority of the particular State. Nor would it be proper for the places on which the security of the entire Union may depend to be in any degree dependent on a particular member of it. (Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525, quoting the Federalist.)

It is at the option of every State to give or withhold its consent at its own pleasure. The United States has no power and ought not to have a desire to compel a State to cede exclusive jurisdiction over any part of its soil. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

Congress can not acquire or assert exclusive jurisdiction over any part of the territory of a State without the consent of the State legislature. Hence before such jurisdiction can become vested in the United States the consent of the legislature of the State must be obtained, notwithstanding an enactment of Congress that upon purchase of real estate suitable and necessary for the purposes of the act the fee simple shall "be vested in the United States and its jurisdiction over said real estate shall be exclusive and the same as its jurisdiction over real estate purchased, ceded, or appropriated for the purposes of navy yards, forts, and arsenals." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131. See In re Kelly, 71 Fed. Rep., 545; see also sec. 4882, R. S.)

Where compensation has been paid for land without consent of the legislature of the State to its acquisition, the proper course to be pursued is for the head of the department to apply to such legislature for its consent. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131. See also sec. 1838, R. S.)

II. WHAT LANDS INCLUDED.

This section includes lands located under navigable waters of the United States, to be used as a site for a lighthouse for the establishment of which provision is made by statute. Accordingly, it is not competent for the Lighthouse Board to erect a structure on such site until title thereto has been obtained by the Government. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 369.)

Lands acquired by condemnation.—This law refers only to lands to be purchased by the United States, and does not apply to a case where the law contemplates not only purchase but appropriation under the right of eminent domain. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131, 134; 23 Comp. Dec., 53, 56.)

In common parlance "purchase" imports the buying of property by contract, and therefore would not include the case of acquisition by statute or by condemnation and expropriation. But the legal meaning of "purchase" applied to real estate goes much beyond this, for the phrase "title by purchase" is often employed to embrace all the forms of acquisition except that by "descent." When accurately defined, the distinction is between titles acquired through some agreement or other act of the party acquiring, which is "purchase;" and titles acquired by the mere devolution of law without any act of the party, which is "descent." Undoubtedly title acquired by the United States by expropriation is "purchase" within the scope of this section, such as, if done in strict accordance with the form of the statute, may be certified by the Attorney General as vesting a valid title in the United States. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 114, 121.)

Lands acquired by donation.—The word "purchased" does not include lands or interests in lands acquired by the United States without consideration or for a mere nominal sum; and such cases are not included within the terms of section 355. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 413.)

Under the law now embodied in section 355, Revised Statutes, before any money could lawfully be expended upon land donated to the United States it would be necessary to obtain a cession of jurisdiction from the State. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 465.)

The ceding of land by a State to the United States probably constitutes a "purchase" thereof by the United States in the broad sense of that word. (U. S. v. Tucker, 122 Fed. Rep., 518.)

If the site were acquired by donation, section 355 would require the opinion of the Attorney General in favor of the validity of the title before any money could be expended thereon. (5 Comp. Dec., 682.)

Where land is donated to the United States for the purpose of a site for a certain public building, for the construction of which an appropriation has been made by Congress, the consent of the legislature of the State to the grant is required by section 355 before any part of the appropriation can be lawfully expended in the erection of the building. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

Land rented to the United States, to be used temporarily as a camp, is not a "place" within the terms of the Constitution, over which the United States have "sole and exclusive jurisdiction." (U. S. v. Tierney, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16517.)

Neither section 355 nor section 1136, Revised Statutes, applies to the erection of public buildings or other structures upon land leased to the United States. By their terms they are restricted to the expenditure of public money upon or in connection with land purchased by the United States for the erection of such buildings or structures. (6 Comp. Dec., 877. See below, "Lands acquired in foreign country.")

The law embodied in this section contemplates purchases of lands for all public purposes and establishes as a general rule applicable to them that no public money shall be expended in the purchase until the opinion of the Attorney General on the validity of the title shall be obtained and the consent of the legislature of the State in which the lands are situated is given. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131, 133; but see above, "Effect of section.")

Locks and dams.—The cases seem to leave no doubt that the broadest construction has been wisely put upon the language of the Constitution, "for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings," a construction which makes it cover all structures and all places necessary for carrying on the business of the National Government. Specifically held to include locks and dams.

(U. S. v. Tucker, 122 Fed. Rep., 518; but see In re Kelly, 71 Fed. Rep., 545.)

A lock and dam to be erected by the War Department, not a public building within the meaning of this section, and may be erected on land belonging to the United States although consent of the legislature to the purchase has not been given. (6 Comp. Dec., 843.)

The erection of a monument from an appropriation under the War Department is not included in this section. Not necessary that title to the land should be conveyed to the United States. (6 Comp. Dec., 791.) [In this case the Attorney General had decided that a deed to such land "vests in the United States a valid title," but the Comptroller decided there was no authority to purchase the land and payment therefor could not be made.]

Wharf not public building.—The term "building" in its broadest sense includes any artificial structure erected on land, but it is not used in this broad sense in the statutes relating to public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department (citing 6 Comp. Dec., 877). A wharf, however extensive or permanent in its nature, can not properly be regarded as a public building within such statutes, which contemplate only such buildings as are designed for occupation by Government officials or for use in affording shelter to and protection of movable public property. (7 Comp. Dec., 533, distinguishing a contrary decision of the First Comptroller, May 22, 1894.)

Land acquired for construction of irrigation works.—This section does not apply as to manner in which the validity of title to lands acquired by the Secretary of the Interior under the act June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), shall be evidenced. Question of validity of title is one for the determination of the Secretary of the Interior, whose decision has the same force as would an opinion of the Attorney General under this section, and is conclusive on the accounting officers. (12 Comp. Dec., 691, citing letter of Acting Attorney General.)

Land for use of militia.—The purchase of property for shooting galleries and target ranges in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia is made upon the recommendation of the governors of the States or Territories or the commanding general of the District of Columbia, approved by the Secretary of War. The title to the property is conveyed to and vested in the United States. Before payment for the same is made, the title must be approved by the Attorney General of the United States as required by this section, to whom all necessary papers to prove title shall be transmitted by the Secretary of War. The relation of the States and Territories, and District of Columbia to such property is that of trustees, vested with the use and charged with the administration of it for the purpose for which it is acquired. (17 Comp. Dec., 242.)

Lands acquired for cemeteries.—The purposes enumerated in the law now embodied in this section do not distinctly embrace national cemeteries. Question whether such cemeteries are included, not decided. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 423.)

Before jurisdiction over a national cemetery can become vested in the United States the consent of the legislature of the State in which the cemetery is situated must be obtained. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131.)

To authorize payment for land appropriated for the purpose of a national cemetery, the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land lies is not necessary; nor in such case is the opinion of the Attorney General as to the validity of the title required. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131.)

If the consent of the legislature of a State in which a cemetery is situated can be obtained, it might well be held to be included under the terms of the constitutional provision vesting exclusive legislation in Congress. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131.)

See section 4882, Revised Statutes, providing for exercise of exclusive jurisdiction by the United States over national cemeteries purchased with consent of the State.

Temporary building.—It is the general policy of Congress that no public building shall be erected on ground not owned by the United States. But a small temporary building for the shelter of a light keeper is not a "public building" within the meaning of sections 355 and 1136, Revised Statutes. (6 Comp. Dec., 877.)

Lands acquired for temporary purpose.—In practice the requirements of section 355 have not been regarded as applicable to reservations deemed to be temporary properties of the Government, temporarily used. (Lee v. Kaufman, 15 Fed. Cas., 191. See also U. S. v. World's Columbian Exposition, 56 Fed. Rep., 630.)

Lands acquired in foreign country.—The word "State" as used in this section signifies a State of the Union and has no application to the erection of improvements to the naval hospital, Yokohama, Japan, upon land to which the United States purchases a lease in perpetuity, subject to an annual rental to the Japanese Government. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 12.)

This section does not apply to the purchase of lands with buildings thereon at Constantinople, Turkey, since no erection of a building is contemplated or provided for by the appropriation for such purchase. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 380.)

The provisions of this section are not applicable to the expenditures authorized by the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1188), for the erection of necessary improvements on lands at Guantanamo, Cuba, leased by the United States from the Republic of Cuba for the purposes of a naval station. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 160.)

III. VALIDITY OF TITLE.

Attorney General must certify title before purchase.—The contract of a head of department to purchase land can not be carried out unless the Attorney General shall examine the title and certify to its validity. Property bargained for by the Government is always to be taken and paid for if the title shall be pronounced valid by the Attorney General and not otherwise. This law enters into and forms part of every such contract. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 100.)

Under this section it has been held that no money can be expended for the purchase of land until the Attorney General's opinion as to the validity of the title has been given (citing 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 353, 354); although it has been held that such purchase can be made notwithstanding the consent of the legislature thereto has not been given. (3 Comp. Dec., 531, citing 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 35; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 212; 4 Lawrence's Comp. Dec., 152.)

This section prohibits payment for land to be used for the purposes therein enumerated until the Attorney General shall have certified as to the validity of the title. It was also intended to make the opinion of the Attorney General conclusive upon that question. The Comptroller has not jurisdiction to pass upon question of payment until written opinion of Attorney General has been had in favor of the validity of the title. (3 Comp. Dec., 195.)

See above, "I. Effect of Section."

If title bad, purchase can not be completed.—Where the Attorney General has officially refused to certify the title, the head of the department through which the negotiation is conducted ought at once to declare the contract rescinded; and when he does so, the end of that contract has come. It can have no more force afterwards than if it had never been made. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 100.)

Section 355, Revised Statutes, forbids the acquisition of real estate by the Government for any permanent military purpose until a perfect legal title and cession of State jurisdiction shall first have been obtained. (Lee v. Kaufman, 15 Fed. Cas., 191.)

If title good, purchase must be completed.—Where the head of a department under authority of an act of Congress made a contract for the purchase of land which stipulated for payment of the agreed price when the Attorney General approved the title and the conveyance was executed, held that, after the execution of the deed by the vendors and the Attorney General certified that a valid title to the land had been thereby vested in the United States, the head of the department had no power to make any new contract of purchase for the same or other property, and the vendors were entitled to receive the purchase money. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

Duty of the Attorney General.—This law does not require the Attorney General to inquire into and report upon the fact or question, whether the State in which the land lies has consented to the purchase. That was supposed to be a patent fact which needed no examination; yet it is obvious that difficulties may arise upon that point of fact, requiring a nice and hypercritical examination of the State's act of consent, which is often incumbered with conditions and reservations. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

The Attorney General, in certifying the title of land purchased by the Government, must look at the question as one of pure law, and can not relax the rule on account either of desirableness of the object or the smallness of the value of the land. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 432.) The validity of title is a question of law. (12 Comp. Dec., 691.)

When the Attorney General, in passing upon the validity of titles to property purchased by the United States, certifies that the title will be good upon the release of certain mortgages, it is proper that the sufficiency of the releases should be decided by him, and not by the Comptroller of the Treasury upon the question of payment for the land. (1 Comp. Dec., 348.)

Where question is submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury as to legality of a proposed payment for certain buildings and outfit, but back of the question of expenditure of the money is that of the acquisition of the site, this involves questions of law unconnected with any expenditure of public moneys, and hence not within the comptroller's jurisdiction. Therefore suggested that the opinion of the Attorney General should be obtained upon the primary question involved in the acquisition of the site. (5 Comp. Dec., 682. But see 6 Comp. Dec., 791.)

Regardless of whether this section be applicable or not, the validity of titles to lands proposed to be acquired should be submitted to the Attorney General as a wise precaution, before erecting structures thereon. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, 463.)

Though the opinion of the Attorney General is not required in a particular case as to the validity of the title, as a prudential measure, for the security of the Government, it would seem to be highly expedient to obtain his opinion. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 131. But see 12 Comp. Dec., 691.)

Lands incumbered by outstanding liens.—There is nothing in this law that forbids the purchase of land incumbered by outstanding liens which have not yet matured; but in such case the department making the purchase should stipulate with the vendors that the amount of the purchase money necessary to pay off the incumbrances shall be withheld until they are due, when, if they are discharged by the vendors the purchase money so withheld shall be paid, or if not then discharged by the vendors, that the retained purchase money shall be applied by the Government to their payment. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 353.)

There is no law which prohibits the United States from purchasing property incumbered by liens. (12 Comp. Dec., 691, 697. See also 1 Comp. Dec., 348.)

IV. CONSENT OF LEGISLATURE.

Consent of constitutional convention not sufficient.—An ordinance passed by the constitutional convention of a State, purporting to cede jurisdiction over land purchased by the United States, is not a consent to the purchase by the legislature of the State, within the sense of the Constitution and this section. Such a body is not "the legislature of the State." (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 428.)

Consent to use of land not consent to purchase.—The provisions of this section are not satisfied by an act which contains neither an assent to the purchase nor a grant of jurisdiction. It merely gives the consent of the State to the use of the land for a specific purpose, which consent is declared to be "as provided in the 16th clause of the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States and in the acts of Congress in such case made and provided." I find nothing in that clause of the Constitution which is applicable to the subject, and am unable to determine what particular statute is referred to by the words "acts of Congress in such case made and provided." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 460; compare file 14560-174, Apr. 19, 1916, with reference to statute of Illinois in which same error was made.)

Consent not necessary before purchase.—There is nothing in the Constitution nor in this section which prohibits the United States purchasing land within a State without the consent of the State legislature; but when land is purchased by them in a State without such consent, the United States can not exercise "exclusive legislation" over the place. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 212; 3 Comp. Dec., 530. Compare Lee v. Kaufman, 15 Fed. Cas., 191.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury will not render a decision as to the sufficiency of a general statute of a State consenting to purchases of lands by the United States when it appears that purchase of the particular land in question had not been authorized by Congress, as required by section 3736, Revised Statutes, (7 Comp. Dec., 524.)

Consent necessary before improvements are made.—Under this section, no money can be expended upon the lands mentioned therein, for any purpose whatever, until consent of the legislature has been given. It is hardly to be presumed that Congress would authorize the expenditure of money for the preparation of a lot for the erection of a building and not for the erection of the building itself. (3 Comp. Dec., 530. See also 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 212; 17 Comp. Dec., 242.)

Consent sufficient although certain rights reserved.—In acts of the different State legislatures giving consent to the purchase of land by the United States, as well as in their acts expressly ceding jurisdiction over such lands, it is usual to reserve to the State the right to serve on the land purchased its civil and criminal process, and a reservation of jurisdiction to that extent has always been regarded as consistent with the requirements of the provision in section 355. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 611; 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 254; 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 617; Railroad Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525.)

Where law of State contains a proviso that all civil and criminal process issued under authority of the State or any officer thereof may be executed on the lands so ceded, and within the fortifications which may be erected thereon, in the same way and manner as if such lands had not been ceded, such process must, of course, be for acts done within and cognizable by the State. It can not be inferred from such proviso that it was intended that the State should have a right to punish for acts done within the ceded lands. The whole apparent object is answered by considering the clause as meant to prevent these lands from becoming a sanctuary for fugitives from justice for acts done within the acknowledged jurisdiction of the State. This proviso leaves the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the lands in question in the United States. (U. S. v. Cornell, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14867, per Story, Circuit Justice; U. S. v. Meagher, 37 Fed. Rep., 875; U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537; U. S. v. Davis, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14930, cited in Lasher v. State, 30 Tex. App., 387, 17 S. W., 1065; Sinks v. Reese, 19 Ohio St., 318.)

The reservation which has usually accompanied the consent of the States, that civil and criminal process of the State courts may be served in the places purchased, is not considered as interfering in any respect with the supremacy of the United States over them; but is admitted to prevent them from becoming an asylum for fugitives from justice. (Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525.)

The expression reserving to the State its jurisdiction, so far as to have a right to execute all civil and criminal process lawfully issued under the authority of the State, means, as may not be incompatible with Federal jurisdiction. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628, 632.)

An act providing that "nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the officers of this State from executing any process whatever within the jurisdiction hereby directed to be ceded to the United States," must be understood to embrace only such process as may lawfully run within such premises, notwithstanding and without derogation of or conflict with the jurisdiction acquired by the United States. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628, 635.)

By legislative as well as judicial construction the right retained by States to serve civil and criminal process has been regarded as consistent with exclusive Federal jurisdiction. This is shown by act March 2, 1795 (1 Stat., 426), providing that "Where cessions have been or hereafter may be made by any State of jurisdiction of places where lighthouses, beacons, buoys, or public piers have been erected and fixed or may by law be provided to be erected or fixed, with reservation that process, civil and criminal, issuing under the authority of such State may be executed and served therein, such cessions shall be deemed sufficient under the laws of the United States providing for the supporting or erecting of lighthouses, beacons, buoys, and public piers. * * * Where any State hath made or shall make a cession of jurisdiction for the purposes aforesaid without reservation, all process, civil and criminal, issuing under the authority of such State or the United States may be served and executed within the places the jurisdiction of which has been so ceded, in the same manner as if no such cession had been made." (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 263.)

Consent insufficient where reservations incompatible with Federal jurisdiction.—The settled construction of the Department of Justice is that the "consent" of the legislature of a State to the purchase of lands therein by the United States, required by section 355, Revised Statutes, must be free from any conditions or reservations inconsistent with the exercise by Congress of "exclusive legislation" thereover. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 617.)

It is manifest that a reservation to the State of the right to administer its criminal laws in the place purchased, is inconsistent with the exercise of "exclusive legislation" thereover by Congress, as it leaves to the State the cognizance of offenses against its laws committed thereon as fully as the same existed before such acquisition. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 617.)

A condition that, "if the purposes of this grant should cease, or there should be for five years consecutively a failure upon the part of the United States to use the said place for any of the purposes aforesaid, then the jurisdiction hereby granted shall cease and determine," is not objectionable. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628.)

Where a State's consent to the purchase of land by the United States provides that the State shall forever retain concurrent jurisdiction over any such place to the extent that all legal and military process issued under the authority of the State may be executed anywhere on such place or in any building thereon or any part thereof, and that any offense against the laws of the State committed on such place may be tried and punished by any competent court or magistrate of the State, it does not satisfy the provisions of section 355, Revised Statutes (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 611, quoting and following 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 419, holding that it is impossible to allow the courts of the State jurisdiction of crimes committed on such sites, to the exclusion of, or even in concurrence with, the proper jurisdiction of the United States. But see file 7101-10, Apr. 17, 1908, authorizing expenditures of public moneys on improvements at naval proving ground, Indianhead, Md., although the State expressly retained jurisdiction to execute its criminal process therein against persons charged with offenses committed "within or without" the limits of said lands. See below, "VI. Jurisdiction Naval Reservations.")

As the State's consent "is coupled with an express retention of jurisdiction over offenses against its laws committed on the premises, this qualification of the consent is such as, in my opinion, renders it insufficient to satisfy that provision," viz, section 355, Revised Statutes. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 611.)

I should hesitate to advise the United States to accept a cession which in terms reserved the full concurrent jurisdiction of the State in order to guard against controversy as to whether the consent would be legally inoperative, or whether the condition and reservation would be void, or whether the jurisdiction would be deemed concurrent. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628.)

Effect of consent coupled with incompatible reservation.—It is not perfectly clear from the authorities what is the effect of such a reservation; that is, whether the consent expressed would be legally [in]operative, or the reservation alone void. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 617.)

If the legislative act of the State wherein the land lies amounts to a consent to the purchase of the property by the United States, any exceptions, reservations, or qualifications contained in the act are void, because the consent being given by the legislature the Constitution vests in Congress exclusive legislation over the place, beyond the reach both of Congress and the legislature. If the act does not amount to a consent to the purchase, it is null. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

If the State had simply passed an act consenting to the purchase, the constitutional consequences would certainly have ensued and jurisdiction might have been assumed. As it is, however, the conclusion seems to me questionable. The declared retention of jurisdiction is an express qualification of the assent, and such a qualification as causes it to fail to satisfy the act of Congress, if it does the Constitution. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 102; see also 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

There is a clear distinction between acts in which the reservation of jurisdiction is made an express condition of the consent, and an act which unequivocally expresses the consent of the legislature and does not make any objectionable reservation which may contain an absolute and inseparable condition of the consent. In the former case it has been decided that such consent does not satisfy the law (citing 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 102; 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 418; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 611). In the latter case, there seems to be no good reason for holding that the reservation invalidates the entire act. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 617.)

Where the consent of the legislature to the purchase or condemnation of lands within the State by the United States for public purposes is plainly and unequivocally given, and there is nothing whatever in any other part of the act to indicate that the reservation of jurisdiction which it contains is made an express condition of the consent, the act may be taken as satisfying the requirements of section 355, Revised Statutes, and no further cession of jurisdiction is legally required. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 617.)

It may well be doubted whether Congress is, by the terms of the Constitution, at liberty to purchase lands for forts, dockyards, etc., with the consent of the State legislature, where such consent is so qualified that it will not justify the exclusive legislation of Congress there. It may well be doubted if such consent be not utterly void. (Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 534, quoting U. S. v. Cornell, 2 Mason, 60, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14867.)

The Executive can not lawfully expend money on a site for public uses, purchased with assent of the State in which it lies, if such assent be coupled with express refusal of the State to cede jurisdiction to the United States. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 102; see also 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 30; Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 3, 1908, file 7101-6.)

In order to guard against controversies, I should hesitate to advise the United States to accept a cession which in terms reserved the full concurrent jurisdiction of the State. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628.)

In such cases, the Government would enter upon the land with explicit notice of controversy on the part of the State. Other States might follow the example, greatly to the inconvenience of the United States. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 102; see also 8 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

If any conflicting claims of jurisdiction should arise after the purchase between the two Governments, they would be judicial questions. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34.)

V. JURISDICTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Where State consents to purchase.—When the United States acquire lands within the limits of a State by purchase, with the consent of the legislature of the State, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings, the Constitution confers upon them exclusive jurisdiction of the tract so acquired. (Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525, 539; Chicago & Pacific Ry. Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S., 542; Benson v. U. S., 146 U. S., 325.)

The purchase of land in a State by the General Government, with legislative consent, does not, ipso facto confer upon the General Government exclusive jurisdiction, unless the purchase is for a fort or for some other purpose distinctly named in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution. (In re Kelly, 71 Fed. Rep., 545.)

Cession of jurisdiction by the State may take place in two ways; indirectly, by an act of the State legislature consenting to the purchase of the land by the United States; and directly, by an act of the State legislature granting the jurisdiction to the United States. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 460; U. S. v. Tucker, 122 Fed. Rep., 520.)

It is thoroughly settled by numerous adjudications that all such Federal jurisdiction as the Constitution contemplates is acquired by the United States in the mere consent of the State to the purchase; and that upon such consent the jurisdiction of the State ceases and that of Congress comes in, by virtue of the Constitution. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628.)

This law does not require the cession of jurisdiction, exclusive or otherwise. When the legislature consents to the purchase, the Constitution provides for exercising exclusive legislation, which is full jurisdiction, over all places so purchased for the erection of dockyards, etc. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

“‘Exclusive legislation’ signifies exclusive jurisdiction.” (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 578.)

Section 355 prohibits the expenditure of money only upon any site or land purchased by the United States until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title and until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land or site may be to such purchase has been given. It does not limit the expenditure of money to cession of jurisdiction. (Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 3, 1908, file 7101-6.)

The purchase of lands by the United States for public purposes within the territorial limits of a State does not of itself oust the jurisdiction of sovereignty of such State over lands so purchased. But when a purchase of lands for any of the Constitutional purposes is made by the National Government, and the State legislature has given its consent to the purchase, the land so purchased by the very terms of the Constitution, ipso facto falls within the exclusive legislation of Congress, and the State jurisdiction is completely ousted. Exclusive jurisdiction is the necessary attendant upon exclusive legislation. (U. S. v. Cornell, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14867, per Story, Circuit Justice.)

Where the State consents to the purchase, with reservation of power to serve civil and criminal process, and the United States accepts such condition, it follows that the officers of the State, in executing such process, act under the authority of the United States. No offenses committed within the territory so purchased are committed against the laws of the State, nor can such offenses be punishable by the courts of the State unless the Congress of the United States should give said courts jurisdiction thereof. (Commonwealth v. Clary, 8 Mass., 72; U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537; file 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

Where jurisdiction expressly ceded.—The law from which section 355 is taken required "the consent of the legislature" and provided in another section that application should be made to the State for "a cession of jurisdiction." Thus it appears that Congress understood "consent to the purchase" and "cession of jurisdiction" as concurrent, if not identical facts, and rightfully. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628.)

It has become usual in the action of the legislatures of the States in these cases not to stop at consent to the purchase, but to add cession of jurisdiction in express terms, but most frequently with reservation of certain concurrent jurisdiction to the State. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628; 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

The effect of all such actions is to confer on the United States the whole jurisdiction of the Constitution—that is, rights of Federal legislation coextensive with the subject matter. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628; U. S. v. Carter, 84 Fed. Rep., 622; In re Ladd, 74 Fed. Rep., 31; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Chiles, 214 U. S., 274; U. S. v. Tucker, 122 Fed. Rep., 518, citing Palmer v. Barrett, 162 U. S., 402; Sharon v. Hill, 24 Fed. Rep., 729; Martin v. House, 39 Fed. Rep., 694; Bannon v. Burnes, 39 Fed. Rep., 899; State v. Mack, 23 Nev., 359, 47 Pac., 763; Foley v. Shriver, 81 Va., 572.)

Of course the property of the United States in such places is not subject to the jurisdiction of the State. Civil acts done there will be of Federal resort; and crimes committed there must be justiciable by the courts of the United States. On the other hand, such ceded lands within a State are not to be made places of refuge from its civil or criminal jurisdiction or of escape from civil obligations due to any of its inhabitants. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628.)

It is competent for the State in relinquishing its sovereignty and ceding it to the United States to reserve the right to serve civil and criminal process; but where such a reservation was not made the United States has exclusive jurisdiction over the reservation, and the sheriff of the county within which it is situated has no power to serve thereon any process whatsoever issued by a court of that State, for it is an elementary principle of law that a judicial officer can not serve process beyond his jurisdiction. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

Where neither consent nor cession of jurisdiction.—Where lands are acquired in any other way by the United States within the limits of a State than by purchase with its consent [and jurisdiction is not ceded by the State], they will hold the lands subject to this qualification: That if upon them forts, arsenals, or other public buildings are erected for the use of the General Government, such buildings, with their appurtenances, as instrumentalities for the execution of its powers, will be free from any such interference and jurisdiction of the State as would destroy or impair their effective use for the purposes designed. Such is the law with reference to all instrumentalities created by the General Government. Their exemption from State control is essential to the independence and sovereign authority of the United States within the sphere of their delegated powers; but when not used as such instrumentalities the legislative power of the State over the places acquired will be as full and complete as over any other places within her limits. (Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525, 539; Chicago & Pacific Ry. Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S., 542; Benson v. U. S., 146 U. S., 325; U. S. v. Tierney, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16517; U. S. v. Tucker, 122 Fed. Rep., 518.)

Where the State has neither consented to the purchase nor ceded jurisdiction to the United States, the State retains complete and exclusive political jurisdiction over such land, and there can be no question that persons there committing crime are subject to trial and punishment by the State and not by the United States. (U. S. v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 88 Fed. Rep., 891, 894; U. S. v. Penn., 48 Fed. Rep., 669; In re O'Connor, 37 Wis., 384.)

Mere ownership and occupancy by the United States of land within a State do not suffice to oust the jurisdiction of the State, even when such occupancy is with the full knowledge and tacit consent of such State, and even though the title of the United States antedates the existence of the State (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 573); where no reservation was made by Congress, either in an act giving existence to a new Territory, or in the act admitting the Territory as a State. (Cary v. State, 4 Kans., 49; U. S. v. Stahl, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16373.)

Status of residents.—Persons residing in places so ceded are in many respects exteriorized, so as not to be subject to personal taxation by the State, not to acquire a pauper settlement therein, not to be entitled to the benefit of its public schools, nor to the enjoyment of its elective franchise. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 628.)

When Congress possesses exclusive legislative power over a naval reservation, the laws of the State can not be allowed any operation or effect within the limits thereof. (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Chiles, 214 U. S., 274—suit to recover penalty provided by laws of Virginia for non-receipt of a telegram.)

Where the general consent of the State is given to the purchase and where there is no other condition or reservation in the act granting such consent but that of a concurrent jurisdiction of the State for the serving of civil process and criminal process against persons charged with crimes committed out of such territory, the Government of the United States has the sole and exclusive jurisdiction over such territory for all purposes of legislation and jurisprudence with the single exception expressed, and consequently no persons are amenable to the laws of the State for crimes and offenses committed within said territory, and persons residing within the same do not acquire the civil and political privileges nor do they become subject to the civil duties and obligations of inhabitants of the towns within which such territory is situated. (Fort Leavenworth

R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 536, citing 1 Met., 580.)

Persons in the employment of the United States actually residing in the limits of the armory at Harpers Ferry do not possess the civil and political rights, nor are they subject to taxation and other obligations of citizens of the State of Virginia. The privilege of not paying taxes in such a case is a personal one of the party claiming it and not, like the exemption of property of the United States from taxation, a right of the Government as such which it would be the duty of the Government to maintain. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 577.)

A State may cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over a tract of land within its limits and may prescribe conditions to the cession if they are not inconsistent with the effective use of the property for the purposes intended. If a State thus ceding to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over a tract within its limits reserves to itself the right to tax private property therein, and the United States do not dissent, their acceptance of the grant with the reservation will be implied. (Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525.)

Where an act of Ohio ceding to the United States its jurisdiction over lands within that State for the purposes of a National Asylum for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, provided that nothing in said act should be construed to prevent the officers, employees, and inmates of the asylum who were qualified voters of the State from exercising the right of suffrage at all township, county, and State elections in the township in which the national asylum should be located, it was held that, upon the purchase of the territory by the United States with the consent of the legislature of the State, the General Government became invested with exclusive jurisdiction over it and its appurtenances in all cases whatsoever; and that the inmates of such asylum resident within the territory, being within such exclusive jurisdiction, were not residents of the State so as to entitle them to vote within the meaning of the State constitution, which conferred the elective franchise upon its residents alone. (Sinks v. Reese, 19 Ohio St., 306; Ft. Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 536.) [The case of Sinks v. Reese was disapproved in In re O'Connor, 37 Wis., 379, which latter case was in effect reaffirmed in Clarke v. Milwaukee Co., 53 Wis., 65, 9 N. W., 782. The O'Connor case held that act of State legislature purporting to cede jurisdiction to the United States was void, as it is not competent for the legislature to abdicate its jurisdiction over its territory except where the lands are purchased by the United States for the specific purposes contemplated by the Constitution. The cases were reviewed in In re Kelly, 71 Fed. Rep., 545, concerning jurisdiction of Northwestern Branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.]

Right of Secretary to grant revocable license for use of Government land.—The Secretary of War has authority to grant a revocable license to a railway company to lay a single track on a Government reservation. Long-continued exercise of a power of this kind, and the open and notorious use of Government reservations by such licensees without legislative objection from Congress and without the adoption of any legislative rule upon the subject, implies the tacit assent of Congress to this custom. At the same time this custom can not be maintained upon any ground except benefit to the public interests, either directly or indirectly. It can not be used as a basis for granting, under the guise of a temporary license, a substantially permanent right to maintain a railroad. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 245; see also 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 537, 565; 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 544.)

While the opinions cited were confined to the question of granting a license to a private person for the use of Government reservations, yet the same principles apply wherever the proposal is to permit the use of the property of the United States Government by persons or agencies other than its own departments. Specifically, held applicable to use of naval reservations by government of Porto Rico. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 205.)

Power of Congress to limit or surrender its jurisdiction.—In numerous cases, especially in acts authorizing the acquisition of sites for public buildings, Congress has latterly required from the States a cession of jurisdiction for all purposes excepting "the administration of the criminal laws of the State and the service of civil process therein." (See 21 Stat., 142; 22 Stat., 94, 152, 161; 23 Stat., 282; 24 Stat., 544; 25 Stat., 444; 26 Stat., 724.) "In these cases, by force of the exception, there is left to the State the administration of its criminal laws over the premises acquired by the General Government, and consequently the cognizance of offenses against its laws committed thereon, as fully as the same existed before such acquisition." (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 611.)

Where the State assents to the purchase, no offenses committed within the territory so purchased can be punishable by the courts of the State "unless the Congress of the United States shall give to said courts jurisdiction thereof." (Commonwealth v. Clary, 8 Mass., 72; file 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

In this connection, consult Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 534, quoting U. S. v. Cornell, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14867, to the effect that "It may well be doubted whether Congress is, by the terms of the Constitution, at liberty to purchase lands for forts, dockyards, etc., with the consent of the State legislature, where such consent is so qualified that it will not justify the exclusive legislation of Congress there." See also 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 34, holding that, if the act of the State legislature amount to consent, any exceptions, reservations, or qualifications contained in the act are void, because the consent being given by the legislature, the Constitution vests in Congress exclusive legislation over the place beyond the reach both of Congress and the legislature, and in In re Ladd, 74 Fed. Rep., 31, holding that jurisdiction having once been ceded by the State and accepted by the United States, it "could not be recaptured by the action of the State alone."

By joint resolution, approved October 22, 1914, Congress ceded jurisdiction to the State of California over certain lands in the Presidio of San Francisco and Fort Mason Military Reservations during their occupancy by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., the United States having possessed exclusive jurisdiction over said reservations. (See also act Jan. 21, 1871 (16 Stat., 399), and in Re Kelly, 71 Fed. Rep., 545.)

Cas. No. 13759 (naval vessel at navy yard, Norfolk, Va.); file 26283-988:2 (navy yard, New York); General Order No. 121, September 17, 1914 (general instructions relative to jurisdiction, civil and naval authorities). As to naval reservations in State of Maryland and particularly Indianhead, see below "Right of coroners to hold inquests on reservations."

Service of process on persons in naval or civil service.—The reservation of power to the State to serve civil or criminal process within the limits of a naval reservation empowers the State or municipal authorities forcibly to take possession of persons in the naval or civil service within such limits, whether on shore or on vessels permanently stationed at the yard, subject to the qualification that, in order that such service of process may not interfere with the operations of the Federal Government, the person deputed to perform that duty should first obtain the permission of the commandant, and such permission should only be withheld upon the most forcible and cogent reasons of public necessity. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

The principle that no State has the right to interfere with the instrumentalities of the Federal Government has been recognized from the earliest days of our Government. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911, citing Railroad Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525; Railway Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S., 542, 545; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat., 316; Osborn v. The Bank, 9 Wheat., 738; Dobbins v. Erie Co., 16 Pet., 435; see also file 26524-57, Feb. 12, 1914.)

There is no act of Congress authorizing a call by a governor for the surrender of an officer of the Navy charged with having broken the peace of a State, nor any law authorizing an arrest by the executive with a view to a forcible surrender of him for the purposes of trial. However, advised that the accused be ordered by the Navy Department to surrender himself. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 244.)

The civil authorities are not empowered to arrest persons, either in the naval or the civil service of the United States, within the limits of a navy yard, whether on shore or on board vessels at the yard, even where jurisdiction has been retained by the State to serve process, without first obtaining the permission of the commandant, to the end that such service of process shall not interfere with or obstruct the operations of the United States Government. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.) However, the application to the commanding officer is not jurisdictional, the matter being one that does not go to the jurisdiction of the civil court issuing the process. Accordingly the want of an application to the commanding officer would be a mere informality which might make the warrant of arrest irregular but would not make it void or liable to be attacked upon a habeas corpus proceeding. (Attorney General to Secretary of the Navy, Nov. 14, 1914, file 7657-261:1.)

It is not intended that there should be any friction between the civil and naval authorities in this matter. Should a question arise at any time the commandant should inform the local authorities that the Navy Department has no desire to obstruct the operation of State laws by preventing the punishment of persons in the Navy or of persons in the civil service for violation of such laws; and that upon presentation of lawful process in proper hands the person wanted will invariably be delivered to the civil officer or such officer will be allowed to serve the process himself, whichever course appears the more advisable, provided that the case is not one in which, by reason of any Federal interest involved, the United States should intervene. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

Commanding officers of vessels and shore stations of the Navy or Marine Corps must communicate with the Secretary of the Navy and await his instructions before delivering to civil authorities, State or Federal, any person in their custody or under their control. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914.)

Before delivering any such person to State authorities for trial assurance must be obtained from the State authorities that the person so delivered will be returned to the naval authorities at the place of his delivery without expense to the United States, if the naval authorities shall desire his return. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914.)

The preceding paragraph applies even though the State authorities have expressly retained jurisdiction to serve civil or criminal process. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914.) Otherwise there would be an interference with instrumentalities of the Federal Government, no appropriation being available for the return of men to naval jurisdiction under such circumstances. (File 26524-57, Feb. 12, 1914.)

Even where land is purchased for use as a military post without the consent of the legislature, neither the State nor any county of the State would have the right to interfere with any instrumentalities necessary to the proper use of such lands as a military post, and to render that use effective and complete. (Pundt v. Pendleton, 167 Fed. Rep., 1001.)

Requisition must be made by the governor, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy and complying with the rules governing interstate extradition of criminals in civil life, in all cases in which the person whose delivery is desired is in the naval service and is not serving at a navy yard or other place within the territorial limits of the State making the request. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 10.)

Before delivering to the civil authorities of a State any person in the naval service, "the convenience of the public service requires that we should know at what time his trial will come on." The man may be indicted in his absence, and if this is done the governor will be able to inform the Navy Department at what time the trial will take place. (See 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 244; see also file 26524-126, May 17, 1915.)

A naval prisoner will not be delivered to the civil authorities, Federal or State, for trial until his case has been finally disposed of by the naval authorities except in certain cases where his surrender is desired upon a serious charge, such as felonious homicide. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914.)

The expression "naval prisoner" includes any person serving sentence of court-martial, or in custody awaiting trial by court-martial, or disposition of charges against him. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914. As to definition of "custody" see Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

Service of subpoenas by the civil authorities on persons in the naval service, afloat or ashore, will not be allowed until the permission of the commanding officer has first been obtained. (G. O. No. 121, Sept. 17, 1914.)

Where an enlisted man was charged with a crime against a civilian, alleged to have been committed on a vessel of the Atlantic Reserve Fleet at the navy yard, Philadelphia, the department declined to deliver him to the civil authorities of Pennsylvania on the ground that the latter were without jurisdiction. (File 26524-127, Mar. 23, 1915.)

Right of coroners to hold inquests on reservations.—In places over which Congress has exclusive power of legislation, it may undoubtedly exclude coroners and all other State officers from exercising their functions upon such premises; but where Congress not having exercised this right, a coroner enters the reservation to investigate an accident, and no government official attempts to keep him out, and the Federal Government does not complain of an invasion of its exclusive jurisdiction: Held, that the coroner's presence and proceedings were attended with the implied if not the express sanction of both governments and were demanded by the exigencies of the occasion; and that he was entitled to recover his usual fees from the county for holding such inquest. (County of Allegheny v. McClung, 53 Pa. St., 482.)

A coroner is not authorized to hold inquests on the bodies of persons dying at a place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States; but he may be permitted to enter such place to hold inquests on the bodies of unknown persons found washed upon its shores or floating in the neighboring waters (McClure's Dig., 1901, par. 639); or upon the bodies of persons dying as a result of criminal acts committed upon them outside the reservation (Army Dig., 1912, p. 270).

If a death occurs upon lands over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, and such death was not caused by any act within the acknowledged jurisdiction of the State within whose boundaries such land is situated, then a coroner could have no jurisdiction in the matter and could not, under the reserved right of the State to serve process upon such lands, come upon them and hold an inquest. Furthermore, such a proceeding would be of no use as a step in the criminal procedure of the State, because the State would have no jurisdiction to try the offender. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911; see also file 26283-988:2, Jan. 18, 27, 1916.)

But if the body of a drowned person were found in waters within the limits of a navy yard, and no drowning had occurred at the yard, it would be proper to allow the coroner to hold an inquest. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

Where a person in the naval service who has been injured outside the navy yard, returns thereto and dies from the injury, the coroner if he should so desire should be permitted to hold an inquest, because the injury was inflicted or occurred while the deceased was within the jurisdiction of the State. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

In proper cases, and when thought advisable, but as not establishing a precedent or as acknowledging any jurisdiction of the State to do so, a coroner might be allowed, as a matter of courtesy, to come into a navy yard to hold an inquest; but before permitting such action, the commanding officer or commandant should feel convinced that such a course would be advisable or accomplish some desirable end. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

A coroner has the right to hold an inquest in case of accident resulting in death, occurring within the limits of a naval reservation where concurrent jurisdiction exists. (File 3727-97.)

In the case of an enlisted man of the Navy killed on board a battleship at the navy yard, Philadelphia, the coroner attempted to hold an inquest outside the yard and applied for delivery of the enlisted man charged with the homicide and against whom court-martial proceedings had been commenced. On advice of the Department of Justice this application was denied. (File 6674-29, Apr., 1907.)

By laws of Maryland (act Apr. 8, 1902, amended Mar. 30, 1908) the State retained concurrent jurisdiction with the United States so far as that " * * * such criminal or other process as shall issue under the authority of the State of Maryland against any person or persons charged with crimes or misdemeanors committed within or without the limits of the said lands may be executed therein, in the same manner as if no jurisdiction had been hereby ceded." It appears extremely doubtful whether the right of the State to serve criminal process in the case of an offense committed within Government land would be of much avail, since the courts of Maryland would certainly have no jurisdiction to try a person for a crime committed within the limits of the naval proving ground at Indianhead or on any other naval reservation in that State. Nevertheless, the law gives the State the right to serve its criminal process thereon, and such right should be respected. An offender under such circumstances, when called upon to plead to the indictment in a State court, might interpose a plea to the jurisdiction of such court, and it is believed that such plea would be sustained. It would seem further that a coroner should be allowed to hold his inquest if he so desires within the limits of any naval reservation in the State of Maryland; but that the result would be as stated, if it should be found that any crime had been committed on the reservation. (File 6769-21, July 19, 1911.)

Indianhead.—The land purchased for the naval proving ground was acquired at three different times, to wit: May, 1890, September, 1891, and August, 1901. In 1900 there was an act passed by the General Assembly of Maryland giving consent to the purchase, generally, by the United States of lands for the purpose of forts, magazines, arsenals, coast defenses, etc., and the erection of barracks, garrisons, and other needful buildings. Before 1900 there was no law authorizing the purchase of land in Maryland except for special purposes (lighthouse stations, buoys, etc.), and the acquisition of lands under certain circumstances by condemnation. The act of 1900 must be taken as operating prospectively only, and therefore does not cover the purchases of 1890 and 1891. The land acquired in 1901 would come within the act of 1900 giving consent to the purchase. There was also an act passed April 5, 1906, ceding jurisdiction to the United States over lands acquired in Maryland, which act apparently had reference to lands to be acquired after its passage, and did not operate retroactively. The act April 8, 1902, had relation to lands which had been theretofore or were afterwards to be acquired, but expressly excepted from its operation Charles County, in which Indianhead is located. (Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 3, 1908, file 7101-6.) This exception as to Charles County was repealed by act Mar. 30, 1908. See file 7101-10, Apr. 17, 1908, and 7101-9.)

In an opinion rendered by the Attorney General of the State of Maryland, February 7, 1916, it was held that the United States unquestionably have exclusive jurisdiction over the Naval Proving Ground, Indianhead, except for the right of the State to execute process upon the reservation for offenses committed outside, but the State has no right to punish offenses committed on the reservation. (See file 6692-233-7.)

VII. MISCELLANEOUS.

Use of appropriations.—When in an act appropriating for the purchase of additional land for a public building the piece of ground to be purchased is particularly described, the appropriation can not be used for the purchase of another tract equally suitable for the purpose and at a price within the sum provided, although the piece named in the act can not be secured within the amount appropriated. (2 Comp. Dec., 77.)

An appropriation for construction of a dam impliedly authorizes the purchase of necessary land. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 212. See also 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 665.)

An appropriation under the War Department for erection of a monument is not authority for purchase of land. (6 Comp. Dec., 791; see also 7 Comp. Dec., 524.)

The expense of procuring an abstract of title to land to be used as a site for a fortification is a proper charge against the appropriation made for the purchase of the site, if the abstract is needed by the United States attorney to assist him in examining the title, provided the land is to be purchased and not condemned. (3 Comp. Dec., 216; compare 23 Comp. Dec., 53.)

Payment for the services of a special assistant United States attorney in examining titles to land can not be made from the appropriation available for the work in connection with which the land was needed, the appropriation under the Department of Justice for pay of such assistants being exclusive. (1 Comp. Dec., 317; compare 9 Comp. Dec., 793.)

Where an abstract of title is furnished as a preliminary to the purchase of the land, the expense is properly chargeable to the appropriation provided to pay for the land, the expense being regarded as part of the cost of the property. (Citing 3 Comp. Dec., 216, 217.) But the expense of procuring an abstract of title to land already acquired by the United States is payable from the appropriation for contingencies of the department procuring the abstract and not against an appropriation made specifically for improvements on the land. (4 Comp. Dec., 62.)

By act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. 941), it was provided that in the procurement of sites for public buildings the grantors must furnish, free of charge, all requisite abstracts, official certificates, and evidences of title. Referring to this law the Comptroller said: "The exact public buildings to which it refers is not entirely free from doubt, but I am clearly of the opinion that it has no relation whatever to sites for fortifications under the War Department." (3 Comp. Dec., 218.)

By necessary implication the latter proviso of the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 941), positively prohibits the payment for an abstract of title to land purchased by the United States as a site for any public building. If such an abstract could be procured and paid for prior to the agreement for the purchase of the site, the purpose of this provision would be entirely defeated. The provision must therefore be construed as prohibiting payment for an abstract procured prior to, as well as for one procured at the time of, the purchase. (7 Comp. Dec., 51.)

Payment for abstract of title for land not purchased as a site for a public building may be made from the appropriation for purchase of the land and the making of the improvement thereby authorized. The act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 941), does not apply to such case. (8 Comp. Dec., 212.)

It is well settled that in the purchase of land on account of the United States the preliminary expenses of such purchase, as procuring abstracts of title, etc., and such other services as are not legal services, are payable from the appropriation for the purchase of the land; but that the expense of any legal proceedings taken by the Department of Justice in connection therewith are payable from an appropriation of that department. (9 Comp. Dec., 793, citing 3 Comp. Dec., 216.)

Section 355 has been modified by the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 941). It has been held that this act prohibits the payment by the Government of the expense of an abstract of title to land purchased by the United States as a site for a public building, and that this prohibition applies to an abstract procured either prior to or at the time of the purchase of such land. (14 Comp. Dec., 579, citing 7 Comp. Dec., 51.)

When a suit for condemnation is brought the expense of such suit, like all other suits in which the United States is a party, is payable from the appropriations made for the Department of Justice. (3 Comp. Dec., 216; see also 1 Comp. Dec., 317; 2 Comp. Dec., 201.)

Transfer of public lands.—Lands reserved for military purposes can not be restored to the public domain without an act of Congress; and it would also seem that they can not be transferred to another department. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 143; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 120; file 984-3, Oct., 1905. See also note to sec. 161, R. S., "Custody of Property and Records.")

The President has authority to transfer the use and control of lands in the Philippine Islands, reserved by Executive Order for naval purposes, to the War Department for military purposes. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 262.)

Any part or parts of the naval stations in Porto Rico no longer needed for the purposes of the Navy Department may be transferred to the control of the War Department or of any other department, either by formal Executive Order or by arrangement between the Secretary of the Navy and the head of the other department. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 205, citing 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 269; 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 262; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 124.)

Any part of the naval stations in Porto Rico may be transferred to the Government of Porto Rico under express authority contained in the act June 14, 1910 (36 Stat., 467), provided it is embraced within the terms of that act. While this transfer may be made by the Secretary of the Navy, it would be preferable to have the formal transfer effected by presidential proclamation. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 205.)

As to those parts of the naval stations in Porto Rico which are not within the provisions of the act of 1910, there is no warrant of law for their formal transfer or cession to the Government of Porto Rico. Permission, however, may be given to the Insular Government through a letter or instrument in the nature of a revocable license for the use of these parts of the stations and the buildings thereon and for the construction of improvements temporary in their nature. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 205.)

It would be difficult to lay down complete rules in regard to these reservations. They are made under such a variety of circumstances, for such various purposes, and under such different laws that each case is more conveniently considered and discussed as it arises in connection with the facts relating to it. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 124.)

Sec. 356. [Opinions of Attorney-General required by heads of Departments.]

The head of any Executive Department may require the opinion of the Attorney-General on any questions of law arising in the administration of his Department.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 6, v. 16, p. 163.)

I. WHO MAY REQUEST OPINION.

II. MUST BE QUESTION OF LAW.

III. MUST ARISE IN ADMINISTRATION OF DEPARTMENT.

IV. FORM OF REQUEST.

V. WEIGHT OF OPINIONS.

VI. JURISDICTION, ATTORNEY GENERAL AND COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY.

VII. MISCELLANEOUS.

I. WHO MAY REQUEST OPINION.

President or head of department.—It has repeatedly been held that the Attorney General is not authorized to give his official opinion upon a question of law where it is not called for by the President or by the head of a department. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 21.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to give an official opinion in any case except on the call of the President or some one of the heads of departments. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 211.)

By long and unbroken construction and practice it has been settled that the Attorney General acts, in performing this legal duty, simply as the law adviser of the President and heads of departments. He is bound upon points of law and facts stated by them to give legal opinions in aid of their judgment in matters for their decision. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 4.)

When in the course of discharging the duties of their departments, a question of law shall arise, whose solution is a prerequisite to the discharge of those duties, the head of any department has a right to request the opinion of the Attorney General on such question of law and he is bound by his oath to answer it. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 608, 611.)

The Attorney General is not authorized or required to give an official opinion except to the President or to the head of an Executive Department, and the opinion must be needed for the guidance of the head of the department and should relate to some matter calling for action or decision on his part. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 174; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 609, 723.)

An opinion of the Attorney General may be requested by two or more heads of departments jointly, and will be rendered to all who joined in the request. (See 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 303; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 494.)

When a "difference of opinion" arises between several executive departments as to the construction of the law, the primary question is as to which is vested with the determination and responsibility of the question. That one only can have jurisdiction over the subject-matter is plain. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 178, 180.)

As to opinions which may be required of the Attorney General by the President, see section 354, Revised Statutes.

Subordinate officers of the Government who desire an official opinion must seek it through the head of the department to which such subordinate is accountable. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 211.) [Where an opinion was requested by a subordinate officer of a department, the Attorney General has replied to the head of the department. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 220.) In another case the Attorney General addressed his opinion to a subordinate officer of a department, it appearing that he requested the opinion "By direction of the President." (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 150.) An opinion was rendered to the Secretary of the Navy in response to a request from the latter's aid. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 531.)]

For the guidance of the heads of bureaus and other officers of the departments in the discharge of their duties provision is made by section 361, Revised Statutes, for assistance from the officers of the Department of Justice, under the direction of the Attorney General. The Attorney General can not render an opinion in such cases, even though it be requested through the head of the department, where the matter is not one calling for action or decision of the latter. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 174; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 609, 723.)

Question suggested but not decided whether law allows questions in the War and Navy Departments to be sent to the Attorney General by somebody else than the Secretary. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 59. See sec. 357, R. S., and note.)

It is true that the Attorneys General have given to heads of departments advice and opinion upon questions arising in the bureaus of their respective departments; but such advice and opinion are intended to aid only the judgment of the Secretary himself in deciding such questions. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 4.)

The Attorney General is not, in general, to give official opinions to subordinate officers of the Government. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 326, 334.)

An opinion of the Attorney General upon any question arising in the administration of the Treasury Department can only be had at the instance of the Secretary. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen. 59.)

Legislative Department.—In the absence of any statutory authority to give official opinions to the legislative department of the Government, the assumption of such a power by the Attorney General would be in violation of his oath of office and of dangerous example. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 164.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to give his official opinion upon a call of either House of Congress or any committee or Member thereof. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 358.)

The Attorney General can not, without violating his oath, render an opinion to the Speaker upon the order of the House of Representatives. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 335.)

The Attorney General is not authorized by law to give an official opinion to the House of Representatives in response to a resolution thereof. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 87; citing 2 Op. Att'y. Gen., 499; 5 Op. Att'y. Gen., 561; 10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 164; 12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 544; 12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 546; 14 Op. Att'y. Gen., 17; 14 Op. Att'y. Gen., 177; 15 Op. Att'y. Gen., 475.)

It is not within the province of the Attorney General to advise committees of Congress upon questions of law occurring in matters before them. (14 Op. Att'y. Gen., 17.)

[The Attorney General rendered a lengthy opinion to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, May 5, 1905, which is published with the following note: "This opinion, properly speaking, is not an official one, but is to be regarded as a letter of advice. It is printed with the official opinions solely because of the importance of the subject considered." (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 422.) The Attorney General has also rendered an opinion to the House of Representatives. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 253.) Compare 30 Op. Att'y. Gen., 88.]

II. MUST BE QUESTION OF LAW.

In General.—The authority of the Attorney General to give opinions is limited by Congress to "questions of law." (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 590.)

The Attorney General can not give official opinions except upon questions of law. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 36.)

Being thus limited to questions of law, the Attorney General has not been clothed with power to investigate matters of fact. He has no authority to compel the attendance of witnesses, or to administer oaths to them; and in short has none of the machinery by which, through the control of persons and papers, truth may be elicited and falsehood exposed. Thus deficient in the means of ascertaining the facts, his conclusions upon the law would necessarily be valueless, since their accuracy would depend on the fullness and certainty with which the facts were established. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 164.)

Can not decide questions of fact.—The Attorney General has no power to investigate or decide questions of fact, but only to give advice on questions of law as they arise out of facts authoritatively laid before him by the head of a department. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 267.)

It is not the province of the Attorney General to settle a controversy involving matters of fact. He can only give his opinion on questions of law. (12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 206.)

It is not within the competency of the Attorney General to make a finding of facts in any case, but he can only give an opinion on questions of law arising upon a statement of facts presented to him by the officer requesting an opinion. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 696.)

The Attorney General only has jurisdiction of questions of law, and must be furnished with a definite statement of the facts. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen. 36; see also 1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 253.)

As the Attorney General is not at liberty under the law to make a finding of facts, he will lay aside the evidence submitted for his consideration with request for an opinion, and take as the case for opinion the statement contained in the communication from the head of the department. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 547.)

The Attorney General is not permitted by law to render an official opinion to the head of a department upon questions of fact. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 174; citing 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 697, 711, 717, 740.)

The Attorney General is under no obligation to render an award, or to determine a question of fact in cases referred to him. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 326, 334.)

The law is settled that the Attorney General can not properly decide questions of fact. Such questions must be determined by the head of the department in which they arise. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 384.)

The Attorney General, in discharging the duties imposed upon him by section 356, Revised Statutes, is required only to answer questions of law and can not consider questions of fact upon evidence submitted. Where papers containing evidence accompany the request for the Attorney General's opinion, he will not examine same, but will assume that all the facts have been found in favor of the applicant. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 253.)

The Attorney General has no authority to give an official opinion upon questions of fact submitted by the head of a department. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 1.)

It is obvious that when the Attorney General proceeds to give his opinion and advice on any question of law the facts giving rise to such question must be either stated to or assumed by him; and when the head of the department calling for his opinion gives him those facts, he must necessarily adopt them as the bases of his reflections and judgment. Whether they are presented in the form of a direct statement or of an argumentative examination of the circumstances can make no difference. In either case it would be manifestly improper to receive from any other source statements or inferences conflicting with those which are put before him by the only authority legally known to him in the premises. To act otherwise would involve a usurpation of power; for it would be converting an office created for the sole purpose of assisting and advising the executive departments on questions of law into an appellate tribunal for the reexamination of their decisions on matters of fact. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 1.)

The Attorney General has no authority to settle questions of fact. He is obliged to take the facts of a case as they are stated to him and to predicate his opinion thereon. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 309.)

It has been held from a very early date that an official opinion can be required and given only when the question submitted is a question of law. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 614.)

The Attorney General can not undertake to settle conflicting questions of fact raised by various papers submitted, but will look to the submitted statement of facts alone. (22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 156.)

The Attorney General's duty is limited to questions of law arising in the administration of the respective departments. Where the subject matter is not of that character, and consequently not within the scope of duty thus marked out, he is without authority to officially advise thereon. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 365.)

What constitutes prompt delivery by a contractor is a question of fact, in regard to which the Attorney General is not required to express an opinion. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 47.)

The Attorney General declines to render an opinion upon a matter submitted which involves the determination of questions of fact. (26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 604.)

The advisory powers of the Attorney General do not extend to an examination of evidence to ascertain what is established by a preponderance of the testimony (citing 17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 172); nor can he settle facts from papers submitted, and then proceed to give an opinion thereon (citing 18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 487; 19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 672). (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 218.)

The Attorney General will not enter into the consideration of disputed questions of evidence. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 239.)

The Attorney General will not undertake to find the facts involved in a request for an opinion. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 393.)

Where the record of a court-martial trial was sent to the Attorney General by the President for a report, among other things, upon the question whether it contained any "unjustified conclusion of fact" which would render it the duty of the President to withhold approval of the findings of the court-martial, or any part thereof, and generally to advise the President as to the action he should take upon the record as transmitted to him from the court-martial; the Attorney General rendered an opinion upon the questions of fact thus presented, as well as upon the questions of law involved. (Case of Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, U. S. A., 22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 589.)

In general, the Attorney General will render an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy upon questions of law presented by the records of court-martial proceedings (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 286; 29 Op. Att'y. Gen., 563; C. M. O. No. 4—1913); but will not render an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy upon questions of fact connected therewith nor review the proceedings of a court-martial in search of questions of law. (5 Op. Att'y. Gen., 626.)

Can not decide questions of expediency, administrative discretion, etc.—The advisability of bringing a suit is not a question of law upon which the Attorney General's opinion may be asked. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 702.)

The Attorney General can not with propriety express any judgment concerning the disposition of the matter to which his opinion relates, that being something wholly within the administrative sphere and direction of the head of the department. The Attorney General's duty ends with the rendition of the opinion. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 332.)

The Attorney General's opinion upon a purely administrative matter entirely within the discretion of the head of a department must be considered extra-official and as coming from one whose lack of practical knowledge of the administration of the department makes his opinion on this point far inferior in value to that of the head of the department to whom it is addressed. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 654, 658.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to give an official opinion upon a question which proposes for his consideration nothing more than a subject of controversy between subordinates of a department and private parties. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 365.)

Inquiries involving considerations of administrative discretion and judgment, of practicability and advisability, must be solely determined by the head of the department in his discretion. (24 Op. Att'y. Gen., 118.)

Where there is no doubt that terms are used in a statute in their ordinary acceptation, the duty of applying the statute to a particular state of facts is one of administration merely, involving the determination of questions of fact, and the duty of applying the statute to the facts can not be devolved upon the Attorney General. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 487.)

The Attorney General can not, with propriety, give an official opinion to the head of a department upon the question whether it is expedient for him to prosecute an appeal from the decision of a chief of bureau in another department to the latter's superior in the same department. The question is not necessarily one of law, but may involve merely official discretion. Any questions of law which arise may be presented to the Attorney General by the head of the department in which the appeal is pending. (15 Op. Att'y. Gen., 574.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to express any views upon a matter of propriety lying within the executive judgment and discretion of the head of the department requesting the opinion. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 93.)

It is not within the province of the Attorney General to construe the reasons, affecting his administrative judgment and discretion, which might impel the head of a department to take any action one way or the other in a matter pending before him for decision; he is neither empowered nor required to pass upon the propriety of the exercise by the head of a department of an official discretion. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 524.)

Whether charges proposed to be made by the Secretary of Agriculture for the use of lands or resources within the limits of the national-forest reserves would or would not be reasonable is a matter left by law entirely to the Secretary's discretion. The responsibility, as well as the power, rests with the Secretary. It is not, therefore, a question which can properly be determined by the Attorney General. (26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 421.)

An inquiry which raises a question of propriety and expediency, rather than a question of law, is one to be determined by the head of the department only, and upon which the Attorney General can not advise. [In this case, however, the Attorney General stated that he agreed with the officer requesting his opinion, that the action proposed was of very doubtful expediency.] (26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 579.)

The Attorney General declines to express an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury as to the propriety of a proposed instruction to customs officials, as he is not authorized to express his views upon matters of propriety involving executive judgment and discretion. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 94.)

The advisory powers of the Attorney General do not extend to a question which would appear to turn wholly upon a conclusion of fact as to the status of a bidder, and to involve, therefore, the exercise of judgment and discretion by the head of the department, with which the Attorney General can not under the law or with propriety interfere. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 218.)

The Attorney General refrains from advising as to the propriety of issuing a regulation. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 93.)

Can not construe executive regulations.—It is the province of the head of a department, rather than of the Attorney General, to construe regulations issued by the former. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 36.)

The Attorney General will not interpret a regulation of practice made by the Commissioner of Patents for his own guidance and that of his subordinates for the convenient, intelligent, and orderly disposal of the business of his office. Such regulations, which the heads of bureaus and departments can make, modify, or annul at will, or enforce or waive, as seems expedient, may well be left for their interpretation to the head of the department or bureau to which they pertain. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 521.)

A regulation, when not specially authorized or demanded by law, is not law in the sense in which that term is used in this section. It is simply a rule of administrative practice in the present instance with reference to the classification and order of precedence in the consideration of cases in the Patent Office. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 521.)

The construction of regulations of the Civil Service Commission is a matter entirely within the province of the commission, and should not be attempted by the Attorney General. Where the question presented is whether the regulation is one that was within the power of the commission to make, the Attorney General's answer will be, that if the regulation is construed to mean thus and so, it is a lawful regulation; otherwise, it is unauthorized. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 649.)

The Attorney General can not give an official opinion upon the construction of customs regulations, which may be modified, at any time by the Secretary of the Treasury. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 255.)

A departmental regulation which is not demanded by law is not law in the sense in which that term is used in section 356. It may more properly be left for interpretation by the head of the department or bureau to which it pertains, and which is responsible for its existence and execution. As the basis of the regulation is to be found only in the will of its maker, to advise him what meaning his language conveys would be useless, since an interpretation unsuitable to him could only result in a revision. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 183.)

Will decide whether proposed or existing regulation is legal.—The question as to the power of an executive officer to issue a rule or regulation or as to its legality, is distinguished from a question as to the proper interpretation of a regulation, which latter question the Attorney General will not answer. (18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 521; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 649.)

The Attorney General will examine regulations proposed to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury for the information of residents of the United States returning from foreign countries, and decide whether or not same are in harmony with the tariff act, and legal. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 93.)

Similarly, the Attorney General will render an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy as to the latter's authority to make certain proposed changes in Navy Regulations. (29 Op. Att'y. Gen., 264; also unpublished opinion, Oct. 27, 1909, file 3980-530.)

The Attorney General will examine a proposed regulation of the State Department with reference to the compensation of consular agents, and decide that such regulation, "being consistent with the provisions of law, may be carried into effect." (22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 163.)

The Attorney General will not render an opinion as to whether or not certain proposed regulations may be adopted and put into effect by the head of a Department, unless it affirmatively appear that such head of Department, as a matter of policy and administrative discretion, is prepared or intends to adopt such regulations or any modification thereof, provided such action would be legal on his part; as it is only then that a question of this character can be said to have so arisen in the administration of the department as to come within the terms of section 356, Revised Statutes. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 49.)

The Attorney General can not answer the question whether a regulation if issued could be enforced, as it is hypothetical as well as judicial. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 93.) (However, in this case, in view of the special object of the proposed regulation, the Attorney General states that, while refraining from advising as to the propriety of issuing the regulation, or as to its fate if it should come before the courts, "it does not seem to me, speaking from the present standpoint, that its general legality can be seriously questioned.")

The validity of a Navy regulation, as applied to cases that might arise in the future, is hardly a proper subject for the Attorney General to pass upon. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 129, citing 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 738.)

The law does not require the Attorney General to undertake the task of examining codes of rules adopted to meet future cases. The establishment of such a practice would require his entire time, and necessitate the imagining of the various contingencies in which their validity might in future cases be questioned, and passing judgment on these possible future problems. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 738.)

The Attorney General will render an opinion as to whether or not an existing regulation is legal. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen. 649; 30 Op. Att'y. Gen., 234.)

The Attorney General will determine that a Navy regulation is valid and "has binding force upon the accounting officers of the Government." (Op. Att'y. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. and A. Memo., 8611.)

Will not advise as to foreign law.—The existence of a foreign law is a question of fact to be proved by competent evidence. The Attorney General can not give an opinion as to the law of a foreign nation. Whether the statements of a foreign ambassador as to the true construction of the legislation of his own Government and the practice thereunder should be accepted as true is a question to be decided by the Secretary of State and not by the Attorney General. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 377; 21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 80; file 26543-124, Aug. 4, 1914. In this connection, see 7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 9.)

Will not examine and approve blank forms.—The law does not require the Attorney General to examine and approve forms of obligations, permits, bonds, and affidavits for future use in the other departments. The establishment of such a practice would require his entire time and necessitate the imagining of the various contingencies in which their validity might in future be questioned and passing judgment on these possible future problems. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 738. But see 27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 173; and file 3355-88, Nov. 7, 1906.)

Questions as to desirability of changing the law.—This section limits the functions of the Attorney General, in the matter of opinions requested by the heads of departments, to questions arising out of the law as it is, and does not seem to call upon him to give his views and opinions upon the advisability of making changes by treaty in any department of jurisprudence. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 598.)

[However, in 6 Opinions Attorney General, 432, the Attorney General expressed the view that "Congress may undoubtedly relax the law in this case," but that it seemed to him "premature" to do so in the existing status of the matter. In 22 Opinions Attorney General, 512, he suggested "that relief be had through Congressional action;" in 24 Opinions Attorney General, 69, he stated, "I have the honor to say, responding to your alternative suggestion, that it may be well to propose to Congress legislation which shall explicitly authorize the issue of letters rogatory by the Patent Office of the United States, and shall clothe Federal courts with the power to execute letters issued by those patent offices of recognized powers which possess and exercise well defined judicial functions;" in 25 Opinions Attorney General, 98, he suggested "that Congressional action be sought to provide for the various features of expense, compensation to the Government or its officers, official liability for the faithful performance of the trust," etc.; on May 27, 1909, he submitted draft of a bill to the Secretary of the Navy, with suggestion that it be introduced in Congress for the purpose of curing defects in a law considered by him in an official opinion. File 22724-7i. See also 26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 70, 74.]

III. MUST ARISE IN ADMINISTRATION OF DEPARTMENT.

Will not answer hypothetical question.—The Attorney General will not give a speculative opinion on an abstract question of law which does not arise in any case presented for the action of an executive department. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 189; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 288, 440; 28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 129, 239, 417; 29 Op. Att'y. Gen., 99; 22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 77; compare 28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 34, 38.)

It has been held from a very early day that an official opinion can be required and given only when the question for decision is one which has already actually arisen, and not a question upon a hypothetical case which may or may not arise in the future. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 614.)

The opinion of the Attorney General may be required on questions of law arising in the administration of a department, but not upon hypothetical cases merely. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 531; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

It is not the duty or practice of the Attorney General to officially answer abstract or hypothetical questions of law. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 568; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

To attempt in advance to settle such questions is to anticipate trouble, and it may well be added, to promote trouble. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414; 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 531; 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 421; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440.)

The Attorney General is not required to write abstract essays on any subject. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440; 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 82.)

The inconvenience will be readily perceived of giving, upon a hypothetical case, an opinion which, upon the consideration of an actual case, may require modification on account of circumstances not imagined, and therefore not considered in the preparation of the opinion. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 531; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440.)

The Attorney General is not permitted, by statute or precedent, to give an opinion upon a question which does not spring out of any present, actually existing case arising in the administration of the department requesting the opinion, but which is a question in a hypothetical case, and one, indeed, which may never arise, and calls in advance for an opinion as to what the department would hold in the future upon a somewhat indefinite state of facts. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

The Attorney General, for obvious reasons, must decline to answer a hypothetical question. He will not, therefore, render an opinion upon a question which is not actually pending at the time before the head of the department requesting it. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 251.)

The inquiry must relate not to a mere moot question but to one which requires immediate action. The answer must be necessary for the protection of the officer making the inquiry, or to insure the lawfulness of the action which he is about to take. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 509.)

It has been the uniform practice of the Department of Justice, established by an unbroken line of opinions, to decline to give an opinion upon a question of law which will be of no assistance to the head of a department or the officers under him in the proper and complete performance of their duties; the necessity for such a practice is at once apparent, and unless it be rigorously adhered to, the Attorney General will frequently find himself placed in the embarrassing situation of being called upon to render opinions upon mere moot questions of law. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 543.)

It is beyond the competency of the Attorney General to give an official opinion upon a question which is purely abstract and hypothetical, and not arising out of an actual case calling for official action. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 559, 564.)

It is impossible to reply to mere speculative points or supposed cases. It has always been the rule of the Attorney General to give opinions only in actual cases. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 82; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 440.)

Whether the head of a department should enter into a certain contract, is hypothetical in its nature, unless it should be affirmatively stated, in substance, that the acceptance of the proposal having been determined to be proper and advisable from the administrative point of view, and the head of the department being ready, accordingly, to enter into a contract, desired to know whether that step was justified by existing provisions of law. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 118.)

Whether a regulation, if issued, could be enforced, is hypothetical as well as judicial; involving speculation, as if the requirement is adopted, proceedings in court to enforce it may or may not be successful. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 93.)

Whether certain regulations may be adopted and put into effect by the head of a department is hypothetical, unless the head of the department has decided to adopt such regulations or any modification thereof, provided such action would be legal on his part; and it is only under these circumstances that the Attorney General can render an opinion on the subject, as it is only then that a question of this character can be said to have so arisen in the administration of the department as to come within the terms of section 356. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 49.)

The Attorney General is prohibited by the restriction contained in section 356, Revised Statutes, from giving an opinion unless an occasion has actually arisen requiring the action of the head of the department submitting it. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 583.)

The established practice of the Department of Justice has been to consider this section as containing an implied prohibition against the rendering of an opinion by the Attorney General unless upon a question of law which has actually arisen, and not upon one which might or could, under certain contingencies, arise in the administration of the department requesting the opinion. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 49.)

The settled policy of the Attorney General is that no opinion should be rendered upon any question of law unless it is specifically formulated in a case actually arising in the administration of a department. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 59.)

The Attorney General declines to give an opinion as to the meaning of a statute, where the question does not appear to have arisen in the administration of the department proposing it. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 695.)

In accordance with the well-established rule, declines to answer the question whether citizens of the Philippine Islands are entitled to the benefits of the patent laws of the United States, there being no case involving that question pending before the department-making the inquiry. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 179.)

Declines to express an opinion as to whether a joint resolution has any retroactive force, for the reason that the question is not predicated upon any actual case arising in the department requesting it. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 556.)

Where no occasion has arisen for the official action of a head of department, the Attorney General will not give an opinion upon a question proposed by him. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 457.)

Will not answer question which is not "pending," has already been decided, etc.—It is required not only that the question must be one arising in the administration of a department, but it must be one which is still pending. A matter which has been considered and decided is not now a "question" upon which the head of a department may require an opinion of the Department of Justice. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440; 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 596.)

Where a claim has already been administered by the head of a department, and consequently no question remains, the Attorney General will not render an opinion even though the head of the department submits the question to him at the request of a committee of Congress. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 138.)

To authorize the Attorney General to express an opinion upon a question of law propounded, it is necessary that a statement of facts should be submitted showing that the question has actually arisen in the administration of a department, in an existing case calling for action. He is not authorized to answer an inquiry with reference to action already taken, whether regarded as an abstract question of law or an inquiry into the legality of the course of a predecessor in office in matters not now demanding official action. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 85.)

The Attorney General declines to give an opinion upon a question submitted which appears to have been decided and definitively disposed of by the department. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 39; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440.)

A question is not practically raised in a case where the Attorney General's opinion is desired only because the same difficulty which has previously arisen may occur again; but it may not, and to settle it in advance is to anticipate trouble. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 421; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440.)

The Attorney General can give official opinions only upon questions of law actually arising in the administration of the department, which are at the time pending, and which must be determined in order that the work of the department may be properly administered. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 618.)

The Attorney General will not give an opinion upon a question where it appears that the department has reached a decision thereupon, and that an opinion is desired as to the "correctness of the interpretations and applications of said law." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 596; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440.)

The Attorney General declines to give an opinion to the head of a department upon a question where no case involving that question is now pending before that department. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 46; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 99.)

An opinion will not be given by the Attorney General where it does not appear that some question exists calling for the action of the department requesting it. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 383.)

The Attorney General is not permitted by statute to respond to a request for an opinion by the head of a department which does not show that a case has presently arisen in the administration of the department. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

The Attorney General will not give an opinion upon an important legal question when it is not practically presented by an existing case before a department. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 506, citing 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 421; 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 50; 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 531; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 332.)

From the foundation of the Government it has been held that the Attorney General is neither required nor authorized to give an opinion upon the request of the head of a department except in cases actually pending for decision by him in such department. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 536, citing 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 7; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 331.)

The Attorney General is not authorized by statute or precedent to respond by an official opinion as to a question of law not shown to be pending and of present executive consequence. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 50.)

An opinion will not be given by the Attorney General where it does not appear that some question exists calling for the action of the department requesting it. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 383; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 342; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 439.)

The cases in which the Attorney General is authorized to give opinions to the heads of executive departments are such as are actually pending in such departments and involve the legal questions submitted. A convicted deserter from the Army, undergoing sentence, must become the recipient of executive clemency and must make application for reenlistment, before the question of the effect of the President's pardon upon his right to reenlist can arise. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 568.)

The question whether a Chinaman resident of the United States could lawfully return if he should revisit his native country, is not a question arising in the administration of the Treasury Department, and can not arise until this Chinaman's return to this country, if he shall decide to depart. Therefore the Attorney General could not properly give the opinion requested. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 667.)

Whether a certain American steamer, if rebuilt in Canada, can be reregistered on her return as a vessel built in the United States, is not a question for the present action of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General can not properly give an opinion thereon. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 723; following 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 667.)

When the solution of the question is not necessary to the discharge of any duty properly belonging to the department, it is not the duty of the Attorney General to give an opinion thereon, and such opinion would consequently be extra-official and unauthorized. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 220; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 7; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 724; see also, 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 611; 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 575; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 311; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 513; 3 Op. Atty. Gen., 368; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 325.)

Will not review decision of a department.—The Attorney General does not possess the power to revise the decisions of an executive department, deliberately made, and entirely satisfactory to the Secretary thereof. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 596; 3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 39.)

The Attorney General can not properly express an official opinion upon a question which has been decided by a department and is presented merely because of the request of counsel for parties interested. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 596.)

Where a question appears to have been decided and definitively disposed of by a department, after very full consideration, upon grounds then and still believed by it to be indisputable, and to be referred to the Attorney General solely in compliance with request of the claimant, the Attorney General can not undertake to give an official opinion thereon without assuming that his office possesses a revisory jurisdiction not conferred upon it by law. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 39; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 440; file 11130-2; C. Mar. 26, 1910.)

An appeal does not lie to the Attorney General from another department by any party assuming to be aggrieved by its action and seeking to have it reviewed. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 326, 334.)

The Attorney General is not an appellate tribunal for the reexamination of decisions of the executive departments on matters of fact. In rendering an opinion he must accept the facts given him by the head of the department calling for his opinion. To act otherwise would involve a usurpation of power. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 1.) The Attorney General is obliged to take the facts of a case as they are stated to him by the head of the department requesting his opinion, and to predicate his opinion thereon. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 309.)

It is not within the authority of the Attorney General to reverse a decision of the Civil Service Commission or to require it to issue a certificate of reinstatement; as the Civil Service Commission is vested with authority in the matter of certification, and when it has exercised that authority it is not apparent that any question in the premises remains upon which the statute permits the head of a department to require the opinion of the Attorney General. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 270.)

No statute exists which authorizes the head of a department, or the Attorney General at his suggestion, to reverse or review the decision of the Civil Service Commission that a person is not entitled to reinstatement. Accordingly the Attorney General declines to render an opinion, upon request of the head of a department, as to whether or not the commission interpreted the law correctly. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 158.)

The Attorney General is not permitted to give an opinion where he is asked to review and express his conclusions upon the correctness of the interpretation and application of the law previously made by the head of a department and not upon a question pending and undetermined. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 440.)

The Attorney General will not render an opinion where it appears that the department has reached conclusions thereupon, and that an opinion is desired as to the correctness of its interpretation and application of the law. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 596.)

A matter which has been considered and decided is not now a "question" upon which the head of the department may require an opinion of the Attorney General. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 596; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 441, 442.)

The Attorney General will not, at the request of a head of a department, review the decision of the head of another department, which latter department had complete and lawful jurisdiction. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 189.)

Will not answer question submitted by head of a department merely for information of subordinate.—The Attorney General is not authorized or required to give an official opinion to the head of a department, except where it is needed for the latter's guidance in some matter calling for action or decision on his part. Accordingly he can not render an opinion to the Secretary of the Interior upon a question which arose in the administration of the office of Commissioner of Patents, and relates to his duties under the law; as to do so would be to overstep the boundaries prescribed for him by a long line of decisions and uniform practice, and to commit himself upon a question which might properly be submitted to him thereafter by the Secretary of the Interior. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 174; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 609, 723.)

The Attorney General's opinion can not be asked upon questions relating only to the duties of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes; advice which can not be asked directly by the Commissioners the Attorney General is not authorized to furnish even when they put the question through the head of a department. His opinion should be needed for the guidance of the head of a department, and should relate to some matter calling for the latter's action or decision. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 724.)

The Attorney General is not the official legal adviser of subordinate officers in the departments. It is true that he often gives the heads of departments advice and opinions upon questions arising in the bureaus of their respective departments, but such advice and opinions are intended to aid only the judgment of the Secretary himself in deciding such questions. To enlarge the rule beyond this extent would not only be unwarranted by law, but would convert the Attorney General into a sort of general appellate court, where dissatisfied claimants might seek relief from adverse decisions and subordinate executive officers find a way of escaping from official labor and responsibility. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 4.) As to whether an exception exists in the special cases of questions arising in the War and Navy Departments, see 18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 59, noted under sec. 357, R. S.)

The Attorney General is not required to give an opinion except on such questions as are necessary to guide the heads of departments in their actions. Accordingly he has no power to give an official opinion upon questions referred to him by the Secretary of the Treasury for the guidance not of the Secretary but of an auditor. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 251.)

The questions which the Attorney General is required to answer are only those the decision of which is needed to govern the action of the head of a department in cases actually arising therein, and the Attorney General must decline to answer a question asked by the head of a department which pertains only to the powers and duties of a commission, although such a commission is properly to be regarded as within the department. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 673.)

The Attorney General has no power to give an official opinion on questions referred by the Secretary of the Treasury at the request of an auditor for the guidance of the latter, in a case where, under the law, no appeal could be taken from the auditor's action to the head of the Treasury Department. The question therefore was not pending before the Secretary of the Treasury and evidently could not reach him. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 4.)

The Attorney General has no authority to give an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury upon questions relating to the past action of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, which is not reviewable by the Secretary. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 77.)

The Attorney General declines to express an opinion upon a question asked him by the Secretary of the Interior for the reason that it is not predicated upon an actual case arising in the department; and also because that department has an officer clothed with authority to determine questions of that nature in the first instance, coming up on appeal from the Pension Bureau. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 556.)

Where the question is one within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Attorney General will not render an opinion upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury. If, however, the matter is one upon which the Secretary's action will be necessary, an opinion will be rendered on it. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 279.) [In 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, the Attorney General rendered an opinion with reference to the question of pay of certain naval officers on promotion, which was pending before the Comptroller of the Treasury; in this case the Secretary of the Treasury requested the opinion of the Attorney General upon certain questions proposed by the Comptroller of the Treasury and transmitted with the Secretary's note. The opinion was for the guidance of the Comptroller. See also below, "Jurisdiction, Attorney General and Comptroller of the Treasury."]

With reference to the question whether the accounting officers of the Treasury may legally allow claims for transportation upon requests fraudulently issued by an officer of the Army, which question was transmitted to the Attorney General by indorsement of the Secretary of the Treasury on a letter of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 161.)

Upon request of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney General rendered an opinion upon questions proposed by the Comptroller of the Currency. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 324.) [In 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 38, the Attorney General expressed doubt as to whether he was required to render an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury upon questions referred to him at the instance of the Comptroller of the Currency, requiring action by the latter, although the comptroller could perform the duty only under the general direction of the Secretary. However, as a matter of courtesy and public policy, the doubt was resolved in favor of the propriety of rendering the opinion requested.]

Will not answer question submitted by head of department merely for information of Congress.—The Attorney General will not render an opinion upon a claim which has already been administered by the head of a department, who submits the question to him at the request of a committee of Congress. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 138.)

Congress has not thought proper to empower its committees to require the Attorney General's opinion directly, and he will not render an opinion upon the request of the head of a department at the suggestion of a congressional committee where it is not required for the guidance of the head of the department. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 138.)

Where a call for an opinion from the Attorney General was made by the head of a department in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, for the information of the latter, without reference to any question of law arising in the administration of such department, the Attorney General is without authority to give an official opinion in such case. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 107.) (In this case the Attorney General's opinion had previously been directly requested by resolution of the House of Representatives and declined. (See 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 87.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to give his official opinion to the head of a department upon a question not involving departmental administration but referred to him at the request of a Senator in order that such opinion might be laid before a committee of the Senate. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 358.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to render an opinion upon the request of a head of department, upon a question not demanding any present official action by the latter but intended for the information of a congressional committee. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 85.)

Will not answer question submitted by head of department merely for information of contractors.—It is not the duty of the Attorney General, nor has he a right, to give an official opinion with a view to the guidance of persons who may propose to enter into contract relations with the United States. It is not permissible for the Attorney General to give an opinion except in a case actually arising in the administration of one of the departments. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 465.)

The function of the Attorney General is to advise the several heads of the other executive departments upon the questions of law which, in the administration of their respective departments, they are required to decide. But the head of a department is not required by law to become the legal adviser of a party proposing to enter into a contract with the Government. Where the Attorney General's opinion is requested by the head of a department to enable the latter to advise contractors, the Attorney General is not authorized to give an opinion. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 463.)

It is clear that a question propounded by a Government contractor is one which the Secretary of the Treasury is not called upon to answer; hence it is not, within the language of this section, "a question of law arising in the administration of his department." (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 500, 502.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to render an official opinion at the request of the head of a department where the information is desired for the guidance of certain prospective bidders, as the question is not one which such head of department is called upon to decide in the administration of his department. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 534.)

Will not answer question submitted by head of department in which United States has no interest.—The Attorney General will not render an opinion upon a question where it appears upon a perusal of the papers that the United States have no interest in the inquiry, and consequently that any opinion on his part would be not only gratuitous but unauthorized. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 311.)

It is not the duty of the Attorney General to give official opinions except in cases in which the Government is interested. Nor will the Attorney General render an unofficial opinion in such a case, even as an individual, because in the relation he stands to the Government an opinion from him on the subject might be looked upon as an official one, and thus connect the Government with an individual controversy in which it has no concern and with which it ought not to interfere. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 531.)

The question whether a bond taken by the collector of a port from one of his subordinates, for his own protection, is valid in the absence of a statute authorizing it, not appearing to be a question in which the United States are concerned, or one arising in the administration of a department, the Attorney General declines to give an official opinion thereon. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 556.)

Questions of law, of concern to private parties, and in which the Government has no interest, are to be settled by courts and juries. The individuals may, if they choose, consult counsel on such questions for their own guidance; but the law gives them no authority to bring such questions to the head of a department, nor will the Attorney General render his opinion thereon upon request of the latter. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 575.)

The Attorney General is not to give advice to heads of departments on matters which do not concern their departments, and in which the United States have no interest; nor is he authorized to give official opinions in any case not falling within the scope of his duties, so as to connect the Government with individual controversies in which it has no concern and with which it ought not to interfere; nor ought he to advise individuals in regard to any question of legal right depending between them and the Government. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 326, 334.)

It is not the duty of the Attorney General to give an opinion on a question with which the Government has no present concern. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 355; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.) He has no authority to give any opinion or advice on questions of law except for the assistance of the officer calling for his opinion. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 309.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to answer questions of law submitted to him by the Secretary of the Interior only at the request of the Cherokee Nation and which do not concern the "administration" of the Interior Department. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 404.)

The question whether, if a certain American steamer shall be rebuilt in Canada, she can be reregistered on her return as a vessel built in the United States is not for the present action of the Secretary of the Treasury, but that the owners of the vessel may know what his future action would be in case they decided to have the repairs done in Canada. It would not be proper for the Attorney General to give the opinion requested. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 723; following 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 667, as to whether a Chinaman resident of the United States could lawfully return if he should revisit his native country.)

Where a question presented to the Attorney General by the Secretary of War is one of strictly private concern to certain officers of the Army and in no sense of public interest, it is not a question arising in the administration of the War Department on which the Attorney General will render an opinion. The obvious course for such officers to pursue is that which is open to every person inclined to pursue a course as to the legal consequences of which he is in ignorance or doubt. He should seek the advice of private counsel learned in the law and obtain their opinion, for which if given without due care such counsel can be held to a personal accountability. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 510.)

The question whether a retired officer of the Army can accept another public office is not a subject with which the United States can be concerned until some action has been taken by such officer contrary to law. Manifestly, the solution of that question by any retired officer of the Army and the course of conduct which he may adopt in pursuance of that solution, is a matter of his private concern only. The Attorney General can not, therefore, render an opinion upon the question at the request of the Secretary of War, as the Attorney General is not permitted to give an opinion as to the construction or interpretation of a statute except in an actual case which has arisen before one of the executive departments calling for its action in the regular course of its affairs. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 510; but see 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397, where the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy upon a somewhat analogous question, viz, whether a retired officer of the Marine Corps could accept compensation for appearing as counsel before any department, court-martial, etc.; and in 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 503, the Attorney General rendered an opinion concerning the legality of appointing a retired officer of the Navy as a clerk in the civil service, but in this case the appointment had already been made, and the opinion was requested by the President.)

Will not answer question unless it arises in the department which requests opinion.—The Attorney General is not authorized by statute or precedent to respond by an official opinion as to a question of law not arising in the department from which the inquiry is sent. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 50.)

Where there is no way of enforcing a statute except through the courts, the question is one arising in the Department of Justice, and the official opinion of the Attorney General can not be required thereon by the head of another department. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 6.)

The question whether or not to commence a civil action or a criminal prosecution is one which must ordinarily be decided by some officer of the Department of Justice, and is not, therefore, a question upon which the opinion of the Attorney General can be requested by the head of another department. If any other department of the Government is informed of facts which seem to require such action to be taken, its duty is to communicate them, together with any suggestion which it desires to make, to the Department of Justice, whose duty it is to decide whether proceedings shall be instituted, and if so, against whom. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 509.)

The Attorney General will not, at the request of the head of a department, review the decision of the head of another department, which latter department had complete and lawful jurisdiction. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 189; Op. Atty. Gen., Nov. 7, 1917, file 26510-1022:11, C. M. O. 37-1918, p. 21.)

The power of the Attorney General to give an opinion on request of the head of a department is confined to questions arising in the administration of the department calling for the opinion. Where a question had been finally disposed of by the War Department, but the accounting officers had gone behind the Secretary's action and decided the case against the claimant, it is quite evident that the questions involved have no relation to a matter before the War Department for action. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 588.)

The question whether a former employee can be reinstated in a department is not a question pending in that department, but in the Civil Service Commission, which is vested with authority in the matter of certification. Accordingly, when the commission has exercised that authority, no question remains with the department upon which the statute permits the Attorney General to render an opinion upon request of the Secretary. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 270; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

The eligibility of a person for appointment in a department under the civil service is not a question arising in the department, but is one under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. The Attorney General can not, therefore, render an opinion upon request of the head of the department. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 393.) The law and uniform practice of the Attorney General precludes him from responding. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 431.)

Where a law provides for indemnity to officers and enlisted men of the Army, and vests the accounting officers of the Treasury with jurisdiction to determine whether the loss occurred under the circumstances set forth in the act, the Attorney General will not render an opinion to the Secretary of War upon the question, as it does not appertain to the administration of the War Department. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 693.)

Where an auditor directs a suspension against an officer of the Army, the same being the amount of an alleged excessive allowance made to him by the Deputy Paymaster General, such action of the auditor does not relate in any way to a matter which requires the action of the Secretary of War as falling within the scope of his official duties. The Attorney General will express no opinion where the matter is not one requiring the official action of the head of the department. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 420.)

The Attorney General is not authorized to give an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury as to the proper construction of a pension appropriation act, inasmuch as it appears that the Treasury Department is bound by the rulings of the Department of the Interior in construing that law, and therefore no question is pending in the Treasury Department arising in the administration of that department. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.)

The propriety of keeping every branch of the executive Government within its legal sphere is clear. The confusion which would unavoidably arise if one branch was permitted to usurp the functions of another would be disastrous to the proper work of the whole. When, therefore, a "difference of opinion" arises between several executive departments as to the construction of the law, the primary question is as to which is vested with the determination and responsibility of the question. That only one can have jurisdiction over the subject matter is plain. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 178, 180.)

The Attorney General, upon request of the Secretary of the Navy, will render an opinion as to the validity of a Navy regulation, and whether it is binding upon the accounting officers, in a case where the Comptroller of the Treasury had previously held the regulation to be void, and declined to concur in a reference of the question to the Attorney General. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611, reversing 21 Comp. Dec., 554, 357, 245.)

Where a claim pending in the Department of State was referred by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury for the latter's opinion, this did not make the question one arising in the Treasury Department and authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to require an opinion of the Attorney General on it. The whole subject belonged and still belongs to the State Department. The Attorney General can not give an opinion upon a matter referred to him by the head of a department who is not authorized to act on such matter. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 249.)

The Attorney General can not render an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury upon a question concerning the Board of Health of the District of Columbia, such question not arising in the administration of any of the Executive Departments. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 535.)

The Attorney General declines to render an opinion upon a question not arising in the administration of the department asking the opinion. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 226.)

The Attorney General will not render an opinion upon the request of the head of a department where it is intended for the information of a commission appointed to revise the laws of the United States. The commission was invested by Congress with discretion to determine what existing laws are of a permanent and general nature. Where the chairman of the commission asked the head of a department whether a portion of the revision correctly embodied the provisions of existing law upon that subject, that did not make the question one arising in the department requiring a determination thereof. The question was one essentially arising in the commission, and not therefore one upon which it was the duty or province of the head of the department to act. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 584.)

[The Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary of the Interior upon a question not pending before that department, viz, as to the sufficiency of the return of a public contract made by the Secretary of the Navy; because, while the question was not pending before the Interior Department, it was proper that the Secretary of the Interior should be advised whether the case submitted presented a violation of the statute, since it is his duty to call apparent violations of the statute to the attention of the Department of Justice. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 293.)]

Will not answer a judicial question.—

Where questions propounded are judicial in character and must be decided by the courts, if decided at all, an expression of an opinion on them by the Attorney General would have no more weight than the opinion of any unofficial person. The Attorney General must confine his opinions to questions strictly appertaining to executive administration. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 383.)

The Department of Justice has always been reluctant to pass upon questions which properly belong to the judicial rather than to the executive branch of the Government. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 673; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 56.)

The Attorney General declines to render an opinion upon a question judicial in character. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 226.)

The statutes in providing for official opinions by the Attorney General did not intend to cover questions which are substantially a request for advice as to whether or not a prosecution had better be instituted. The Attorney General's opinion on such a question would not bind a court in any way. It could as well be asked before instituting every civil suit or prosecution for crime. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 673.)

The organic distinctions between the three great divisions of Government established by the Constitution must be respected or collisions and discords inimical to good government will inevitably take place. The executive department of the Government is not warranted in assuming to determine a controversy properly cognizable by the judicial department of the Government. For the Attorney General to render an opinion might be regarded as an attempt of the executive branch of the Government to forestall judicial proceedings. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 56.)

[This case involved the power of the State of California to divest certain rights claimed by the Indians.]

The Attorney General has always exhibited great and proper reluctance to pass upon any question whose answer might bring the Department of Justice into conflict with a judicial tribunal. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 618.)

The Department of Justice will not consider any question committed to judicial review. To do so might bring it in conflict with a judicial tribunal. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 59; 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 221.)

The Attorney General can not give an opinion upon a judicial question, such as whether or not the head of a department has any remedy at law against private parties who have had dealings with the Government. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 369.)

The Attorney General declines to give an opinion where the question presented is a judicial one (whether an objection made to the naturalization of an alien should have been sustained). (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 99.)

It is not the practice of the Department of Justice to give an opinion in a matter where the question involved is disputable and is the subject of a pending suit, as such action would be equivalent to expressing an opinion as to whether the question ought to be decided in favor of the Government and might bring the department into conflict with a judicial tribunal. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 221.)

The question whether a proceeding under any law would or would not be successful is a judicial question, on which it is not necessary or proper for the Attorney General to give an official opinion. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 181.)

It is inexpedient for the Attorney General to render an official opinion as to whether a civil suit or criminal prosecution, if brought by the Government, ought to be decided by the courts in its favor, such question being essentially judicial in character. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 702.)

Whether or not an express company or its agents in carrying unmailable matter is guilty of a crime for which the statutes impose a penalty is essentially judicial in character, and one which must ultimately be decided by the judicial department of the Government. The Attorney General will not decide such question further than to say that the facts stated seem to make a prima facie case, and to render it proper that the Postmaster General should direct a prosecution of the guilty parties. Such prosecution will result in a judicial construction of the law. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 670.)

The question of the right of a State to tax lands in an Indian reservation is judicial and not administrative. The Attorney General ought not to express an opinion upon it. The better course would be to make a test case, with a view to the determination of the Federal question by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Attorney General will be glad to cooperate with the officer requesting his opinion in the proper measures to get a judicial determination of the important question involved. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 277.)

Whether any given acts or practices constitute a crime is a question for the determination of the courts, not of the Executive Departments, except where some executive action depends upon that determination. Such are not questions of law arising in the administration of the department asking an opinion. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 210.) [The question in this case was whether or not pictures of coins constitute a violation of an act defining a criminal offense and prescribing the penalty upon conviction thereof.]

Statutes of limitation apply to the legal remedies and not to the rights of the parties. Whether the statute of limitations does or does not bar a claim on behalf of the Government is, therefore, a judicial question to be determined by the courts and not by the Attorney General. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 557, 564.)

The matters covered by certain questions submitted for opinion held clearly justiciable in the appropriate courts at the suit of the parties themselves who are interested in them. They are essentially judicial in their character, and as each is readily resolvable into a case at law or in equity it can not be said to be a question arising in a course of executive administration. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 56.)

The jurisdiction of consuls as courts is a judicial question, subject to review by regular appeal provided by statute, and any opinion thereon would be beyond the power conferred upon the Attorney General and might be regarded as an invasion by the executive branch of the Government of another and independent branch, so far as judicial functions are exercised. [Also, in this case the question was purely hypothetical.] (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 391, 393.)

The Attorney General can not properly express an official opinion upon a question which must ultimately be decided by the courts. [Also in this case the question had already been decided by the department and was presented to the Attorney General merely because of the request of counsel for parties interested.] (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 596.)

The Attorney General can not answer the question whether a regulation if issued under the tariff act could be enforced, as the question is both hypothetical and judicial; involving speculation as if the requirement is adopted, proceedings in court to enforce it may or may not be successful. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 93.)

The Attorney General can not properly pass upon the question whether the courts in this country have authority to execute letters rogatory issued out of the German Patent Office, as that is a matter for judicial and not for executive determination. "I can not speak for the courts. It is for the different courts of the various jurisdictions, Federal and State, to say when the motion comes before them for decision, whether or not they have the necessary authority in the premises." (24 Op. Att'y. Gen., 69.)

Declines to express an opinion as to the liability of the postmaster at Baltimore, Md., for a sum of money paid by him to a former clerk in the Baltimore post office and for which no service was performed, for the reason that the question is essentially a judicial one, amounting to an inquiry whether in regular legal proceedings a court and jury would hold that officer liable. Advised, however, that the circumstances may be regarded as showing a prima facie case of liability, calling for action in the way of securing a judicial determination of the question of liability. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 97.)

Declines to express an opinion upon question whether a willful refusal to give true answers to inquiries concerning census statistics would subject a person to the penalties prescribed by a certain law, for the reason that the question is preeminently one for judicial and not executive determination. Whatever the proper construction of the law may be, the punishment referred to could be inflicted in no other way than by proceedings in court. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 369.)

Whether proceedings by court-martial would bar proceedings in the civil courts for an assault or other crime involved in the offense of hazing, not answered, for the reason that it would be of no assistance to the Secretary of the Navy or the Superintendent of the Naval Academy in the proper discharge of their duties; and should such action be taken the matter would peculiarly be one for the consideration of the Department of Justice. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 543.)

Whether a suit by the Government to enforce recovery from the owners of a vessel of amounts expended by the United States in the transportation back to this country of destitute seamen would be successful is speculative and hypothetical, and beyond the powers and functions of the Attorney General under the statutes to answer. The question of the actual liability of the vessel owners is judicial in its nature, and must be determined by the courts. (26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 631.)

If any conflicting claims should arise between the Federal and State governments as to jurisdiction over lands owned by the United States, they will be judicial questions. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 34.)

IV. FORM OF REQUEST FOR OPINION.

Facts must be definitely stated.—When an opinion is requested of the Department of Justice on behalf of the head of another Executive Department, the facts must be definitely formulated and clearly stated by the person asking the opinion. The Attorney General can not be required to extract a finding of facts from correspondence or reports. (22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 342.)

The Attorney General can not give official opinions without a definite statement of the facts upon which the question is submitted. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 36; 28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 393.)

The Attorney General can not properly make a statement of the facts for his own use out of the correspondence submitted to him for an opinion. "The facts upon which the question is submitted should be agreed and stated as facts established." (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 36; 12 Op. Att'y. Gen., 206; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 440; 18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 488; 9 Op. Att'y. Gen., 82.)

The reason for this is that if the Attorney General should render an opinion upon such a case as he might collect from the papers, he might not see the case in all its parts in the same light as that in which it is seen by the officer requesting his opinion. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 36; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 396.)

Also, by observing the simple rule of stating the material facts of the case and the precise questions on which advice is wanted, "the real point of difficulty in the case will be at once perceived, much inconvenience avoided, and more practicable and satisfactory results obtained." (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 36; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 367, 368.)

The head of the department requesting an opinion need not himself state the facts, but it is essential that the facts should be laid before the Attorney General with the assurance of the head of the department that they are accurate and trustworthy. The Attorney General is willing to disregard any informality in the manner of presenting such facts. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 267.)

It is not within the competency of the Attorney General to make a finding of facts in any case; he can only give his opinion on questions of law arising upon a statement of facts presented by the officer requesting his opinion. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 696.)

The Attorney General must have a definite statement of the facts before responding to a request for his opinion. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 36; 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 487.)

The Attorney General will lay aside the evidence submitted for his consideration with request for an opinion, and take as the case for opinion the statement contained in the communication from the head of the department. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 547.)

Where papers containing evidence accompany request for an opinion, the Attorney General will not examine same but will assume that all the facts have been found in favor of the applicant. He can not consider questions of fact upon evidence submitted. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 253, 256.)

Whether the facts are presented by the head of a department in the form of a direct statement or of an argumentative examination of the circumstances can make no difference; they must be accepted by the Attorney General as the bases of his reflections and judgment in rendering his opinion. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 1.)

It is inappropriate for the Attorney General to review certain briefs and correspondence submitted to him by the head of a department with request for an opinion thereon, as to do so would require him to consider questions of fact and some questions of law which clearly have not arisen in the administration of the department. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 49.)

It has been held from a very early date that to obtain an official opinion of the Attorney General, the request therefor should embody a statement of facts in the nature of an agreed case in an action at law, and not leave it to the Attorney General to draw inferences of fact from correspondence or documents. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 614.)

Where no statement of the facts is presented, the Attorney General can not render an opinion. "Without, so far as I know a single exception, it has been held that under section 356, Revised Statutes, it is permissible for the Attorney General to give an opinion only upon a case succinctly stated—that is, to answer specific questions of law upon facts set forth." (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 526, citing 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 396, 465; 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 487. See also 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 493.)

"Accompanying the letter [requesting opinion] is a considerable bundle of papers from which it is apparently expected I will glean the facts and then communicate the desired information. I am very sorry that under the uniform rulings of this office I am unable to comply with this request." (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 526.)

The Attorney General is not permitted by statute to respond to a request for an opinion by the head of a department which does not show what the facts are. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

It must be deemed settled that the Attorney General can only act upon a determinate statement of the facts furnished by the officer asking his opinion. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 267; 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 189; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

Where an official opinion from the Attorney General is desired on questions of law arising in any case, the request should be accompanied with a statement of the material facts of the case. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 506; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 367.)

To authorize the Attorney General to express an opinion upon a question of law propounded, it is necessary that a statement of the facts be submitted showing that the question has actually arisen in the administration of a department in an existing case calling for action. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 85.)

The settled policy of the Department of Justice is that no opinion should be rendered upon any question of law unless it is accompanied by a statement or finding of the facts involved. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 59.)

"You do not give me as the basis for an opinion any agreed statement of facts, but on the contrary ask for an expression of my opinion upon facts to be gathered from the inclosures of your letter. It has been the invariable rule of this department to decline to give an opinion except when the request is accompanied by a statement or findings of the facts involved." (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 102, citing 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 331.)

The Attorney General can not properly review a record and memorandum submitted, and render his opinion, based upon facts deduced therefrom. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 378.)

It has been the invariable rule of the Department of Justice to decline to give an opinion upon any question of law unless it is accompanied by a statement or finding of the facts involved. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 378, citing 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 330; 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 473; 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 59; 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 102.)

The facts upon which the question of law arises must be found and definitely stated in the request for an opinion, and not left for the Attorney General to extract from the papers submitted. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 609.)

The Attorney General must express his regret that the request of the Department of Justice, so often made, which requires that a request for an official opinion shall be accompanied by a statement of the facts, should have been disregarded. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

When the opinion of the Attorney General is required by the head of an Executive Department, it is necessary that the facts should be plainly stated, and the question upon which the opinion is desired should be specifically propounded. The Attorney General can not take the responsibility of examining all the papers in the case, and gathering therefrom a conclusion as to what particular matters he shall pass upon. [In this case the Secretary of War referred papers to the Attorney General by indorsement "with request for opinion on the questions presented by the Judge Advocate General of the Army."] (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 498.)

Question of law must be specifically formulated.—The settled policy of the Attorney General is that no opinion should be rendered upon any question of law unless it is specifically formulated in a case actually arising in the administration of a department. [In this case the head of the department did not request an opinion upon any specific question, but referred to a communication inclosed.] (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 59.)

It has been the invariable rule of the Attorney General to decline to give an opinion upon any question of law unless it is "specifically formulated." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 378.)

The question of law upon which the opinion of the Attorney General is desired must be clearly and definitely formulated. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 609.)

The Attorney General can not give an opinion upon a general subject but only on one or more specific questions of law based on a case stated. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 249.)

The precise question on which advice is wanted must be stated. The omission to specify any particular points of law for an opinion would alone prevent the Attorney General acting on the case. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 36; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 396; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 367, 368; 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 487.)

It is inappropriate for the Attorney General to review certain briefs and correspondence submitted to him by the head of a department with request for an opinion thereon, as to do so would require him to consider questions of law which clearly have not arisen in the administration of the department. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 49.)

It is permissible for the Attorney General to give an opinion only upon a case succinctly stated—that is, to answer specific questions of law arising upon facts set forth. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 526; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 396; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 465; 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 487.)

Where an official opinion of the Attorney General is desired on questions of law arising in any case, the request should be accompanied with a statement of the precise questions on which advice is wanted. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 506; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 367.)

When the opinion of the Attorney General is requested by the head of a department it is necessary that the question upon which the opinion is desired should be specifically propounded. The Attorney General can not take the responsibility of examining all the papers in the case and gathering therefrom a conclusion as to what particular matters he shall pass upon. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 498.)

made, which requires that a request for an official opinion shall so formulate a precise question that it may be answered as a question of law, should have been disregarded. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

Should be accompanied by opinion of law officer of department making inquiry.—In a communication addressed by the Attorney General to the heads of all the Executive Departments under date of October 15, 1906, it was suggested "that Executive Departments having a law officer, for example, the Judge Advocate General of the Army or of the Navy, the Comptroller or Solicitor of the Treasury, the Assistant Attorney General for a department, when desiring an opinion of the Attorney General, accompany the request thereof with the written opinion of such law officer; referring to all legislation or decisions or any ruling, usage, or practice of the department, affecting the question; and with a brief statement of such reasons, for and against such opinion, as may occur or be presented to him." (File 49-38; file 22724-16:1, Jan. 25, 1911; file 22991-1, Dec. 29, 1914.)

"It does not appear from your letter that an opinion upon these questions by the law officer of your department has been obtained. * * * It seems to me that, before attempting to answer the questions submitted, I should have the benefit and assistance of such an opinion by the Judge Advocate General, or at least a memorandum by him 'referring to all legislation or decisions or any ruling, usage, or practice' of your department affecting these questions. If, after such an opinion or memorandum has been prepared by that officer, you still desire my advice in the premises, I shall be pleased to respond to your request for my opinion upon the questions presented." (Attorney General to Secretary of the Navy, Jan. 25, 1911, file 22724-16:1; see also letter from Attorney General to Secretary of the Navy, Jan. 20, 1915, file 27223-12.) [In the latter case, after obtaining the opinion of the Judge Advocate General, the Secretary of the Navy withdrew his request for the Attorney General's opinion, stating that he no longer entertained doubt upon the question presented. File 27223-12, Jan. 27, 1915.]

"I beg leave respectfully to suggest that it would very much tend to facilitate my inquiries in references made from your department, and probably to promote the public interest, if these were accompanied by a statement showing the views of the department in relation to the several acts which are supposed to be involved in the inquiry, and the precedents, if any, which are to be found in its archives." (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 311, to the Secretary of the Navy.)

"It is directed that all requests for opinions of the Attorney General be accompanied by the written opinion of the Judge Advocate General or the solicitor, who will also prepare the request for the Attorney General's opinion in accordance with articles R-117 (1) and 134 (2), Navy Regulations, 1913." (Order Sec. Nav., Jan. 15, 1915, file 22991-1. See also file 20400-200, Op. 13, Sept. 25, 1920, quoting letter from Atty. Gen. to Sec. Navy, Sept. 13, 1920, file 204625.)

V. WEIGHT OF OPINIONS.

Are conclusive on administrative officers.—The law intends that the opinions of the Attorney General should have authority. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 383.)

Congress evidently contemplated that the official opinions, signed or indorsed by the Attorney General, should have some actual and practical force. (See sec. 358, R. S.) Congress's intention can not be doubted that administrative officers should regard them as law until withdrawn by the Attorney General or overruled by the courts, thus confirming the view which generally prevailed, though sometimes hesitatingly expressed, previous to the establishment of the Department of Justice. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 654, 659 quoted with approval in Smith v. Jackson, 241 Fed. Rep., 747; affirmed 246 U. S., 388; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 719, 722.)

The ruling of the Attorney General upon a question submitted by the Secretary of the Navy, although the validity of a disbursement was involved which had been otherwise decided by the Comptroller of the Treasury is binding upon the Department of Justice and upon other departments of the Government. (Attorney General to the Solicitor of the Treasury, Apr. 30, 1918, W. C. F. 191681-1 W. C. H., Navy Dept. file 26254-1451: 15, citing Smith v. Jackson, 246 U. S., 388, 241 Fed. Rep., 747, instructing the Solicitor not to institute suit against the officer making the payment although requested so to do by the Comptroller.)

Of course the opinion of the Attorney General, when rendered in a proper case—as must be the presumption always from the fact that it is rendered—must be controlling and conclusive, establishing a rule for the guidance of other officers of the Government, and must not be treated as nugatory and ineffective. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 301; citing 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 648, 5 Op. Att'y. Gen., 97, 6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 334, 7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 699, 9 Op. Att'y. Gen., 37.)

If a question is presented to the Attorney General in accordance with law—that is, if it is submitted by the President or the head of a department—his opinion thereon is final and authoritative under the law, and should be so treated by the accounting officers, even if the question involves a payment to be made. Congress in establishing the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury did not intend to shorten the reach of sections 354 and 356, Revised Statutes, as construed to give the opinions of the Attorney General controlling authority. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 301.)

For other cases, see below, “VI Jurisdiction Attorney General and Comptroller of the Treasury.”

Are generally followed in practice.—It is true the law does not say what effect shall be given to the opinions of the Attorney General, yet the general practice of the Government has been to follow it, and this for the reasons stated by Attorney General Cushing, viz, that an officer going against it “would be subject to the imputation of disregarding the law as officially pronounced,” and that, without “the guidance of a single department of assumed special qualifications and official authority,” uniformity and stability in the application of the laws would be hardly attainable. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 383, citing 6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 334.)

In rendering opinions to the President and heads of departments, the action of the Attorney General is quasi judicial. His opinions officially define the law in a multitude of cases, where his decision is in practice final and conclusive. Accordingly, the opinions of successive Attorneys General, possessed of greater or less amount of legal acumen, acquirement, and experience, have come to constitute a body of legal precedents and exposition, having authority the same in kind if not the same in degree, with decisions of the courts of justice. Although the act requiring this duty of the Attorney General does not expressly declare what effect shall be given to his opinion, yet the general practice of the Government has been to follow it; partly for the reason suggested, that an officer going against it would be subject to the imputation of disregarding the law as officially pronounced, and partly from the great advantage and almost necessity of acting according to uniform rules of law in the management of the public business; a result only attainable under the guidance of a single department of assumed special qualifications and official authority. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 326, 334.)

The law does not declare what effect shall be given to the advice and opinion of the Attorney General, but it is believed that the practice of the Government has invariably been to follow it. This has been done from the great advantage and almost absolute necessity of having uniform rules of decision for all questions of law in analogous cases, a result much more certain under the guidance and decision of a single department constituted for the very purpose of advising upon all questions and with supposed special qualifications for such a duty. In my opinion this practice should be considered as law. (5 Op. Att'y. Gen., 97.)

Have been held not conclusive.—It must be conceded that an opinion of the Attorney General is not conclusive; that is, it is not compulsory on the President or even on the head of a department. It is inconvenient, however, to have a conflict of opinion between the Attorney General and a head of department; and that inconvenience is placed in the strongest light by the facts of this case, where the affirmative opinion of one Attorney General went disregarded by one Secretary, and a negative opinion of another Attorney General, by the succeeding Secretary. There can be no more flagrant example of confusion of opinion and action. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen. 691, 699.)

Though opinions of the Attorney General have technically no binding effect, it is suggested that it is generally safer and better to adopt them. Uniformity of decision in the different departments on similar subjects is necessary and can not be secured otherwise. (9 Op. Att'y. Gen., 33, 36.)

While the Attorneys General have never claimed for their official opinions the force of law, it has always been regarded as the proper practice to follow their guidance. And Congress, while never legislating on this point, seems to contemplate that they are to be given practical effect. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 648.)

View that opinions are advisory only.—The duty of the Attorney General is to advise, not to decide. A thing is not to be considered as done by the head of a department merely because the Attorney General has advised him to do it. The heads of departments may disregard his opinion if sure it is wrong. The Attorney General aids them in forming a judgment on questions of law; but still the judgment is theirs, not his. They are not bound to see with his eyes, but only to use the light which he furnishes, in order to see the better with their own. (9 Op. Att. Gen., 33, 36; see also 10 Op. Att. Gen., 48.)

By long and unbroken construction and practice, it has been settled that the Attorney General acts, in performing this legal duty, simply as the law adviser of the President and heads of departments. He is bound, upon points of law and facts stated by them, to give legal opinions in aid of their judgment, in matters for their decision. (11 Op. Att. Gen., 4, quoting opinion of Oct. 23, 1863.)

The opinion of the Attorney General is advisory only. The Attorney General has no control over the action of the head of the department to whom the opinion is addressed, nor could he with propriety express any judgment concerning the disposition of the matter to which the opinion relates, that being something wholly within the administrative sphere and direction of such head of department. (17 Op. Att. Gen., 332.)

The Court of Claims, in holding that its findings and opinions are binding upon heads of departments in cases referred to it by the latter, pursuant to act of Congress, remarked that to hold otherwise, "would be construing the act as requiring a useless procedure; and that if it be contended that the report of the court is only advisory, then the answer is that the Attorney-General is the law officer of the Government and under the Revised Statutes the head of any Executive Department may require his opinion on any questions of law arising in the administration of his department." The conclusion of the court, as stated in the syllabus, was that "the findings and decisions of the court are not open to revision in the department. Legal opinions for the guidance of the head of a department, not obligatory, are to be given by the Attorney General, pursuant to Revised Statutes, section 356, and not by the judiciary." (Berger v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 243, 247.)

In case of conflict, should be submitted to President.—A Secretary undoubtedly is entitled to have and to act upon his conscientious opinion of a question, even after he has taken the opinion of the Attorney General; but it would seem that any such conflict of opinion between the Secretary asking and the Attorney General giving official advice should be referred at once to their common superior, the President, in order that the particular question of administration itself may receive the authoritative decision of the executive Government. (7 Op. Att. Gen., 691, 699.) [In this case the Attorney General remarked that its history exhibits a spectacle of vacillation and contradiction of opinion on the part of the Government which it is humiliating to contemplate.]

Unofficial opinion.—An expression of opinion by the Attorney General on a question which it is not his official duty to answer would have no more weight than the opinions of any unofficial person. (20 Op. Att. Gen., 383; 17 Op. Att. Gen., 357; 20 Op. Att. Gen., 667; 20 Op. Att. Gen., 440; 2 Op. Att. Gen., 531.)

Obiter dicta.—Remarks in an opinion of the Attorney General which are merely obiter do not have the force and effect of an official opinion. (21 Op. Att. Gen., 25.)

VI. JURISDICTION, ATTORNEY GENERAL AND COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY.

- (A) In general.
- (B) Questions which should be asked comptroller.
- (C) When Attorney General will render opinion.
- (D) Effect of Attorney General's opinion.
- (E) Views of Comptroller of the Treasury as to jurisdiction.

A. In general.

The Attorney General's office should not be allowed to become a refuge for doubtful claims from the more thorough and searching investigations of the accounting officers and the Court of Claims. The Attorney General has no machinery to ascertain and test the trustworthiness of alleged facts. (11 Op. Att. Gen., 4.)

Opinions of Comptroller on questions of law.—Prior to the act of July 31, 1894, section 8 (28 Stat., 208), the Comptroller of the Treasury had no legal status as an adviser upon legal questions. He was an accounting officer holding great power, but his function was to take action, not to advise others how to act. (20 Op. Att. Gen., 654.)

The act of July 31, 1894, makes it obligatory upon the Comptroller of the Treasury to make a decision upon any question involving a payment to be made by or under the head of any executive department, and it contemplates the construction by him of statutes. (21 Op. Att. Gen., 181.)

In form the Comptroller is asked for legal advice; in fact, what is desired is information as to his future action. Even prior to the act of July 31, 1894, it was customary to ask his opinion on questions of law and this custom was a convenient and proper and even necessary one, within certain limits. The custom doubtless arose from the importance of knowing beforehand, when expenses were to be incurred, what the decision of the comptroller would be afterwards when the question of legality came up upon the settlement of the accounts. (20 Op. Att. Gen., 654.)

Where the Comptroller gives advice upon questions of law which are not anticipatory of future decisions by himself, such advice is, of course, purely extraofficial. The advice thus given is doubtless intrinsically most valuable, but otherwise it differs in no way from advice on the same subject by any outsider. (20 Op. Att. Gen., 654.)

The view that the opinions of the Comptroller, rendered to the head of a department upon legal questions, are purely extraofficial and rendered by courtesy only, is no longer tenable in view of the act of July 31, 1894, section 8 (28 Stat., 208), which authorizes the Comptroller to render an advance decision upon "any question involving a payment." (22 Op. Att'y Gen., 581.)

Whether a Navy regulation has binding force as law on the accounting officers of the Government, is a question of law and not one of accounting, and the Attorney-General will render an opinion thereon upon request of the Secretary of the Navy, although the Comptroller claims his jurisdiction to be conclusive and declines to concur in the submission to the Attorney General. (30 Op. Att'y Gen., 376, 171 S. and A. Memo., 3611; file 26254-1451:11, Apr. 13, 1915; 21 Comp. Dec., 554, 560.)

Attorney General's jurisdiction not curtailed by powers given Comptroller.—Congress intended to confine the power of the Comptroller within a relatively narrow range and did not mean to curtail the occasions for the rendering of opinions by the Attorney General or to diminish their scope and weight. The act of 1894 does not establish a rule which is universal and without exception under all circumstances. Congress did not by that enactment intend to shorten the reach of sections 354 and 356, Revised Statutes, as construed to give the opinions of the Attorney General controlling authority; or to repeal pro tanto [for so much] those sections. (25 Op. Att'y Gen., 301.)

"Shortly after the act of July 31, 1894, was enacted, the question arose as to its effect upon the Attorney General's jurisdiction under section 356 of the Revised Statutes, and the rule was established by the Attorney General that he was not to render an opinion upon questions which might be referred to the Comptroller of the Treasury except in cases of great importance, or where the Comptroller of the Treasury concurred in the reference, but that in such cases he was authorized to render an opinion. In other words, that the jurisdiction of the Attorney General was not restricted by the act of 1894, but that the occasions for the exercise of such jurisdiction, in cases involving disbursements, would be infrequent in view of the latter act. The Comptroller of the Treasury fully concurred in the ruling that the Attorney General's jurisdiction continued under section 356 of the Revised Statutes even in cases covered by the act of 1894, and encouraged the Attorney General to exercise his jurisdiction in such cases by frequently suggesting to heads of departments that they refer questions of law to the Attorney General for opinion. * * * The Comptroller of the Treasury has thus uniformly recognized the superior facilities of the Department of Justice to decide important questions of law, even where disbursements are involved; while on the other hand the Attorney General has repeatedly recognized the superior qualifications of the Comptroller of the Treasury to decide certain classes of questions which involve the use of appropriations and technical questions of accounting." (File 26254-1451:11, Apr. 12, 1915.)

Question one of etiquette.—There is, of course, in this matter a large element of propriety and etiquette, which has led Attorneys General to decline to pass upon many questions, however important in their essential and abstract bearings, because payments are also involved. (25 Op. Att'y Gen., 301.)

Reference to Comptroller not required.—The law permits, but does not require the reference of any question involving a payment to the Comptroller of the Treasury; and it is thus suggested that, whatever the final action of the auditor and Comptroller may be upon the account, the reference of every question to the Comptroller for decision is not demanded by the law simply because such a question may ultimately reach the accounting stage. (26 Op. Att'y Gen., 81.)

B. Questions which should be asked the Comptroller.

Except in matters of great importance, or where the question is a general one, applicable to all the departments, the opinion of the Attorney General should no longer be asked upon questions which the Comptroller of the Treasury was authorized to decide upon request of the head of any department, by the act of July 31, 1894; they are questions which the Comptroller, by his greater experience is better qualified to pass upon, and it is desirable to avoid any possible conflict of precedents. An opinion of the Comptroller of the Treasury forms a complete protection. (21 Op. Att'y Gen., 178; 21 Op. Att'y Gen., 181; 26 Op. Att'y Gen., 81.)

Upon questions of the disbursement of money and payment of claims, which have been relegated by law to the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Attorney General should not render opinions, especially in view of the fact that if the matter is doubtful it can be referred to the Court of Claims for authoritative decision. (21 Op. Att'y Gen., 530.)

Except in matters of great importance, the Attorney General will not express an opinion upon any question involving a payment to be made by or under the head of an executive department. That duty under the law is imposed upon the Comptroller of the Treasury, whose opinion is binding and conclusive. (23 Op. Att'y Gen., 1.)

The authority of the Comptroller is complete to decide a question involving a payment to be made from the Treasury, so as to govern the auditing officers and himself in passing upon accounts. Accordingly, in various instances the Attorneys General have declined to give an opinion upon a question of this nature. (25 Op. Att'y Gen., 301; citing 21 Op. Att'y Gen., 178, 530; 22 Op. Att'y Gen., 581; 23 Op. Att'y Gen., 468; 24 Op. Att'y Gen., 553. See also 26 Op. Att'y Gen., 609.)

To which of two appropriations certain expenses should be charged is a question which may be asked of the Comptroller of the Treasury. It belongs to a class of questions which require for their decision a superior knowledge of our appropriation acts and the course of decisions thereunder. They are questions which the Comptroller, by his great experience, is better qualified to pass upon, and it is desirable to avoid any possible conflict of precedents. Therefore it seems inadvisable for the Attorney General to attempt to pass upon these inquiries. (21 Op. Att'y Gen., 405.)

[Later the Attorney General rendered an opinion on this question, it appearing that it did not belong to the Comptroller of the Treasury. Question concerned appropriation for public printing. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 423.)]

Specific questions which Attorney General has declined to answer.—Whether certain expenses of Department of Agriculture are payable from a certain appropriation for that department. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 221.)

Use of appropriation by Secretary of War for "transportation of the Army and its supplies." (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 665.)

Whether expense of preparing certain blank forms and furnishing them to collectors can be paid out of appropriation for defraying the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 50.)

Allowance of extra compensation, in lieu of annual leave, to certain former employees of Census Office; which question, in its ultimate effect, relates solely to payments out of the Treasury. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 85.)

Whether a retired officer advanced in rank and pay by the Executive, may be paid at the advanced rate before the Senate has consented to the advancement; which question had already been decided by the Comptroller of the Treasury. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185.)

Questions of disbursement of money or payment of claims. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 581.)

Question involved in and arising out of a claim for payment of money which is pending before the Treasury Department. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 2.)

Claim for payment of a sum of money by the War Department, as compensation for the cancellation of a contract. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 86.)

Payment for rent of a letter box in a post office for use of an Army officer; where comptroller decided that the rent could not be paid in advance, and the Postmaster General decided that such boxes can not be rented to an officer of the Government unless payment is made before they are used. The Comptroller has passed upon the precise question submitted; he does not request any review of that decision; and the question is not one of sufficient importance to bring it within the class of cases which, while concerning disbursements of money, nevertheless by reason of their great importance or general character have been held to warrant an expression of opinion by the Attorney General. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 614; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185. But see below "Where Comptroller does not join in request.")

Whether, under the annual appropriation for the care of patients in a designated hospital, the Surgeon General, United States Army, may contract with the institution to pay a stipulated sum per month for keeping in a state of preparedness for a specified number of patients; there not being in every month an average of that number of patients in the hospital, but where the monthly average per year equals or exceeds that number. The Attorney General deems it inexpedient to give an opinion upon this question, which is clearly proper for the Comptroller to decide. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 431.)

Authority to refund duties and appropriation to which chargeable; especially where such questions have already been decided by the Comptroller of the Treasury. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 468; affirmed 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 586; 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 553; cited 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 50.)

Manner of drawing funds from the Treasury, and the administrative examination of accounts of officers disbursing them. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

Questions which involve the payment of money by the Treasury Department. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 431.)

Question involving the pay to which an officer of the Navy is entitled under certain conditions, where this question has been decided by the Comptroller, who does not concur in its reference to the Attorney General, and the question is not of sufficient importance to justify a departure from the general rule. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

C. When Attorney General will render an opinion.

Questions of general and great importance, where Comptroller concurs in request.—When the question is of general and great importance, and especially when the Comptroller, in advance of decision by himself, requests or suggests that the matter be referred to the Attorney General, and states that the opinion of the Attorney General will be followed by him, the question may properly be answered by the Attorney General, although a disbursement may be involved. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 301, citing 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 181, 224, 402.)

If the Attorney General considers the question presented one of great importance in other directions than disbursements, and especially when the Comptroller suggests an examination of the matter by him, an opinion on his part will be proper and the decision final and authoritative. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

Generally speaking, the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury is conclusive in cases involving the application of an appropriation and the expenditure of public moneys. However, when the disbursement is a question of general and great importance, and especially when the comptroller, in advance of a decision by himself, requests that the matter be referred to the Attorney General for opinion, and states that he will be guided by such opinion, the question may properly be answered by the Attorney General. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 609.)

Where the Comptroller of the Treasury states that the opinion of the Attorney General will be followed by him, the Attorney General will comply with the request of the head of a department for his opinion in the premises, the question being one of importance, and the Comptroller thus joining in asking that it be answered. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 224. But see 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 251, and 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 320, where opinions upon similar questions were rendered, although it did not appear that the Comptroller joined in the reference.)

A question which was referred to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and at his request referred to the Attorney General, was answered by the latter because it was an important one. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 402.)

With reference to the question of pay of certain Navy officers on promotion, which was pending before the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury requested the opinion of the Attorney General upon certain questions proposed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and transmitted with the Secretary's note. An opinion was rendered upon such questions for the guidance of the Comptroller. (23 Op. Att'y. Gen., 30.)

With reference to the question whether the accounting officers of the Treasury may legally allow claims for transportation upon requests fraudulently issued by an officer of the Army, which question was submitted to the Attorney General by indorsement of the Secretary of the Treasury on a letter of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary. (23 Op. Att'y. Gen., 161.)

The Secretary of War, in accordance with the suggestion of the Comptroller of the Treasury, requested and received an opinion of the Attorney General as to use of an appropriation for installation of range and position finders in Porto Rico. (23 Op. Att'y. Gen., 390.)

Concerning the pay of retired officers of the Army, the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary of War, remarking: "The Comptroller of the Treasury requests or concurs in the reference of the question to me, and it is proper, therefore, that I should respond." (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 299.)

The Secretary of the Navy, with the concurrence of the Comptroller of the Treasury, requested an opinion which was rendered by the Attorney General, concerning the pay of a certain retired mate in the Navy. (26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 599; file 3031-34.)

The Attorney General refrains from rendering an opinion upon a question submitted to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the reason that the question can be asked of the Comptroller of the Treasury. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 188.) Opinion rendered later by the Attorney General upon same question, the Comptroller joining in the request and the question being of importance. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 224.)

Where Comptroller does not join in request.—Unless the Comptroller joins in the request, the Attorney General has hesitated to express an opinion even as to questions of great importance, or of general application to all departments. (26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 81, citing 21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 181.) However, where the question is general in its bearings, and of great importance, the Attorney General may properly express an opinion notwithstanding the statutory authority of the Comptroller of the Treasury, and notwithstanding the fact that the question comes to him in the first instance and not after reference to the Comptroller and by his request. (26 Op. Att'y. Gen., 81, re use of appropriation under the Secretary of War for the erection of marine barracks at the Canal Zone. See also 24 Op. Att'y. Gen., 699; 25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 127.)

Upon request of the Secretary of the Navy the Attorney General reviewed several decisions rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury concerning the leave pay of officers of the construction corps, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers. No reference was made in the opinion to the question of jurisdiction. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 261.) [Before referring this question to the Attorney General, the Navy Department suggested to the Comptroller that the matter be submitted to the Attorney General for opinion, in order thereby to obviate delay and expense, both to the Government and the officers concerned, that would result from the placing of the matter before the Court of Claims for decision. In response the Comptroller stated that he preferred that the Navy Department use its own judgment relative to the submission of the legal question involved to the Attorney General, and that the Attorney General determine, without suggestion from him, whether he would entertain such submission; but added that, if the question were submitted and the Attorney General rendered an opinion thereon, such opinion would be treated with that respect due to the opinion of the chief legal adviser of the Government. This statement of the Comptroller's attitude was communicated to the Attorney General in the Navy Department's request for opinion. (File 26254-155:e, Dec. 15, 1908.) The Attorney General, in the opinion cited, dissented from the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury upon the questions presented, and concurred in the views of the Navy Department thereon. The Comptroller of the Treasury thereupon opened and reversed his former decision, and followed the opinion of the Attorney General. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 16, 1909, 98 S. & A. Memo., 1036.)]

Upon request of the Secretary of the Navy the Attorney General reviewed and reversed several decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury concerning the legality of a Navy regulation, although the Comptroller declined to concur in a reference of the matter to the Attorney General, holding that his decisions were final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. (Op. Att'y. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. & A. Memo., 3611; 21 Comp. Dec., 554, 357, 245; file 26254-1451:11.)

Upon request of the Secretary of the Navy the Attorney General reviewed the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury that the designation of a Navy mail clerk was not valid, and held that said decision of the Comptroller was extraofficial and that the mail clerk in question had been validly designated as such. (31 Op. Att'y. Gen., 320. See also 32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 427 reviewing and dissenting from 26 Comp. Dec., 336.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury held that the cost of transporting certain destitute seamen to this country was a proper charge against the Government (14 Comp. Dec., 867), and suggested that the Attorney General's opinion be requested as to whether the owners of the vessel to which such seamen belonged should refund to the Government the amount so expended. This latter question was referred to the Attorney-General with request for his opinion upon that specific question. However, the Attorney-General, in his opinion, considered the whole subject, and held, among other things, that "the cost of transportation furnished by the Government is a proper charge against the approprition for 'relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries,' which question had already been decided by the Comptroller. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 631. In this connection see 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 54.)

In the case of a retired officer of the Navy, the Comptroller of the Treasury held that under the law and facts of the case he was entitled to the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade. (14 Comp. Dec., 167.) In the case of another retired officer, involving precisely the same question, the Navy Department requested an opinion of the Attorney General, who held that the officer in question was not entitled to the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, expressly dissenting from the Comptroller's decision above cited and concurring in the opinion of the Navy Department. [This question was referred to the Attorney General by the Secretary of the Navy without the suggestion or concurrence of the Comptroller.] (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221.) The Comptroller of the Treasury reopened and reversed his former decision and followed the opinion of the Attorney General. (15 Comp. Dec., 584.)

Where the Comptroller has passed upon the precise question submitted and does not request any review of his decision, the Attorney General will not render an opinion where the matter, in his judgment, is not one of sufficient importance to bring it within the class of cases which, while concerning disbursements of money, nevertheless, by reason of their great importance or general character, have been held to warrant an expression of opinion by the Attorney General. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 614.) In such a case, before rendering an opinion, the Attorney General requires a presentation of the reasons of the head of the department for referring the matter to him and not accepting the opinion of the Comptroller. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 609.)

In no case, so far as I am advised, has the Attorney General undertaken to review a matter which has been before the Comptroller without being advised that it would be entirely agreeable to the latter to do so. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 129. But see cases noted above.)

Where the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided the question (pay of a retired officer of the Army, advanced in rank by the Executive), his decision is conclusive, and the question will not be answered by the Attorney General. It is true that an exception has been noted in the opinions of the Attorneys General, where a question is of great importance and general application and a conflict of precedents might ensue, and especially where the Comptroller joins in the request and states that he will be guided by the opinion of the Attorney General. But here the Comptroller has already acted and has rendered his decision upon the reference to him of the real question involved in its practical aspect, and this decision under the law must govern him in determining the matter whenever it is presented to him in his function of passing upon accounts, unless, indeed, he himself should see fit to reconsider and revise or reverse his ruling. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 185. But see cases noted above.)

Questions which have been held of general and great importance.—Upon a question relating to the purchase of envelopes by executive departments in cases of public exigency, it appeared from papers transmitted to the Attorney General that the Comptroller of the Treasury stated: "As the question in the form presented is a general one, applicable to all the departments, it is respectfully suggested that it would be expedient to have the matter determined by an opinion from the Attorney General." Accordingly the Attorney General rendered an opinion upon the question, saying: "This case falls within the exception stated in my previous opinion (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 178) concerning matters of great importance, and I therefore, without departing from the precedent therein established, comply with your request." (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 181.)

Availability of appropriation.—Respecting the availability for census purposes of the unexpended balance of a previous appropriation, the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary of the Interior, stating: "This question might have been presented to the Comptroller of the Treasury, under the act of July 31, 1894, section 8. * * * Upon the passage of that act this department assumed the position, which it has ever since maintained, that except in matters of great importance, questions of the character referred to therein should be submitted to the Comptroller, whose opinion is binding and conclusive and affords complete protection. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 178, 188, 530; 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, 581; 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 1, 2, 86, 431, 468, 586; 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 85.) The present question, however, is administrative in its nature and of sufficient importance to come within the exception stated. Its gravity is more than commensurate with that of the question considered by Mr. Olney (who first announced the rule referred to) in his opinion of May 23, 1895 (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 181), and which related to the power of the several executive departments to purchase envelopes in cases of public exigency. Upon the availability of the balance referred to by the proviso in the act of March 3, 1903, as the letter of the director indicates, depends the execution of a great deal of census work now in progress or contemplation, and the retention or discharge of a considerable portion of his present force." (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 699.)

Pay of employees in Philippines.—Concerning compensation on holidays of navy yard employees in the Philippine Islands, the Attorney General rendered an opinion to the Secretary of the Navy, stating: "This question might have been submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury, but in view of the importance of determining whether or not such statutes apply in the Philippine Islands, I shall endeavor to answer it." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 127.)

Validity of Navy regulation.—In rendering an opinion requested by the Secretary of the Treasury at the suggestion of the Comptroller, concerning refund of bounty required of enlisted men of the Navy discharged within a year after enlistment, for disability not incurred in the line of duty, the Attorney General said: "I should hesitate to render you my opinion upon this subject, in view of the well-established rule holding the opinions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, upon a question involving the payment of money by any executive department of the Government to be final and conclusive, were it not for the fact that the present case is unusually important, since it involves the validity of the regulations issued by the head of an executive department and therefore appears to fall within the exception to that rule recognized by the Attorney General when he is duly asked for his opinion before the Comptroller has passed upon the question, and the Comptroller himself joins in the request." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 271; see also Op. Atty. Gen., May 19, 1915, 171 S. & A. Memo., 3611, reviewing and reversing decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury as to the validity of a Navy regulation, although the Comptroller declined to concur with the Secretary of the Navy in the submission of the question to the Attorney General.)

Use of appropriation for construction of marine barracks at the Canal Zone is a question of general and great importance, upon which the Attorney General will render an opinion notwithstanding the fact that the question comes to him in the first instance and not after reference to the comptroller and by his request. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 81.)

Where opinion is requested by the President.—Upon instructions to him by the President, the Attorney General reviewed two decisions rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury concerning expenditures from appropriations for the Agricultural Department, and submitted his opinion to the President upon the questions of law discussed therein. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 269.)

Upon reference to him by the President, the Attorney General rendered an opinion upon a question raised by a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury as to authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land from the State of Texas for a life-saving station and to pay the consideration fixed therefor (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 48); and later, in the same case, the Attorney General addressed a supplementary opinion to the President as to the appropriation available for payment for the land so acquired. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 51.)

Opinion rendered to the President concerning his authority to allot funds appropriated by Congress for the purpose of equipping and building schoolhouses in the island of Porto Rico. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 329.)

That Commissioner of Labor could be appointed a member of the immigration commission and receive compensation for his services on that commission, in addition to the salary attached to his office as Commissioner of Labor. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 247.)

Authority to grant leave of absence with pay to members of the Grand Army of the Republic in Government service who attend annual encampment of that order. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 336.)

That a retired officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service could be employed to superintend the construction of life-saving apparatus for such period as his services might be required, at a rate of compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 460.)

Use of appropriations to pay contractors for material to be used in constructing a public building. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 572.)

That the Secretary of the Navy has no power, after exhausting an appropriation for the erection of a dry dock, to use funds from other appropriations not strictly applicable to that work in order to meet the payments to be made on the contract until a deficiency appropriation should be made. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 466.)

Specific questions answered by the Attorney General without reference to Comptroller's jurisdiction.—In the following specific cases the Attorney General rendered opinions without making any reference to the question of jurisdiction:

Payment of damages.—That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay $15,000, as recommended by a commission and the Chief of Engineers, for raising the height of the dam at Great Falls and for damages on account of the flooding of land and other damages. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 223.)

Use of appropriation for reimbursement of militia for stores taken in war with Spain. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 372.)

Use of appropriation by Secretary of War for payment of compensation to parties after a breach of contract by the Secretary. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 437.)

Payment of money to contractors for damages sustained by delay. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 106.)

Use of appropriations.—Concerning the use of an appropriation for expenses of the Agricultural Department. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 321; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 372; 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 470.)

Use of appropriations, and to what appropriation certain expenses are chargeable. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

Construction of an appropriation; whether language mandatory or directory. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 295.)

Expenditure of $3,000,000 appropriation for emergencies arising in military administration of Cuba. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 301.)

Use of appropriation for rivers and harbors. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 489; 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 519; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 145; 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 173.)

Use of an appropriation under the Secretary of State and its availability for paying expenses or compensation of counsel for the delegation to the Pan-American conference. Question was, first, as to legality of appointing counsel; and second, as to question of pay. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 533.)

Opinion to Secretary of State which "relates wholly to the legality of the expenditures recommended"—that is, certain expenditures out of an appropriation made in connection with the Panama Canal project. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 54.)

Advised Secretary of War that he was authorized to enter into a contract for the payment of royalty on account of the construction of certain guns, carriages, etc., payable out of appropriations "for the armament of fortifications and for other purposes;" notwithstanding the fact that the fulfillment of such contract might extend over a period of more than two years. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 105.)

That appropriation for purchase of land may properly be expended for the purchase of a lease in perpetuity to said land. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 12.)

That Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire a certain site and erect a public building thereon, at total cost of $125,000; that the Secretary is not limited as to the cost of the site, but a sufficient amount should be reserved to properly erect the building. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 20.)

Opinion to Secretary of the Navy in answer to following questions: (1) Whether, upon the facts presented, the Navy Department is authorized to expend any portion of the moneys appropriated by the acts in question for the construction or purchase of a submarine boat or boats of the Lake type; (2) whether under the facts as stated the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to expend any portion of the appropriations referred to, for the purchase of sub-surface boats of the type subjected to trial, as above set forth. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 321.)

Appropriation available for payment of expense of maintenance and treatment of an inmate of the National Soldiers' Home who is transferred to the Government Hospital for the Insane. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 512.)

That Secretary of the Navy has authority to acquire and pay for the right to manufacture and install patented forms of turbine machinery on board a ship under construction, and this authority extends to the license fee, royalties, and preparation of drawings. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 173.)

Use of appropriation to defray expenses of a board under the Secretary of War. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 459.)

Use of Naval Hospital fund to supplement appropriation for construction of hospital at Norfolk, Va. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

That moneys appropriated for the maintenance of the Bureau of Mines may be used for erection of certain temporary structures. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 413.)

Use of appropriation for construction of battleship, where not sufficient for completion of the vessel. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 477.)

Use of naval appropriation for purchases from combinations or monopolies. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 14, 35, 44.)

That in absence of statutory prohibition, partial payments may be made on account of work done in construction of vessels for the Navy. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 46.)

Use of appropriation under Secretary of War for purchase and partial construction of canal and locks, where not sufficient for total cost. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 236.)

Use of appropriation by the Secretary of the Treasury for rental of building in District of Columbia and construction of vault. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 270.)

Pay of Army, Navy, etc.—Stoppage of pay against the account of soldier in Army. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 323.)

That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ a retired officer to supervise the completion of certain tables of planets, at a compensation of $2,500 per annum. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 507.)

Concerning extra pay of Army officers. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.)

That a proposed regulation of the State Department, with reference to the compensation of consular agents, being consistent with law, may be carried into effect. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 163.)

Extra compensation of a United States judge appointed as a commissioner under a convention with Great Britain. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

Increased pay and allowances of Army officers. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 258.)

Compensation of per diem employees at Washington navy yard for half day when yard was closed on account of ceremonies attending the interment of the bodies of soldiers and sailors whose lives were lost in the war with Spain. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 472.)

Date from which officer of Navy is entitled to rank and pay of higher grade on promotion. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 657.)

Rank and pay of retired officers of the Marine Corps having Civil War service. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 709.)

Pay of a retired officer of the Navy. "He now claims that he is entitled to the additional pay provided in the provision before quoted, and your question is in substance whether he is so entitled. * * * I am, therefore, of opinion * * * that he is entitled to the increased pay provided for in said act." (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 57.)

That the salary of a clerk in a pension agency might legally be paid, and need not be withheld by the Secretary of the Interior because of his indebtedness to the United States; and that section 1766, Revised Statutes, is not applicable to such clerk. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 77.)

That the salary of a naval officer appointed during a recess of the Senate can not be paid until confirmed by the Senate, where the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)

Rank and pay of retired officers of the Navy having Civil War service. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221.)

Compensation of certain officers employed under the Department of Agriculture. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 358.)

Payment of compensation and expenses of board on life-saving appliances. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 406.)

Compensation and expenses of a committee under the Secretary of War. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 432, 437.)

Leave of absence of per diem employees under the Secretary of War. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 613.)

Payment of compensation to expert witness employed by the Government in cases arising under the food and drugs act. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 75.)

Leave of absence to certain employees under the War Department. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 339.)

Pay of chief of bureau, Navy Department, after resignation or removal from office. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 429.)

Rank and pay of naval officers serving as bureau chiefs. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 531.)

Payment of miscellaneous claims.—Claim for arrears in pension. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 408; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 453.)

That unexpended balance of an appropriation should be used to reimburse a claimant against the United States. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 523.)

Claims of officers and men in the Navy for payment of prize money. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 171.)

Legality of bills submitted to the Secretary of War for State tolls on property of the United States passing to or over the wharves at San Francisco. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 299.)

Whether Navy Department may rightfully withhold its approval of vouchers providing for payment of a bill presented to that department by the Carnegie Steel Co. until decision of a suit pending in the Court of Claims. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 422; affirmed 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

Authority of Secretary of the Treasury to pay claim of a municipal corporation for reimbursement on account of burial expenses of a pensioner from accrued pension. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 428.)

Validity of claim made for rent of a building occupied as a post-office. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 571.)

Authority of Secretary of the Treasury to allow claim for compensation as informer. Held that the Treasury Department is authorized to award compensation in the case submitted. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 61.)

Use of an appropriation for payment of attorneys' claims for fees on account of services rendered to Indians. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 624; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 308; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 320.)

Distribution of fund appropriated for the payment of the so-called "loyal Creek claims" in cases of deceased claimants. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 163.)

Payment of claim of Government employee for compensation on account of disability sustained in the course of his employment. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 346.)

Settlement of claim on Secretary of the Treasury, made by an officer of the Government for an award for detecting fraudulent weighing of sugars. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 329.)

Use of appropriations for payment of claims of a wrecking company in connection with the removal of an obstruction to navigation. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 626, 633.)

Whether the claim of a wrecking company against the Government for services in removing an obstruction to navigation, which claim was pending before the War Department, could be paid. Answered in the affirmative, but held that interest could not be paid. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 277.)

Payment of claim for compensation on account of a fatal accident to a laborer employed by the United States. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 415.)

Refund of duties, taxes, etc.—Authority of Secretary of the Treasury to refund duties out of an appropriation for that purpose. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 442; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 454. Claims for refund of taxes. 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 472.)

Payment of claims for refund of moneys collected by the United States for taxes. Question submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, "is there any legal objection to now paying that part of the claim of * * * which comes under the decision of the Supreme Court in the * * * case, allowing the balance to remain in the Treasury pending the decision of the court in the * * * case?" Answered in the negative. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 194.)

Miscellaneous.—Making of final payment to a contractor by the Secretary of War under a certain contract. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 465.)

Payment from the naval pension fund to personal representatives of a deceased beneficiary or to the Naval Home. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 85.)

Authority of Director of the Mint, with approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to purchase bullion for subsidiary coinage without limitation. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

Binding on Comptroller.—Without touching upon the question whether a Comptroller of the Treasury may delegate his authority, when he waives his right to determine a matter involving disbursements, within the scope of his authority under the law and regulations, or suggests a ruling by the Attorney General, there is no doubt that the Attorney General's opinion should not only be justly persuasive to the accounting officers, but should be controlling; and should be followed by them unless contrary to some authoritative judicial decision which puts the matter at rest. It is always to be assumed that the Attorney General would not overlook or ignore such a decision in announcing his own conclusion. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 301.)

Of course the opinion of the Attorney General when rendered in a proper case—as must be the presumption always from the fact that it is rendered—must be controlling and conclusive, establishing a rule for the guidance of other officers of the Government, and must not be treated as nugatory and ineffective. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 301, citing 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 648; 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 37, 7 Op. Atty. Gen., 699, 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 334, 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 97.)

Where the question is general and important in other directions than disbursements, and is presented to the Attorney General in accordance with law—that is, if it is submitted by the President or the head of a department; if it is a question of law and actually arises in the administration of a department; and the Attorney General conceives that it is proper for him to deliver his opinion, it is final and authoritative under the law, and should be so treated by the accounting officers, even if the question involves a payment to be made. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 301.)

If the Attorney General considers the question presented one of great importance in other directions than disbursements, and especially when the Comptroller suggests an examination of the matter by him, an opinion on his part will be proper and the decision final and authoritative. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

Where an opinion was rendered by the Attorney General upon a question which was afterwards considered and otherwise decided by the Comptroller of the Treasury, it was held by the Supreme Court that any doubt which the Auditor might have had should have been subordinated to the ruling of the Attorney General; affirming the decision of the lower court in which there was quoted with approval the Attorney General's opinion of September 8, 1893, to the Secretary of the Treasury (20 Op. Atty. Gen. 659), digested above under "V. Weight of Opinions" (Smith v. Jackson, 246 U. S., 388, 241 Fed. Rep., 747; C. M. O. 50, 1918, p. 20.)

(E) Views of Comptroller of the Treasury as to jurisdiction.

Test is whether main question involved is one of payment.—The question was submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury whether the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to purchase furniture and office equipment from dealers not parties to the common supply contract. This question had previously been passed upon by the Attorney General in an opinion rendered to the President under section 354, Revised Statutes. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1913.) The Comptroller held that the question was one for him to decide, under the act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 208), saying: "I have no discretion in the matter and must render a decision, and such decision as my conscience dictates, notwithstanding this opinion by the Attorney General." Upon the general subject of jurisdiction in such cases, the Comptroller said:

"If there is sometimes conflict of jurisdiction between the Attorney General and the Comptroller of the Treasury, it is by reason of the different constructions which are given these two provisions of the statutes. I have never brought myself to the view that my jurisdiction depended upon the magnitude of the question submitted. I have always thought that the primary question to be determined was, whether the main question involved the payment of money out of an appropriation, and if so the jurisdiction was with the Comptroller; if, on the contrary, the main question was the authority of the President, the head of an executive department, or other Government official to perform a certain act regardless of the use of an appropriation, then the jurisdiction is with the Attorney General.

"If the President or the Secretary of the Treasury had in this case submitted the question whether he, the Secretary, was authorized to schedule and contract for, under the act of June 17, 1910 (36 Stat., 468, 531), such articles as desks, tables, or sectional filing cases to be used by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Attorney General upon such request had rendered the opinion he has rendered, I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Treasury would have acquiesced in such opinion, and not scheduled and contracted for such articles. Under such circumstances, I would have felt myself morally bound to follow the opinion of the Attorney General, notwithstanding my own personal views as to its correctness. But the Secretary of the Treasury has, and had before the date of the opinion of the Attorney General, scheduled and contracted for such articles under the said act * * *.

"The articles here in question are purchased on a considerable scale, and used alike by all departments of the Government * * * I am unable to agree with the Attorney General in his narrow and nonbeneficial construction of this law."

This decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, under date of March 31, 1913, was published with the following note: "The above decision was prepared on the 12th day of March, 1913, but withheld pending the action of the Attorney General on a submission by the Secretary of the Treasury relative to a reconsideration of the opinion of February 27, 1913, the one mentioned in the submission to this office and referred to in the above decision. Said submission resulted in a withdrawal of the opinion, supra, of the Attorney General, under date of March 26, 1913, in which he held that the question involved in said withdrawn opinion was one involving a payment by the head of a Government establishment, and hence for the Comptroller of the Treasury to decide." (19 Comp. Dec., 617. But see above, VI (A), "Attorney General's jurisdiction not curtailed by the powers given Comptroller; and VI (C), "When Attorney General will render an opinion.")

Will not concur in referring question of law to Attorney General.—"With reference to your further suggestion that I concur in a submission of the question with reference to the validity of this regulation to the Attorney General, permit me to say that I can see no propriety in or reason for my so doing. The law has cast upon the Comptroller of the Treasury the duty not only of deciding upon the facts but also of construing the law in connection with the settlement of the public accounts and particularly those accounts that involve the expenditure of public moneys." (21 Comp. Dec., 554, 560. But see cases noted above, in which Comptroller of the Treasury has acquiesced in the submission to the Attorney General by the head of a department of questions involving payments; and has, in a number of instances, himself suggested such reference.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury is not authorized to render an advance decision upon a question not involving a payment to be made by or under the officer requesting the opinion. It is one of the functions of the Attorney General to give his opinion at the request of a head of a department upon questions of law arising in the administration of his department; which is to be distinguished from the duty of the Comptroller of the Treasury to render decisions upon questions involving payments, which decisions govern the settlement of accounts therefor. (10 Comp. Dec., 812.) (The question in this case was whether the chief clerk of the Railway Mail Service is competent to administer the oath of office to appointees.)

Where the disbursement of an appropriation was under the charge of the Secretary of the Interior, and the question arose whether under said appropriation the Secretary of the Interior had authority to authorize the United States attorney to employ witnesses and incur costs contemplated by him in connection with certain condemnation proceedings, the comptroller stated that in his opinion "all such expenses should be ordered and approved by the Attorney General and paid from an appropriation under the Department of Justice;" but that the question presented "appears to be one of administration," which the Secretary of the Interior, if he so desired, might submit to the Attorney General for an advisory opinion under section 356, Revised Statutes. (9 Comp. Dec., 793; see also 9 Comp. Dec., 446, 451.)

Where the question submitted is one as to the legality of a proposed payment for certain buildings and outfit, but back of the question of the expenditure of the money is that of the acquisition of the site, this involves questions of law unconnected with any expenditure of public money, and hence not within the Comptroller's jurisdiction. Therefore suggested that the opinion of the Attorney General should be obtained upon the primary question involved in the acquisition of the site. (5 Comp. Dec., 682; see also 3 Comp. Dec., 730.)

VII. MISCELLANEOUS.

The Attorney General will not review the opinion of a former Attorney General unless a proper case is presented therefor and submitted by the head of a department. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 189.)

A question once definitely answered by the Attorney General and left at rest for a long term of years should be reconsidered by one of his successors only in a very exceptional case. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 24; affirmed 24 Op. Att'y. Gen., 53; 24 Op. Att'y. Gen. 127, 132; compare 27 Op. Att'y. Gen. 212, 215. See also 17 Op. Att'y. Gen. 193.)

The conclusions of a Federal court are binding upon the Attorney General until reversed by a higher court. (24 Op. Att'y. Gen., 59.) [The Attorney General has not always followed decisions of the Court of Claims. Thus, the Court of Claims held that a vacancy occurring while the Senate was temporarily adjourned was legally filled by the President as a "recess" appointment. (Gould v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 593, 595.) Thereafter the Attorney General, with knowledge of this decision, advised the President that a vacancy occurring during a temporary adjournment could not be filled by him as a "recess" appointment. (23 Op. Att'y. Gen., 599; but see 33 Op. Att'y. Gen., 20.) Also in 29 Op. Att'y. Gen., 397, 407, the Attorney General quoted from the decision of the Court of Claims in Geddes v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 428, 445, and then said: "This reasoning, as the minority hold, is in direct conflict with that of United States v. Tyler, supra, and can not be accepted as a correct statement of the law." It will be noted that here the Attorney General declined to accept the "reasoning" and not the conclusions of the Court of Claims.]

The Attorney General's opinions should be followed unless contrary to some authoritative judicial decision which puts the matter at rest. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 301.)

The opinions of the Attorney General should be regarded by the heads of departments as law until withdrawn by him or overruled by the courts. (20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 654, 659; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 719, 722.)

Reasons for declining to render opinions except when required by law.—The Attorney General has no right to give an official opinion except in those cases in which it is required of him by law. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 24.)

To step beyond the circle of his duties as defined by law would in itself be a violation of law, independently of other relations of the subject. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 25.)

I should consider myself as transcending the limits of my commission in a very unjustifiable manner in attempting to attach the weight of my office to any opinion not authorized by the law which prescribes my duties. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 211.)

The Attorney General is sworn to discharge the duties of his office according to law. To be instrumental in enlarging the sphere of his official duties beyond that which is prescribed by law would, in my opinion, be a violation of his oath. It would be incalculably dangerous to permit an officer to act, under color of his office, beyond the pale of the law. The precedent would not be the less dangerous on account of the purity of motives in which it originated. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 335.)

The Attorney General should not feel at liberty to augment the duties of his office, already sufficiently laborious, by setting a precedent by the voluntary assumption of others which do not belong to the office. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 608, 609.)

Is very unwilling to create a precedent which shall incumber his burdensome office with duties foreign to it. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 608, 613.)

His opinion would not only be gratuitous, but unauthorized. (2 Op. Att'y. Gen., 311.)

Nor will the Attorney General render an unofficial opinion in such a case, even as an individual, because in the relation he stands to the Government an opinion from him might be looked upon as an official one, and thus connect the Government with an individual controversy in which it has no concern and with which it ought not to interfere. (2 Op. Att'y. Gen., 531.)

For the Attorney General to render an opinion in such a case would be to lend the name of the Government to matters of controversy with which it is not connected by law, and would thus involve unauthorized interference with private rights. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 24.)

He has no warrant to act outside of the statutes which define his office. (15 Op. Att'y. Gen., 138; 18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 365.)

He is not authorized or required to give an official opinion except in the cases specified by law. If he should do so, he would overstep the boundaries which appear to be prescribed for him by a long line of decisions and uniform practice, and would commit himself upon a question which might be properly submitted to him thereafter in accordance with law. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 174; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 609, 723.)

His opinion, where not required by law, would be extraofficial and unauthorized. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 220; 19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 7; 20 Op. Att'y. Gen., 724.)

He is not permitted by law to render an official opinion upon questions not covered by the statute. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 174.)

His opinion, if rendered in a case not specified by law, would be entitled to no more consideration than the opinion of any person presumed to have some knowledge of the point in question. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 357; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 383, 667, 440; 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 531.)

He is not authorized to give an official opinion in any case not falling within the scope of his duties, so as to connect the Government with individual controversies in which it has no concern and with which it ought not to interfere. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 326, 334.)

Such opinions would be in violation of his oath of office and of dangerous example. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 164.)

Would make it impossible for the Attorney General to attend to his duties as prescribed by law. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 165.)

Would be unwarranted by law (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 4); not the duty or practice of the Attorney General (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 568; 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414); not permitted by statute or precedent (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 414); would be inexpedient. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 535.)

No officer should be permitted to stretch his authority and carry the influence of his office beyond the circle which the positive law of the land has drawn around him. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 493; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 440.)

Will render opinion where jurisdiction is doubtful.—Where the Attorney General entertains a doubt as to whether a case presented constitutes one of a character prescribed by statute as justifying and requiring the expression of an opinion by him, he will as a matter of public policy as well as of courtesy determine such doubt in favor of the propriety of such advice. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 38.)

Sec. 357. [Legal advice to Departments of War and Navy.] Whenever a question of law arises in the administration of the Department of War or the Department of the Navy, the cognizance of which is not given by statute to some other officer from whom the head of the Department may require advice, it shall be sent to the Attorney-General, to be by him referred to the proper officer in his Department, or otherwise disposed of as he may deem proper.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 6, v. 16, p. 163.)

Whether subordinate officers of the War and Navy Departments may refer questions to the Attorney General, as well as the heads of those departments, has been suggested but not decided by the Attorney General. If this section allows such action, "it is evident that it makes a distinction therein betwixt these departments and all others, and that for a reason which upon its face it suggests." (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 59. See decisions noted under section 356, holding that the opinion of the Attorney General may be required under that section only by the President or the head of a department, and will not be rendered to subordinate officers; see also file No. 20400-200 Op. 13, Sept. 25, 1920, quoting Atty. Gen.'s letter of Sept. 13, 1920, file No. 204625, requesting that all references from the Navy Dept. come directly through or by direction of the Secretary of the Navy.)

Questions of law arising in the Navy Department.—In the Navy Department the law authorizes a Judge Advocate General who is by statute given cognizance, among other things, of such duties "as have heretofore been performed by the Solicitor and Naval Judge Advocate General." (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164). The duties of the Judge Advocate General, as defined by the Navy Regulations, 1920, include "all matters of law arising in the Navy Department." (Art. 469 C. N. R. 2; art. 393

(3), C. N. R. 2.) Provision has also been made in annual appropriation acts for a Solicitor in the Navy Department, whose duties are not defined by statute. (See legislative, executive and judicial appropriation act, May 22, 1908, 35 Stat. 218, and subsequent years.) By Navy Regulations, 1920, it is provided that "the Solicitor shall perform such duties as may be assigned by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy." (Art. 393 (4), C. N. R. 2.)

The Attorney General has requested that the opinion of the law officer of a department accompany request for his opinion by the head of such department; and has declined to render an opinion upon a question of law involving the personnel of the Navy until an opinion on such question had been prepared by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy. (File 22724-16:1, Jan. 25, 1911; file 27223-12, Jan. 20, 1915. See note to sec. 356, R. S.)

Suits in foreign countries.—In view of sections 189, 357, and 365, Revised Statutes, the Secretary of the Navy is not authorized to employ counsel in foreign countries to institute suit in behalf of the United States to recover for damages caused to a vessel of the United States; but the case should be referred to the Department of Justice for attention. (21 Op. Atty. Gen. 195. For other cases, see note to sec. 189, R. S.)

Sec. 358. [Reference of questions by Attorney-General to subordinates.] Any question of law submitted to the Attorney-General for his opinion, except questions involving a construction of the Constitution of the United States, may be by him referred to such of his subordinates as he may deem appropriate, and he may require the written opinion thereon of the officer to whom the same may be referred. If the opinion given by such officer is approved by the Attorney-General, such approval indorsed thereon shall give the opinion the same force and effect as belong to the opinions of the Attorney-General.—(22 June, 1870, c. 170, s. 4, v. 16, p. 162.)

As to "force and effect" of opinions rendered by Attorney General, see note to section 356, Revised Statutes.

The Attorney General must personally pass upon every question submitted to him for opinion; for although he may under this section refer the question to a subordinate for a written opinion, the action of the subordinate must be examined and approved by the Attorney General to give it effect. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 174, 176.)

Questions involving the construction of the Constitution should be submitted to the Attorney General for his personal opinion. The advice of the Solicitor of the Treasury may be asked upon any other question of law arising in the Treasury Department, and such advice is regarded as rendered by him in his character as assistant to the Attorney General. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 656, 657.)

Sec. 359. [Conduct and argument of cases.] Except when the Attorney-General in particular cases otherwise directs, the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General shall conduct and argue suits and writs of error and appeals in the Supreme Court and suits in the Court of Claims in which the United States is interested, and the Attorney-General may, whenever he deems it for the interest of the United States, either in person conduct and argue any case in any court of the United States in which the United States is interested, or may direct the Solicitor-General or any officer of the Department of Justice to do so.—(24 Sept., 1789, c. 20, s. 35, v. 1, p. 92. 25 June, 1868, c. 71, s. 5, v. 15, p. 75. 22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 5, v. 16, p. 162. U. S. v. Lawrence, 13 Blatch., 295.)

This section is modified by act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat., 816), which authorizes the Attorney General or any attorney appointed by him to conduct any kind of legal proceeding which district attorneys are authorized to conduct, including grand jury proceedings.

As to duty of Attorney General in connection with proceedings in Court of Claims, see sections 180, 185, Judicial Code, act March 3, 1911 (36 Stat., 1142).

Attorney General may require certain information to be furnished him by departments in connection with suits in the Court of Claims. (Sec. 188, R. S.)

Suits in the Court of Claims.—The Attorney General is the only officer of the Government, except his assistants authorized by him, who has any right to represent the United States in suits in the Court of Claims. (Campbell v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 426, 429.)

The authority of the Attorney General to "conduct suits" in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Government may fairly be held to include at least every act in the conduct of such suits which an attorney at law in a suit between individuals might lawfully do, with this reservation, as has uniformly been held by the Court of Claims, that he can not on the trial of a cause bind the Government by admitting facts adverse to it unless they are such as it is his official duty to know and as have become known to him officially in the course of the discharge of such duty. (Campbell v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 426, 429.)

Proceedings in Supreme Court.—When a case in which the Government is interested comes to the Supreme Court from any lower court, it passes beyond the limits within which a district attorney has jurisdiction and exercises his powers and falls by the terms of this section within the special care of the Attorney General. The Attorney General may in his discretion make other arrangements for the management of such a case, but this discretion does not abridge the fact that full responsibility and control are imposed directly upon him as the head of the Department of Justice. (U. S. v. Winston, 170 U. S., 522, 524.)

The solicitor in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy has represented the United States in the Supreme Court (U. S. v. Smith, 197 U. S., 386; file 469-1904); as has also a commissioned officer of the Marine Corps, who appeared in behalf of the United States "by special leave of the court." (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 113; file 5728-1894. See also U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 560, in which defendant, an officer of the Marine Corps, submitted printed argument for himself and was not represented by counsel.)

Proceedings in inferior Federal courts.—It is at least doubtful whether the authority given the Attorney General to "conduct and argue any case in any court of the United States in which the United States is interested" confers upon him any authority to commence and institute proceedings except through the district attorneys. (Attorney General v. Rumford Chemical Works, 32 Fed. Rep., 608, 623. But see act June 30, 1906, noted above.)

It is probable that the intention of this section was to settle the right of the highest law officer of the United States and the Solicitor General and the officers of the Department of Justice to "conduct and argue" cases "in any court" as they had been permitted to do in the Supreme Court and in the Court of Claims, and to leave public prosecutions until they come before the court to which they are returnable within the exclusive direction of the district attorney as theretofore declared. (U. S. v. Rosenthal, 121 Fed. Rep., 866. But see act June 30, 1906, noted above.)

Proceedings before grand jury.—The Attorney General, the Solicitor General, nor any officer of the Department of Justice is authorized by sections 359, 367, or other provisions of the Revised Statutes to conduct or to aid in the conduct of proceedings before a grand jury, nor has a special assistant to the Attorney General such power. (U. S. v. Rosenthal, 121 Fed. Rep., 862.) [This is now authorized by act June 30, 1906, above noted.]

Suits in State courts.—It should be observed that by section 359 the Attorney General may not "conduct and argue any case" in a State court. Section 367 gives that power. (U. S. v. Rosenthal, 121 Fed. Rep., 867.)

Sec. 360. [Performance of duty by officers of the Department of Justice.] The Attorney-General may require any solicitor or officer of the Department of Justice to perform any duty required of the Department or any officer thereof.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 14, v. 16, p. 164.)

The Attorney General has express authority under this section and section 367 to send an officer of the Department of Justice to any State in the United States to attend to the taking of a deposition in a suit in which the United States is interested and which is pending in another State. (U. S. v. Ady, 76 Fed. Rep., 359, 363.)

Sec. 361. [Legal services required by the President, heads of departments and subordinates.] The officers of the Department of Justice, under the direction of the Attorney-General, shall give all opinions and render all services requiring the skill of persons learned in the law necessary to enable the President and heads of Departments, and the heads of Bureaus and other officers in the Departments, to discharge their respective duties; and shall, on behalf of the United States, procure the proper evidence for, and conduct, prosecute, or defend all suits and proceedings in the Supreme Court and in the Court of Claims, in which the United States, or any officer thereof, as such officer, is a party or may be interested; and no fees shall be allowed or paid to any other attorney or counselor at law for any service herein required of the officers of the Department of Justice, except in the cases provided by section three hundred and sixty-three.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 14, v. 16, p. 164.)

See section 188, Revised Statutes, concerning evidence to be furnished Attorney General to defend suits in Court of Claims.

See section 189, Revised Statutes, and note, as to employment of attorneys or counsel by the heads of departments generally, employment of counsel to serve as judge advocate or to assist the judge advocate of a naval court-martial, employment and payment of counsel in foreign countries, etc. See also note to section 362, Revised Statutes.

Legal assistance to subordinate officers.—For the guidance of the heads of bureaus and other officers of the departments in the discharge of their duties, provision is made by this section for assistance from the officers of the Department of Justice under the direction of the Attorney General. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 608, 609. See also note to secs. 356 and 357, R. S.)

Sec. 362. [Superintendence of district attorneys and marshals.] The Attorney-General shall exercise general superintendence and direction over the attorneys and marshals of all the districts in the United States and the Territories as to the manner of discharging their respective duties; and the several district attorneys and marshals are required to report to the Attorney-General an account of their official proceedings, and of the state and condition of their respective offices, in such time and manner as the Attorney-General may direct.—(2 Aug., 1861, c. 37, s. 1, v. 12, p. 285. 22 June, 1870, c. 150, ss. 16, 17, v. 16, p. 164.)

Purpose of section.—The Attorney General being the chief law officer of the Government, Congress deemed it proper to subject to his general superintendence these subordinate law officers to the end that the legal business of the United States in their hands, whether civil or criminal, should be placed more directly under the eye and within the control of the Government. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.)

This section does not authorize the Attorney General to control the action of the district attorneys in criminal cases by general regulation. His power must be exercised by giving particular instructions in particular cases and based on the facts of such cases. (Fish v. U. S., 36 Fed. Rep., 677.)

Instructions to district attorneys in naval cases.—In cases in which persons in the naval service apply for writs of habeas corpus, it is the practice of the Attorney General, upon request of the Secretary of the Navy, to instruct the United States attorney for the district in which the proceeding is instituted, to render all necessary assistance to the officer upon whom the writ is served in order to protect the interests of the Government. (File 26522; G. O. 121, Sept. 17, 1914.)

Similar instructions are issued by the Attorney General in other cases of legal proceedings instituted against officers of the Navy as the result of official acts performed by them. (File 204-04, Jan. 15, 1904, suit of Paymaster Robt. B. Rodney, retired, against Capt. Sam. C. Lemly, Judge Advocate General; file 27231-8-6, Feb. 6, 1911, mandamus proceeding by Capt. Jefferson F. Moser, U. S. N., retired, against Hon. George von L. Meyer, Secretary of the Navy; file 26522-19-4, December 3, 1912, suit of W. W. Dickey, chief commissary steward, against Rear Admiral Doyle, Capt. Huse, Capt. Welles, Capt. Quimby, U. S. N., and Capt. Marix, U. S. M. C.; file 28478-2-1, suit of Benj. B. Abrahams against First Lieut. Howard C. Judson, U. S. M. C.; see also, 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 51.)

In cases in which persons fraudulently impersonate officers or enlisted men of the Navy, the Attorney General causes criminal prosecutions to be instituted by the United States attorneys where the matter is brought to his attention by the Secretary of the Navy (file 21355); and appropriate instructions are issued by him to district attorneys in other classes of cases concerning the Navy Department, such as reported violations of the 8-hour law by contractors (file 10107), etc.

In trials before courts-martial the Attorney General, upon request of the Secretary of the Navy in special cases, has instructed a United States attorney to assist the judge advocate (file 26251-5816-2); and has issued similar instructions in cases under investigation by courts of inquiry (file 14625-183-1; 9608-44-4. See also note to sec. 189, R. S.).

The Attorney General, upon request of the Secretary of the Navy, has instructed a United States attorney to assist in the prosecution of a civil suit brought by a chief petty officer against private parties for discrimination against the naval uniform. (File 5421-3; see also file 7657-330.)

The Secretary of the Navy will not request the Attorney General to instruct United States attorneys to institute criminal proceedings against applicants for enlistment in the Marine Corps alleged to have fraudulently obtained Government transportation, it appearing that such attorneys have declined to prosecute these cases, and that the necessity for proceedings in the civil courts might be obviated by enlisting the men before furnishing them with transportation, thereby subjecting them to the jurisdiction of naval courts-martial. (File 7657-180.)

Where an officer asking that legal assistance be furnished him has failed to give the full facts of the case to the Navy Department, although afforded ample opportunity to do so, and in consequence the department has not sufficient information to enable it to act intelligently upon the request, the case is not a proper one for reference to the Attorney General. (File 26262-1705-3, May 21, 1915.)

The Attorney General can not instruct a United States attorney to appear in a State court to assist in the prosecution of a private citizen charged with killing a person in the naval service; it must be assumed in the absence of facts tending to show the contrary that the State authorities will do their full duty in the matter; and attempted interference with the State authorities would be improper. (File 26250-340-3, June 11, 1912, following letter of Attorney General, Apr. 18, 1912, file 26250-340-2; 7657-374.)

Although the Attorney General may entertain doubt whether, in view of the peculiar circumstances of hardship in a particular case, it is desirable to proceed with a criminal prosecution instituted at the instance of the Navy Department, he will nevertheless direct the United States attorney to proceed with the case if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy the interests of the Navy Department render it desirable that such a prosecution be had. (File 5939-6, Feb. 12, 1907.) [The Secretary of the Navy concurring in the recommendation of the United States attorney in this case, the Attorney General authorized the latter to dismiss the case, which was a prosecution for perjury against a former enlisted man who had been discharged from the Marine Corps upon writ of habeas corpus on account of fraudulent enlistment. (File 5939-7, Feb. 18, 1907.)]

Instructions to marshals.—The Attorney General declines to instruct United States marshals to apprehend and return deserters from the Navy where Congress has not seen fit to confer such authority upon civil officers. (File 5621-1, Nov. 17, 1906. For subsequent legislation on this subject see act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 15, 35 Stat., 622.)

Sec. 363. [Retaining counsel to aid district attorneys.] The Attorney-General shall, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires it, employ and retain, in the name of the United States, such attorneys and counselors at law as he may think necessary to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties, and shall stipulate with such assistant attorneys and counsel the amount of compensation, and shall have supervision of their conduct and proceedings.—(2 Aug., 1861, c. 37, s. 2, v. 12, p. 285. 3 Mar., 1869, c. 121, s. 1, v. 15, pp. 283, 294. 10 April, 1869, c. 25, v. 16, p. 46. 22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 16, v. 16, p. 164.)

See note to section 366, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 364. [Attendance of counsel to be provided by Attorney-General.] Whenever the head of a Department or Bureau gives the Attorney-General due notice that the interests of the United States require the service of counsel upon the examination of witnesses touching any claim, or upon the legal investigation of any claim, pending in such Department or Bureau, the Attorney-General shall provide for such service.—14 Feb., 1871, c. 51, s. 3, v. 16, p. 412.)

A similar provision is contained in section 187, Revised Statutes.

The object of these statutory provisions (secs. 363, 364, and 365, R. S.) is manifest. While giving the Attorney General full power to employ counsel for the United States to assist those upon whom regularly devolve the duty of representing the Government in the courts without special compensation, Congress intended to restrict the exercise of that power to the extent indicated in section 365. It was left to that officer to determine whether the public interests required the employment of special counsel, but that the discretion given him might not be abused and that unnecessary expense might be avoided it was declared (sec. 365) that except in the cases of the respective district attorneys and assistant district attorneys no compensation should be allowed to any person as an attorney or counsel for the United States unless specially authorized by law, and then only on the certificate of the Attorney General that such services were actually rendered and that the same could not have been performed by the Attorney General or by the Solicitor General or by the officers of the Department of Justice or by the district attorneys. (U. S. v. Crosthwaite, 168 U. S., 375, 379.)

Sec. 365. [Counsel fees restricted.] No compensation shall hereafter be allowed to any person, besides the respective district attorneys and assistant district attorneys for services as an attorney or counselor to the United States, or to any branch or Department of the Government thereof, except in cases specially authorized by law, and then only on the certificate of the Attorney-General that such services were actually rendered, and that the same could not be performed by the Attorney-General, or Solicitor-General, or the officers of the Department of Justice, or by the district attorneys.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 17, v. 16, p. 164.)

See note to section 364, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 366. [Appointment and oath of special attorneys or counsel.] Every attorney or counselor who is specially retained, under the authority of the Department of Justice, to assist in the trial of any case in which the Government is interested, shall receive a commission from the head of such Department, as a special assistant to the Attorney-General, or to some one of the district attorneys, as the nature of the appointment may require; and shall take the oath required by law to be taken by the district attorneys, and shall be subject to all the liabilities imposed upon them by law.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 17, v. 16, p. 164.)

See section 189, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Counsel employed in foreign country to defend master of a United States naval auxiliary in suit for collision, not required to take oath of office. File 4729-18. (See note to sec. 189, R. S.)

Sections 363 and 366 must be construed together and as referring to the same class of special assistants. They do not authorize the Attorney General to appoint special assistants to a district attorney having the authority or right to appear before and participate in the proceedings of a grand jury. (U. S. v. Chemical Co., 163 Fed. Rep., 66; but see note to sec. 359, R. S.)

Sec. 367. [Interest of United States in pending suits—who may attend to.] The Solicitor-General, or any officer of the Department of Justice, may be sent by the Attorney-General to any State or District in the United States to attend to the interests of the United States in any suit pending in any of the courts of the United States, or in the courts of any State, or to attend to any other interest of the United States.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 5, v. 16, p. 162.)

See note to section 360, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 383. [Publication of opinions.] The Attorney-General shall from time to time cause to be edited, and printed at the Government Printing-Office, an edition of one thousand copies of such of the opinions of the law-officers herein authorized to be given as he may deem valuable for preservation in volumes, which shall be, as to size, quality of paper, printing, and binding, of uniform style and appearance, as nearly as practicable, with volume eight of such opinions, published, by Robert Farnham, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-eight. Each volume shall contain proper head-notes, a complete and full index, and such foot-notes as the Attorney-General may approve. Such volumes shall be distributed in such manner as the Attorney-General may from time to time prescribe.—(22 June, 1870, c. 150, s. 18, v. 16, p. 165.)

The opinions of the successive Attorneys General, possessed of greater or less amount of legal acumen, acquirement, and experience, have come to constitute a body of legal precedents and exposition, having author-	ity the same in kind if not the same in degree with decisions of the courts of justice. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 326, 334. See note to sec. 356, R. S., as to weight of Attorney General's opinions.)

TITLE IX.

THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Sec.

- 388. Establishment of Post-Office Department.
- 391. Oath of office.
- 392. Oath, before whom taken.

Sec.

- 396. Duties of Postmaster-General.
- 398. Postal arrangements with foreign countries.

Sec. 388. [Establishment of Post-Office Department.] There shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department to be known as the Post-Office Department, and a Postmaster-General, who shall be the head thereof, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who may be removed in the same manner; and the term of the Postmaster-General shall be for and during the term of the President by whom he is appointed, and for one month thereafter, unless sooner removed.—(8 May, 1794, c. 23, s. 3, v. 1, p. 357; 8 June, 1872, c. 335, ss. 1, 2, v. 17, p. 283.)

Envelopes for use by all executive departments and branches of the service under their jurisdiction shall be contracted for by the Postmaster General for periods not exceeding four years, such envelopes to be plain or printed as may be prescribed by the department making the requisition. (Act June 26, 1906, 34 Stat., 476.)

History and growth of executive departments—see note to section 158, Revised Statutes.

Navy mail clerks and assistant navy mail clerks, appointed from enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, as to their duties as such clerks shall be “governed by the postal laws and regulations of the United States.” (Act May 27, 1908, 35 Stat., 417, as amended by acts Aug. 24, 1912, 37 Stat., 554, Aug. 24, 1912, sec. 11, 37 Stat., 560, Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1188, and July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718.)

Ocean mail vessels are to be constructed according to plans approved by the Secretary of the Navy with reference to their conversion into naval auxiliary cruisers; no vessel to be employed by the Postmaster General in such service which is not approved by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 3, 1891, sec. 4, 26 Stat., 831.)

Ocean mail vessels may be taken by the United States and used as transports or cruisers, upon payment to owners of the full actual value. (Act Mar. 3, 1891, sec. 9, 26 Stat., 832.)

Officers of the Navy may be detailed by Secretary of the Navy for duty on ocean mail vessels, if accepted by the contractor, and while so employed they shall receive furlough pay from the Government. (Act Mar. 3, 1891, sec. 7, 26 Stat., 832.)

Penalty envelopes: Letters, packages, etc., relating exclusively to business of the Government of the United States may be transmitted free through the mail (act Mar. 3, 1877, sec. 5, 19 Stat., 335). The envelopes of such matter in all cases shall bear appropriate indorsements containing the proper designation of the office from which or officer from whom the same are transmitted, with a statement of the penalty for their misuse. (Act Mar. 3, 1879, sec. 29, 20 Stat., 362, amended by act July 5, 1884, sec. 3, 23 Stat., 158. See Art. 5481, Naval Instructions, 1913. See also note to sec. 398, R. S., file 25885-6, and file 10726-15, May 1, 1914.)

Penalty envelopes: Any department or officer authorized to use penalty envelopes may inclose them with return address to persons from whom official information is desired. (Act Mar. 3, 1879, sec. 29, 20 Stat., 362, amended by act July 5, 1884, sec. 3, 23 Stat., 158.) But such envelopes shall not be furnished for use to contractors with the Government or to enable private persons or concerns to send free reports, etc., which they are required by law to make. (Sec. 500, “Postal Laws and Regulations,” 1913.)

Penalty envelopes: No article or package shall be admitted to the mails under the penalty privilege unless it would be entitled to admission to the mails under laws requiring payment of postage. (Act June 26, 1906, 34 Stat., 477.)

Penalty envelopes: Lending or permitting use of frank by or for benefit of any committee, organization, or association, other than committees composed of members of Congress, declared unlawful. (Act June 26, 1906, 34 Stat., 477.) Fraudulent use of official envelopes punishable by fine of not more than $300. (Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 227, 35 Stat., 1134.)

President authorized to use armed forces to prevent obstruction of mails during existing war. (Act Aug. 10, 1917, 40 Stat., 272.)

Registered mail: Letters or packages may be registered by executive departments and bureaus without payment of registry fee. (Act Mar. 3, 1879, sec. 29, 20 Stat., 362, amended by act July 5, 1884, sec. 3, 23 Stat., 158.)

Soldiers, sailors, and marines in service of the United States, may transmit unpaid and duly certified letters to their destination, under regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General, to be paid for on delivery. (Act Mar. 3, 1879, sec. 9, 20 Stat., 358.) During the present war such letters written by soldiers, sailors and marines in a foreign country may be mailed free of postage. (Act Oct. 3, 1917, 40 Stat., 327.)

Sec. 391. [Oath of office.] Before entering upon the duties of his office, and before he shall receive any salary, the Postmaster-General and each of the persons employed in the postal service shall respectively take and subscribe, before some magistrate or other competent officer, the following oath: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully perform all the duties required of me, and abstain from everything forbidden by the laws in relation to the establishment of post-offices and post-roads within the United States; and that I will honestly and truly account for and pay over any money belonging to the said United States which may come into my possession or control: So help me, God."—(8 June, 1872, c. 335, s. 15, v. 17, p. 287; 5 Mar., 1874, c. 46, v. 18, p. 19.)

Enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps, designated as navy mail clerks or assistant navy mail clerks, are required by law to "take the oath of office prescribed for employees of the Postal Service." (Act May 27, 1908, 35 Stat., 417, as amended by acts Aug. 24, 1912, 37 Stat., 554, Aug. 24, 1912, sec. 11, 37 Stat., 560, Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1188, and July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 718.) By Naval Instructions, 1913 (art. 5401 (4)), navy mail clerks and assistant navy mail clerks are required to take an oath of office which combines that prescribed in section 1757, Revised Statutes, with that prescribed for the Postal Service. (See 18 Op. Att'y. Gen., 181. See also "Postal Laws and Regulations, sec. 153;" and see file 3980-1185, Jan. 15, 1916.)

"Every person employed in the Postal Service shall be subject to all penalties and forfeitures for the violation of the laws relating to such service, whether he has taken the oath of office or not." (Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 230, 35 Stat., 1134.)

For modification of this section, see note to section 392, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 392. [Oath, before whom taken.] Any officer, civil or military, holding a commission under the United States, is authorized to administer and certify the oath prescribed by the preceding section.—(8 June, 1872, c. 335, s. 15, v. 17, p. 287; 5 Mar., 1874, c. 46, v. 18, p. 19.)

As to persons in the naval service authorized to administer oaths, see section 183, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Naval Instructions, 1913, article 5401 (4), provides that the oath administered to navy mail clerks and assistant navy mail clerks shall be taken and subscribed "before a magistrate or commissioned officer of the Navy."

Sections 391 and 392, as printed above, are in the same language as these sections appear in the second edition of the Revised Statutes. However, by act of March 5, 1874 (18 Stat., 19), it was provided as follows: "That before entering upon the duties, and before they shall receive any salary, the Postmaster General, and all persons employed in the postal service, shall respectively take and subscribe before some magistrate or other competent officer authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory, the following oath or affirmation: 'I, A. B. do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be,) that I will faithfully perform all the duties required of me and abstain from everything forbidden by the laws in relation to the establishment of post-offices and post-roads within the United States; and that I will honestly and truly account for and pay over any money belonging to the said United States which may come into my possession or control; and I also further swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States; so help me God.' And this oath or affirmation may be taken before any officer civil or military holding a commission under the United States, and such officer is hereby authorized to administer and certify such oath or affirmation."

This act of March 5, 1874, is amendatory of sections 391 and 392, in so far as said act varies from those sections, this being provided for by section 5601, Revised Statutes. Also, by act of March 2, 1877 (19 Stat., 268), as amended by act of March 9, 1878 (20 Stat., 27), it was provided that the second edition of the Revised Statutes shall "not control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of any original act as passed by Congress since the first day of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-three."

Sec. 396. [Duties of Postmaster-General.] It shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General:

First. To establish and discontinue post-offices.

Second. To instruct all persons in the postal service with reference to their duties.

Third. To decide on the forms of all official papers.

Fourth. To prescribe the manner of keeping and stating accounts.

Fifth. To enforce the prompt rendition of returns relative to accounts.

Sixth. To control, according to law, and subject to the settlement of the Sixth Auditor, all expenses incident to the service of the Department.

Seventh. To superintend the disposal of the moneys of the Department.

Eighth. To direct the manner in which balances shall be paid over; issue warrants to cover money into the Treasury; and to pay out the same.

Ninth. To superintend generally the business of the department, and execute all laws relative to the postal service. [See secs. 3660–3665, 3668, 3669.]—(8 June, 1872, c. 335, s. 6, v. 17, p. 285; 3 Mar., 1877, c. 103, s. 2, v. 19, p. 335; Locke v. U. S. 3 Mas., 446.)

The title of the “Sixth Auditor” was changed to “Auditor for the Post Office Department,” by act of July 31, 1894, section 3 (28 Stat., 205).

Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks are to perform such postal duties as may be authorized by the Postmaster-General, and to give bond in such penal sum as the Postmaster-General may prescribe. (Act May 27, 1908, 34 Stat., 417, as amended by act Aug. 24, 1912, secs. 3 and 11, 37 Stat., 554, 560.)

Sec. 398. [Postal arrangements with foreign countries.] For the purpose of making better postal arrangements with foreign countries, or to counteract their adverse measures affecting our postal intercourse with them, the Postmaster-General, by and with the advice and consent of the President, may negotiate and conclude postal treaties or conventions, and may reduce or increase the rates of postage on mail-matter conveyed between the United States and foreign countries.—(8 June, 1872, c. 335, s. 167, v. 17, p. 304.)

Articles 25 and 26 of the Universal Postal Convention, concerning the handling of closed mails to and from vessels of the Navy, are published in Naval Instructions, 1913, article 5442.

Customs regulations relating to mails are published in articles 5421 and 5423, Naval Instructions, 1913.

Under the Universal Postal Convention “official correspondence which is admissible to the domestic mails under penalty envelope or label may also be dispatched in the same manner to Canada, Cuba, Mexico, the Republic of Panama, and to the city of Shanghai, China.” (Sec. 518, Postal Laws and Regulations, 1913; see also file 3980–1185, Jan. 15, 1916.)

Newfoundland is not a part of Canada, but a separate province of the British Empire; and official letters to Newfoundland are required to be prepaid. (File 7538–176, Aug. 2, 1915.)

See section 388, Revised Statutes, and laws noted thereunder.

TITLE X.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY.

Sec.
 415. Establishment of the Department of the Navy.
 416. Clerks and employees.
 417. Duties of the Secretary of the Navy.
 418. Department property, books, and records.
 419. Establishment of bureaus and distribution of business.
 420. Orders considered as emanating from Secretary.
 421. Chiefs of bureaus.
 422. Bureaus of Yards and Docks, Equipment, Navigation, and Ordnance.
 423. Bureau of Construction and Repair.
 424. Bureau of Steam Engineering.
 425. Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

Sec.
 426. Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.
 427. Use of engraved plates of Wilkes's Expedition.
 428. Collection of enemies' flags.
 429. Reports to be made by Secretary of the Navy.
 430. Estimates for expenses.
 431. Hydrographic office.
 432. Maps, charts, etc.
 433. Money received from sale of maps, charts, etc.
 434. Naval Observatory.
 435. Meridians.
 436. Nautical Almanac.

Sec. 415. [Establishment of the Department of the Navy.] There shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department, to be known as the Department of the Navy, and a Secretary of the Navy, who shall be the head thereof.—(30 Apr., 1798, c. 35, s. 1, v. 1, p. 553.)

As to "origin and growth of executive departments," see note to section 158, Revised Statutes.

For "provisions applicable to all the executive departments," see Title IV, sections 158-198, Revised Statutes.

The permanent "seat of Government" is the District of Columbia (sec. 1795, R. S.). "All offices attached to the seat of Government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law" (sec. 1796, R. S.). In case of a contagious or epidemic disease at the seat of Government, the President is authorized to remove the public offices therefrom. (Sec. 4798, R. S.; see also secs. 34, 1776, 4797, and 4799, R. S.)

The term "executive department" refers only to what may be called the department proper located at Washington, and does not include those adjuncts of a department engaged wholly in field service. (4 Comp. Dec., 551; see also 5 Comp. Dec., 667; 7 Comp. Dec., 126.)

The several executive departments are by law established at the seat of Government; they have no existence elsewhere. Only those bureaus and offices can be deemed bureaus and offices in any of these departments which are constituted such by law of its organization. The department, with its bureaus or offices, is in the contemplation of the law an establishment distinct from the branches of the public service and the offices thereof which are under its supervision. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 262, 267; 26 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

The Marine Corps headquarters is a part of the Naval Establishment, but it is not a part of the Navy Department as established at the seat of Government; it is under the supervision of the executive department, but that relation to the department is not the same as being a part of it. (11 Comp. Dec., 558; file 4600, Apr. 10, 1906; file 21686, Apr. 11, 1906.)

A clerk in a navy yard is not a clerk in an executive department, although the navy yard is under the supervision of one of the executive departments. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 254.)

Employees of the navy yard and gun factory in Washington are under the Navy Department, but are not a part of an executive department. (11 Comp. Dec., 97.)

For other cases, see note to section 159, Revised Statutes.

State, War, and Navy Building.—The Navy Department was to occupy such rooms in the State, War, and Navy Building as were assigned for its use by a joint committee of Congress, pursuant to act of August 5, 1882, section 6 (22 Stat., 256). Reapportionment at any time of space in said building was authorized by act of May 10, 1916 (39 Stat., 94).

Navy Department Annex.—Additional quarters to be rented for the Navy Department, for a period not exceeding 10 years from July 1, 1913, at an annual rental of not exceeding $30,000, were authorized to be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 771). [Such additional quarters, designated by law as the "Navy Department Annex, New York Avenue near Seventeenth Street Northwest," were occupied by the Navy Department pursuant to the act cited, in lieu of quarters formerly used as an annex by the Navy Department and known as the "Mills Building."]

Temporary office buildings for use of the War and Navy Departments in Henry Park were authorized by act of October 6, 1917 (39 Stat., 368) and in Potomac Park by act of March 28, 1918 (40 Stat., 483).

A superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building, to be detailed from the Engineer Corps of the Army or Navy, was authorized by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 553); and his duties were extended to include the "Navy Department Annex, or Mills Building," by act May 22, 1908 (35 Stat., 218), and to include temporary additional buildings by act of March 28, 1918 (40 Stat., 482, 483). (See notes to secs. 1390, 1413, and 1462, R. S.; and see act June 4, 1918, 40 Stat., 598).

The Secretaries of State, War, and Navy constitute a commission for the care and supervision of the State, War, and Navy Department Building; the duties of the superintendent of the building being discharged under their direction. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 553.)

Laws and regulations within the District of Columbia for protection of property and preservation of peace and order were extended to all public buildings and grounds belonging to the United States within the said district, by act of July 29, 1892, section 15 (27 Stat., 325).

Disorderly and unlawful conduct in public buildings within the District of Columbia, or the injury of pipes, hydrants, etc., therein, is punishable by fine of not more than $50. (Act July 29, 1892, sec. 15, 27 Stat., 325.)

Public buildings not to be closed as mark of respect for deceased exofficials (act Mar. 3, 1893, sec. 4, 27 Stat., 715); nor to be draped in mourning (same act, sec. 3).

The Navy Department is required to be kept open during stated hours for the transaction of public business. (See sec. 162, R. S.)

Buildings rented.—Annual report to Congress of buildings rented is required of heads of departments by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 552); act of July 16, 1892 (27 Stat., 199); and act of May 1, 1913, section 3 (38 Stat., 3).

Contracts for the renting of buildings in Washington are prohibited in the absence of specific authority (Act Mar. 3, 1877, 19 Stat., 370).

"Whenever buildings are rented for public use in the District of Columbia, the executive departments are authorized, whenever it shall be advantageous to the public interest, to rent others in their stead: Provided, That no increase in the number of buildings now in use, nor in the amounts paid for rent, shall result therefrom." (Act Aug. 5, 1882, 22 Stat., 241.)

Heads of departments are authorized to contract for the lease of modern fireproof storage accommodations in the District of Columbia payable from appropriations for rent of buildings for their departments. (Act Mar. 2, 1913, 37 Stat., 718.)

The Department of the Navy was originally established by act of April 30, 1798 (1 Stat., 553). Prior to that date its duties were discharged by the Secretary of War. (See note to sec. 158, R. S.)

The designation, "Navy Department," instead of "Department of the Navy," is now exclusively used by Congress in legislation relating to this department.

The Department of the Navy is sixth in order of precedence among the executive departments. (Sec. 158, R. S.)

Not a naval station.—The Navy Department, Washington, D. C., is not a naval station within the meaning of section 1386, Revised Statutes [now repealed] allowing clerks to "paymasters at stations." The word "station" as used in that section means "naval station." (13 Comp. Dec., 693.)

Secretary of the Navy.—The compensation of the Secretary of the Navy is fixed at $12,000 a year, by act of February 26, 1907 (34 Stat., 993). (See note to section 160, R. S.)

The statutes do not provide by whom the Secretary of the Navy is to be appointed. In the absence of such a provision, his appointment is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (See note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2. In the cases of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, it is specifically provided by statute that they are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. See sec. 388, R. S., and acts of Feb. 9, 1889, 25 Stat., 659; Feb. 14, 1903, 32 Stat., 825; and Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 736.)

The Secretary of the Navy is required to take the oath of office prescribed by section 1757, Revised Statutes, which applies to all persons appointed to any office of honor or profit in the civil, military, or naval service. (See act May 13, 1884, sec. 2, 23 Stat., 22.)

The term for which the Secretary of the Navy is appointed is not fixed by statute. [The law establishing the Department of Commerce and Labor (now Department of Commerce) provided for the appointment of a head of that department, "whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other executive departments." (Act Feb. 14, 1903, 32 Stat., 825). A similar provision was embodied in the act creating the Department of Labor. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 736.) Section 388, Revised Statutes, provided that the term of the Postmaster General shall be for and during the term of the President by whom appointed, and one month thereafter, unless sooner removed.]

The Secretary of the Navy is removable by the President: "When the Navy Department was established in the year 1798 (1 Stat., 553), provision is made for the charge and custody of the books, records, and documents of the department in case of vacancy in the office of Secretary by removal or otherwise. It is not here said by removal by the President, as is done with respect to the heads of the other departments; and yet there can be no doubt that he holds his office by the same tenure as the other Secretaries and is removable by the President. The change of phraseology arose, probably, from its having become the settled and well understood construction of the Constitution that the power of removal was vested in the President alone in such cases, although the appointment of the officer was by the President and Senate."

(Matter of Hennen, 13 Pet., 259. See also note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

In case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Navy, unless otherwise directed by the President, the duties of the office devolve upon the Assistant Secretary of the Navy (sec. 177, R. S.). During the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations shall be next in succession to act as Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 929, amended by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558.) The President, however, may direct some other officer in the Navy Department, or in some other department, to perform the duties of the Secretary of the Navy (sec. 179, R. S.). But neither the Assistant Secretary of the Navy nor any other officer designated by the President, may perform the duties of the Secretary of the Navy, in case of the latter's death or resignation, for a longer period than 30 days (sec. 180, R. S.); except where the vacancy happens during a recess of the Senate (sec. 181, R. S.). The officer temporarily performing the duties of the Secretary of the Navy is not thereby entitled to additional compensation (sec. 182, R. S.).

During the temporary absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of Naval Operations the duties of the Secretary of the Navy, by direction of the President, are to be performed by the following designated persons, in the order named: The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation; in his absence, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance; and in the absence of those two, the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering. (File 1159-765, Bu. Nav., July 2, 1915; Navy Regs., 1920, art. 392, as amended; see also file 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

Officers of the Navy on duty in the Navy Department as aids or advisers of the Secretary of the Navy, but who do not hold any office in the department to which they have been appointed pursuant to law, can not be legally designated by the President to act as Secretary of the Navy during the latter's absence. While these aids, as rear admirals, captains, or commanders, are officers in the public service of the Government, they are not officers in the department eligible for these temporary appointments, and do not come within the class designated in section 179, Revised Statutes. They perform no duties imposed upon them by law; they hold no office in the department created by act of Congress; they are agents appointed by the Secretary, and removable by him at his pleasure, to procure information needed to aid in the performance of his own official duties. There is no more authority to authorize them to perform the duties of the Secretary of the Navy than there is to authorize any officer of the Navy not connected directly with the business of the department. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.) [The "aids" referred to in this opinion, namely, "Aid for Operations," "Aid for Personnel," "Aid for Material," and "Aid for Inspections," were authorized by Changes in Navy Regulations No. 6, of November 18, 1909, revoked by Changes in Navy Regulations No. 5, July 15, 1915 by which latter Changes their duties were transferred to other officers.]

Officers of the Navy are appointed, by provision of law, to perform duties in the Navy Department which constitute them officers in the department, as, for example, the chiefs of bureaus provided for by section 421, Revised Statutes. These bureau chiefs are officers holding offices in the Navy Department which have been created by law, and are within the class designated in section 179, Revised Statutes, as eligible for appointment to temporary vacancies in the office of the Secretary of the Navy. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.)

For other decisions concerning officers temporarily acting as Secretary of the Navy, see notes to sections 177-182 and 868, Revised Statutes.

"It is very clear that the office of Secretary of the Navy is a civil office. Congress has not attempted to confine the appointing power to any class or profession in choosing the incumbent for that position." (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 176. See also U. S. v. Burns, 12 Wall., 246, holding that the Secretary of War "is not in the military service," but, "on the contrary, is a civil officer"; and see 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 457, holding that the Secretary of War is not required to perform duties in the field, does not compose any part of the Army, and has no service to perform that may not be done at the seat of government.)

The Secretary of the Navy is sixth in order of succession to the powers and duties of the Presidency, in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice President (act of Jan. 19, 1886, 24 Stat., 1); he is ex officio a member of the Smithsonian Institution (sec. 5579, R. S., as amended); is a member of the Council of National Defense (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 649), and of the Commission for Memorial to John Ericsson (act Aug. 31, 1916, 39 Stat., 671); is to exercise control of the Aircraft Board (act Oct. 1, 1917, 40 Stat., 296); is privileged to draw books from the Library of Congress (sec. 94, R. S.); and is entitled to a set of the Supreme Court Reports for official use, to be preserved and turned over to his successor in office (sec. 227, Judicial Code, act Mar. 3, 1911, 36 Stat., 1154.)

As to duties of the Secretary of the Navy, see sections 417 and 418, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

For decisions relating generally to heads of departments, see notes to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 1; Article II, section 1, clause 1; and section 158, Revised Statutes.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy.—The office of "Assistant Secretary of the Navy" was created by act of July 31, 1861 (12 Stat., 282), the duties thereof to be such as were prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy or required by law. An additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy was authorized, to serve for a period of six months, by act of May 26, 1866 (14 Stat., 54). The office of Assistant Secretary of the Navy was abolished by act of March 3, 1869 (15 Stat., 296). An Assistant Secretary of the Navy was again authorized by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 243), which was repealed by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 550) [no appointment having in the meantime been made].

The present law is contained in the act of July 11, 1890 (26 Stat., 254), which provides for "an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, to be appointed from civil life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"; and the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 934), which provides that the Assistant Secretary of the Navy shall "perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy or required by law."

It has been found in regard to the heads of departments that it is impossible for a single individual to perform in person all the duties imposed on him by his office. Hence, statutes have been made creating the office of assistant secretaries for all the heads of departments. It would be a very singular doctrine, and subversive of the purposes for which these latter offices were created, if their acts are to be held of no force until ratified by the principal Secretary or head of the department. It was to relieve the overburdened principal of some part of those duties that the office of assistant was created. (Parish v. U. S., 100 U. S., 504; McCullum v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 101.)

The duties of these assistants are generally not specifically defined by law, but are left to the direction and regulation of superior officers. Such assistants are supposed to have the confidence of those immediately above them and to be officially engaged in carrying out the will of their principals in the details of the work of the department in which they are employed. When their acts, decisions, or directions are reduced to writing, signed by them in their official capacity, filed or recorded among the archives of the department, and do not appear to have been revoked, annulled, or modified by the head of the department, they must be held, in the absence of fraud, mistake, or irregularity, to have been done within the scope of the authority of the assistant, and to be as binding on the Government as though expressly ordered by the superior. Especially will this be held when copies of such written documents are sent out by the head of the department in which they are found, without objection on his part to their having been made in the due and regular course of business under his control. (McCullum v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 101.)

A statute (sec. 245, R. S.) providing that the Assistant Secretary of a department shall perform certain specified duties, and such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, does not confine the powers of the assistant to duties of a like nature with those enumerated, especially when read in connection with sections 161 and 177, Revised Statutes, which impose more enlarged duties in certain contingencies. (Shillito Co. v. McClung, 51 Fed. Rep., 868.)

Where the law provides that the Assistant Secretary in a department is to perform such duties "as shall be prescribed by the Secretary, or may be required by law," it empowers the Secretary to make the assistant, as it were, his deputy in all things. So long as the powers delegated to the assistant by his superior remain unrevoked, the authority of the former is coordinate and concurrent with that of the latter. As to the authority so prescribed the Assistant Secretary has the full power of the Secretary himself. Accordingly, the Assistant Secretary, while in the exercise of authority prescribed for him by the Secretary, is authorized to give orders for purchases payable from the contingent fund and to approve vouchers therefor, although under section 3683, Revised Statutes, heads of departments are alone authorized to give such orders and approve such vouchers. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 432, modifying 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 424.)

So long as the powers delegated to the Assistant Secretary by his superior remain unrevoked, the authority of the former is coordinate and concurrent with that of the latter. When the assistant acts at a time the Secretary is not absent or sick, under a regulation made by the Secretary prescribing his powers and duties, he should sign with his own proper official designation. When the Secretary is absent or sick, if the assistant is in charge of the department in pursuance of sections 177 or 179, Revised Statutes, he should sign as Acting Secretary. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 133.)

As to legal proceedings which may be instituted in the case of an officer who signs as "Acting Secretary" while the Secretary is at the department, see note to section 868, Revised Statutes.

An officer temporarily performing the duties of his superior in accordance with law is authorized to serve as member of a board which by statute included his superior in its membership. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 483; see also file 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919.)

For other decisions as to authority of Assistant Secretary, see note to section 177, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 416. [Clerks and Employees.

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 416. There shall be in the Department of the Navy:

"One chief clerk, at a salary of two thousand five hundred dollars a year, so long as there is no Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and at a salary of two thousand two hundred dollars a year when there is an Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

"One disbursing clerk.

"One superintendent of the Navy Department building, at a salary of two hundred and fifty dollars a year.

"In the Bureau of Yards and Docks:

"One civil engineer, at a salary of three thousand dollars a year.

Repealed.]

"One chief clerk, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"One draughtsman, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"In the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting:

"One chief clerk, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"In the Bureau of Construction and Repair:

"One chief clerk, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"One draughtsman, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"In the Bureau of Steam Engineering:

"In the Bureau of Navigation:

"One chief clerk, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"In the Bureau of Ordnance:

"One chief clerk, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"One draughtsman, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"In the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing:

"One chief clerk, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

"In the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery:

"One chief clerk, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year." 5 July, 1862, c. 134, v. 12, p. 510; 2 July, 1864, c. 219, s. 4, v. 13, p. 373; 23 July, 1866, c. 208, s. 8, v. 14, p. 207; 3 Mar., 1871, c. 113, s. 3, v. 16, p. 494; 3 Mar., 1873, c. 226, s. 1, v. 17, pp. 501, 502.

It is superseded and repealed by the following laws:

Act August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255): "That no civil officer, clerk, draughtsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee shall after the first day of October next be employed in any of the executive departments, or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof at the seat of government, except only at such rates and in such numbers, respectively, as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress for such clerical and other personal services for each fiscal year; * * * and after the first day of October next * * * all laws and parts of laws authorizing the employment of officers, clerks, draughtsmen, copyists, messengers, assistant messengers, mechanics, watchmen, laborers, or other employees at a different rate of pay or in excess of the numbers authorized by appropriations made by Congress, be and they are hereby, repealed * * *."

Act of August 23, 1912, section 5 (37 Stat., 414): "Any person violating section four of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation Act approved August fifth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two (Statutes at Large, volume twenty-two, page two hundred and fifty-five), shall be summarily removed from office, and may also upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars or by imprisonment for not more than one year."

Act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 509), making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1915: "That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this Act are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law."

Act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat., 1049, sec. 6), making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1916: "The officers and employees of the United States whose salaries are herein appropriated for are established and shall continue from year to year to the extent they shall be appropriated for by Congress."

Specific changes made by existing law in this section of the Revised Statutes are as follows:

The position of "superintendent of the Navy Department building, at a salary of $250 a year," is abolished, and an officer of the Army or Navy is detailed as superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building, pursuant to act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 553), his duties being performed under the supervision of a commission consisting of the Secretaries of State, War, and Navy (same act), and embracing the "Navy Department Annex," pursuant to act of May 22, 1908 (35 Stat., 218), and subsequent appropriations in the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act.

The Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting was designated as Bureau of Equipment in annual appropriation acts commencing with the fiscal year 1892. By naval appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1912, 1913, and 1914 provision was made for distribution of the duties, funds, and employees of the Bureau of Equipment among the other bureaus and offices of the Navy Department, and by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 408), the Bureau of Equipment was abolished.

The Bureau of Provisions and Clothing was designated as Bureau of Supplies and Accounts by act of July 19, 1892 (27 Stat., 243, 245).

The Bureau of Steam Engineering was designated as the Bureau of Engineering by act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 828).

The position of civil engineer in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, at $3,000 per annum, was appropriated for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation acts, including the act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat., 501), but was omitted from the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 102), and subsequent years. (See sec. 1413, R. S., and note thereto, concerning Civil Engineer Corps of the Navy.)

The chief clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Navy receives an annual salary of $3,000, this increased compensation being first provided for by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 992). Prior to that act his salary was $2,500 a year, although an Assistant Secretary of the Navy had been authorized, without interruption, since the act of July 11, 1890 (26 Stat., 254). Thus his salary was not reduced to $2,200 a year "when there is an Assistant Secretary of the Navy," as provided in this section.

The disbursing clerk in the Navy Department received an annual salary of $2,250 by the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 553) and subsequent acts, including the act of May 29, 1920 (41 Stat., 663). Specific provision for salary of a disbursing clerk in the Navy Department was omitted in the appropriation act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., 1282), the position of "disbursing officer," at $3,000 per annum having in the meantime been created from lump sum appropriations. (See estimates of appropriations, 1922, p. 102.) As to appointment and compensation of disbursing clerks in the several departments, see section 176, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

The chief clerks in the Bureaus of Yards and Docks, Construction and Repair, Engineering, Navigation, Ordnance, and Medicine and Surgery have received an annual salary of $2,550 since the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 768, 771).

The chief clerk in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts was designated as "civilian assistant" and his compensation increased to $2,500 by act of February 25, 1903 (32 Stat., 890).

An "appointment clerk," at $1,800 per annum, was provided for in the office of the Secretary, Navy Department, by act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat., 164), which was amended by act of June 8, 1896 (29 Stat., 285), providing for a "clerk in charge of civil employments and labor regulations at navy yards, who shall also perform the duties of appointment clerk of the Navy Department," at $2,250 per annum. This latter provision was repeated, with an immaterial modification in language, in the acts of February 19, 1897, and March 15, 1898, but has since been omitted and is not now in force. An "appointment clerk," at $2,000 per annum was appropriated for by act of May 10, 1916 (39 Stat., 94), and following years, until the act of March 1, 1919, (40 Stat., 1241), which increased the salary of the appointment clerk to $2,250.

The following additional positions are specifically authorized in the Navy Department, at annual salaries in excess of $1,800, by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., 1282):

Office of the Secretary: Private secretary to Secretary, $2,500; clerk to Secretary, $2,250; private secretary to Assistant Secretary, $2,400; clerk to Assistant Secretary, $2,000; printing clerk, $2,000.

Office of Solicitor: Solicitor, $4,000; law clerks, one at $2,500, one at $2,400, one at $2,250, and two at $2,000 each.

Office of Naval Records and Library: Chief clerk, $2,000.

Office of Judge Advocate General: Attorneys, two at $2,500 each; chief law clerk, $2,250; law clerks, one at $2,200 and one at $2,000.

Office of Chief of Naval Operations: Chief clerk, $2,250.

Office of Director of Naval Communications, one at $4,000, two at $3,000 each, one at $2,500, and three at $1,900 each.

Bureau of Navigation: Clerks, one at $2,200, two at $2,000 each.

Hydrographic Office: Hydrographic engineer, $3,000; assistants, one at $2,200 and one at $2,000; chief engraver, $2,000.

Naval Observatory: Astronomers, one at $3,200 and one at $2,800; assistant astronomers, one at $2,400 and one at $2,000.

Nautical Almanac Office: Assistants in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, one at $2,500 and one at $2,000.

Bureau of Construction and Repair: Chief of section, $2,000.

Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: Principal clerk, $2,250; two chief bookkeepers, at $2,000 each.

The minor positions specifically authorized in the various bureaus and offices of the Navy Department are set forth in detail in the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act. The same act, in addition, authorizes the employment of draftsmen and other technical services in the Bureaus of Engineering, Construction and Repair, Ordnance, and Yards and Docks, to be paid for from the annual appropriations made by the naval appropriation act for "Engineering," "Construction and repair," "Ordnance and ordnance stores," and various appropriations and allotments under the Bureau of Yards and Docks. The number of employees so authorized from "lump-sum" appropriations is not specified, but it is provided that the rates of compensation to be paid such employees in the Bureaus of Engineering, Construction and Repair, and Ordnance shall not exceed those paid under similar authorization prior to January 1, 1920. The total amounts to be paid for this purpose are fixed at a definite sum each year, the amounts authorized for the fiscal year 1922 by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., 1285, 1286), being as follows: Bureau of Engineering, $190,000; Bureau of Construction and Repair, $275,000; Bureau of Ordnance, $70,000; Bureau of Yards and Docks, $200,000. A statement of the persons employed from such lump-sum appropriations, their duties, and the compensation paid to each is required by a provision contained in the authorization therefor to "be made to Congress each year in the annual estimates." (See also Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558.)

Additional civil force in the Navy Department "on account of the existing emergency," was authorized in various appropriation acts, commencing with the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat., 202).

Lump-sum appropriations are not available for payment of personal services at a rate of compensation in excess of that paid for the same or similar services during the preceding fiscal year; and no person employed at a specific salary can be transferred and paid from a lump-sum appropriation a rate of compensation greater than such specific salary. These restrictions are not applicable to mechanics, artisans, their helpers and assistants, laborers, or any other employees whose duties are of similar character and required in carrying on the various manufacturing or constructing operations of the Government. (Act Aug. 26, 1912, sec. 7, 37 Stat., 626, amended by act Mar. 4, 1913, sec. 4, 37 Stat., 790; see 20 Comp. Dec., 128; 20 Comp. Dec., 131; 20 Comp. Dec., 10; 19 Comp. Dec., 248. See also acts Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 383 and Mar. 28, 1918, 40 Stat., 498.)

Restrictions on employment of clerical services.—It is provided in the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act that "no part of any appropriations made for the naval service shall be expended for any of the purposes, including freight, herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, except for personal services in certain bureaus, as herein expressly authorized" (namely, the services of draftsmen and other technical services, as above mentioned, in the Bureaus of Engineering, Construction and Repair, Ordnance, and Yards and Docks). See, for example, act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., 1287).

It is also provided by the annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act that personal services or other expenditures are not to be authorized under the Hydrographic Office in the District of Columbia, except as appropriated for under the Navy Department in that act, or under appropriations for the public printing and binding. See, for example, act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., 1285).

It is also provided by the annual naval appropriation act "that no part of any sum appropriated by this act shall be used for any expense of the Navy Department at Washington, District of Columbia, unless specific authority is given by law for such expenditure." See, for example, act of June 4, 1920 (40 Stat., 833).

It is not lawful for the Secretary of the Navy to employ in the Navy Department at Washington, D. C., and pay out of appropriations for new ships, any civilian expert aids, additional draftsmen, writers, copyists, and model makers, except as specifically authorized. (Act Mar. 18, 1904, sec. 1, 33 Stat., 117.)

Civil employees paid from appropriations for the Naval Establishment or other branch of the public service outside of the District of Columbia, can not be detailed for duty in any division of any executive department in the District of Columbia. (Act June 22, 1906, sec. 6, 34 Stat., 449; similar provision is contained in act Aug. 5, 1882, sec. 4, 22 Stat., 255.) [But Washington may be chosen as a local headquarters by the "field force" of an executive department, provided such force is not used to augment the "departmental establishment" by engaging in departmental activities (21 Comp. Dec., 709).]

Persons in the classified service at Washington, District of Columbia (except the Department of Justice in certain cases), shall not be detailed for service outside of the District of Columbia, except for or in connection with work pertaining directly to the service at the seat of government of the Department or other Government establishment from which the detail is made. (Act Mar. 3, 1917, 39 Stat., 1121, repeated in legislative, executive and judicial appropriation acts for subsequent years.)

As to detail of enlisted men for duty in an executive department, see statutes cited above under "Restrictions on employment of clerical services," and see act of June 19, 1878, (20 Stat., 196), authorizing the employment of "not exceeding 10 enlisted men" in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, War Department. See also act of June 3, 1916 (39 Stat., 188, sec. 35), regarding employment of enlisted men in civil occupations.

Officers of the Navy may be detailed for duty in the Navy Department, but where such an officer on the active list is appointed to the office of draftsman in the Hydrographic Office he is not entitled to both salaries, although he holds both offices. In such case he is entitled to the larger salary when different salaries are attached to the two offices. (Winchell v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 30; 5 Comp. Dec., 885. See note to sec. 431 R. S.; and see 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 503; 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.)

Not exceeding four naval officers may be detailed as necessary to the Hydrographic Office by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1172. See note to sec. 431, R. S.)

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office". (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708.)

An officer on the retired list of the Navy may take the civil-service examination, and his status on the retired list does not preclude him from accepting a clerical position, assuming the compensation of such position to be less than $2,500 per annum, subject to possible recall to active duty. (File 4901-1904; 5650-1900; 4642-1903.)

A retired officer of the Navy whose retired pay amounts to $2,500 per annum is within the prohibition of section 2 of the act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 205), and is ineligible to hold office as clerk of class 3 under the Civil Service Commission. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 503.)

A retired officer can not hold an office in the diplomatic or consular service. (Sec. 1440, R. S.; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 306; Badeau v. U. S., 130 U. S., 439.)

The employment of retired enlisted men of the Navy in civil positions under the United States is not contrary to any Federal law or Navy regulation. (File 7657-123, Dec. 29, 1911; file 7657-57.)

See "Provisions applicable to all the executive departments," Title IV, sections 158-198, Revised Statutes, and particularly sections 166-170 relating to appointment, compensation, and distribution of clerks.

Civilian employees at navy yards.—For laws applicable to, see sections 1542 to 1546, Revised Statutes.

Appointments made by Secretary of the Navy.—"No person shall be employed at a per diem, monthly, or annual compensation and paid from the appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government to do any kind of clerical, drafting, technical, messengers' or laborers' work, except after a written appointment by the Secretary of the Navy or with his approval in writing. Nor shall a civilian be employed to perform work of any character in the bureaus and offices of the department except by written authority of the Secretary of the Navy." (Naval Instructions, 1913, art. 52.)

Appointments to office under the United States may be made only by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the President alone, the courts of law, or the heads of departments. (See Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2, and note thereto.)

Congress has vested in the heads of departments the appointment of clerks, laborers, and other employees in their departments, and this power can not be delegated. (See sec. 169, R. S., and note thereto.)

Oath of office.—The oath to be taken by all persons elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit in the civil, military, or naval service, except the President, is that prescribed by section 1757, Revised Statutes. (See act May 13, 1884, sec. 2, 23 Stat., 22.) [A special oath of office is required to be taken by all persons employed in the postal service, by sections 391 and 392, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of Mar. 5, 1874 (18 Stat., 19).]

The oath of office may be taken before any officer who is authorized either by the laws of the United States or by local laws to administer oaths (sec. 1758, R. S.). The chief clerks of the executive departments, and of the bureaus and offices thereof in Washington, D. C., are required, on application, to administer oaths to employees on appointment and promotion without charging therefor (act Aug. 29, 1890, 26 Stat., 371); and no officer or employee of any executive department who is also a notary public or otherwise authorized to administer oaths shall charge or accept any fee for administering the oath of office to employees in the same department on appointment or promotion (same act).

The oaths of office taken by persons appointed to office in any department shall be preserved among the files of such department (sec. 1759, R. S.).

As to persons authorized by law to administer oaths in connection with naval matters, see note to section 183, Revised Statutes.

Judicial decisions concerning appointment and removal of employees.—"The power to appoint carries the power to dismiss. The authorities on this proposition are too numerous to cite. * * * The Government does not contract to keep its employees in its service if their services are not needed, and the right of the appointing power to dismiss at discretion exists with no general supervising power in the courts to review the exercise of such authority. * * * This power of appointment and removal is discretionary in character, and without specific authority such power cannot be delegated. * * * The interposition of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of an executive department is not within the power of the court." (Wheelock v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 1.)

A court of equity has no jurisdiction over the appointment and removal of public officers. The jurisdiction to determine the title to a public office belongs exclusively to the courts of law and is exercised either by certiorari, error, or appeal, or by mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, or information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto, according to the circumstances of the case and the mode of procedure established by common law or by statute. (White v. Berry, 171 U. S., 366; see also Sawyer's case, 124 U. S., 200; Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. Rep., 551; Couper v. Smyth, 84 Fed. Rep., 757; Page v. Moffett, 85 Fed. Rep., 38; Carr v. Gordon, 82 Fed. Rep., 373, 379; Taylor v. Kercheval, 82 Fed. Rep., 497, 499.)

A court of equity will not by injunction restrain an executive officer from making a wrongful removal of a subordinate appointee nor restrain the appointment of another. (Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. Rep., 551.)

The appointment to an official position in the Government, even if it be simply a clerical position, is not a mere ministerial act, but one involving the exercise of judgment. The appointing power must determine the fitness of the applicant; whether or not he is the proper one to discharge the duties of the position. Therefore it is one of those acts over which the courts have no general supervising power. In the absence of specific provision to the contrary, the power of removal from office is incident to the power of appointment. * * * Unless therefore there be some specific provision to the contrary, the action of the Secretary of the Interior in removing the petitioner from office on account of inefficiency is beyond review in the courts, either by mandamus to reinstate him or by compelling payment of salary as though he had not been removed. (Keim v. U. S., 177 U. S., 290.)

The courts have no power, by mandamus or otherwise, to review the action of the head of an executive department of the Government in removing a clerk from office, on the ground that the removal was not in accordance with civil-service rules requiring notice to be given and an opportunity to reply to charges, where the charge is that the clerk wrote and caused to be published a newspaper article derogatory to the President. (U. S. v. Taft, 24 App. D. C., 95.)

The power of appointment to the classified civil service of the United States carries with it the power of removal, which is unrestricted except as controlled by the civil-service act of January 16, 1883 (22 Stat., 403), which does not limit the power of removal except for the single cause of failure to contribute money or services to a political party. (U. S. v. Taft, 24 App. D. C., 95.—See other statutes relating to removal, noted below.)

Honorably discharged soldiers or sailors.—Section 1754, Revised Statutes, gives preference for appointment to persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service. The act of August 15, 1876 (19 Stat., 169, sec. 3), provides for preference in retention, when force is reduced, of "those persons who may be equally qualified who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors." The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of August 23, 1912, section 4 (37 Stat., 413), provides for a system of efficiency ratings to be established by the Civil Service Commission, and that no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record is rated good is to be discharged or dropped, or reduced in rank or salary in the event of reductions being made. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat., 1007), provides for the establishment of a Division of Efficiency for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act of 1912. The Army appropriation act of May 12, 1917 (40 Stat., 72), provides that employees of the Government who are members of the Officers' Reserve Corps shall, when relieved from duty, be restored to the positions held by them when ordered to duty.

The act of March 3, 1919, section 6 (40 Stat., 1293) provides that "hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive departments and in independent governmental establishments, preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such, if they are qualified to hold such positions." The act of March 1, 1919 (40 Stat., 1224) provides that "the period of time during which soldiers, sailors, and marines, both enlisted and drafted men, who prior to entering the service of their country, had a civil service status, and whose names appear upon the eligible list of the Civil Service Commission, shall not be counted against them in the determination of their eligibility for appointment under the law, rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission now in effect, and at the time of demobilization their civil-service status shall be the same as when they entered the service."

The act of February 25, 1919 (40 Stat., 1164), provided that "all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions, if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position."

The act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 142), provided that "all former Government employees who have entered the military or naval service of the United States in the war with the German Government shall be reinstated on application to their former positions if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position."

No thoughtful person questions the obligations which the Nation is under to those who have done faithful service in its Army or Navy. Congress has generously provided for the discharge of those obligations in a system of pensions more munificent than has ever before been known in the history of the world. But it would be an insult to the intelligence of Congress to suppose that it contemplated any degradation of the civil service by the appointment to or continuance in office of incompetent or inefficient clerks, simply because they had been honorably discharged from the military or naval service. (Keim v. U. S., 177 U. S., 295.)

The act of 1876 provides for the retention of veterans who may be "equally qualified." Under this law a court could not enter an executive department, examine the acts of its head, inquire into the exercise of his discretion, and investigate as to causes of its exercise. (Keim v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 174; 177 U. S., 290.) The power of removal is a purely executive power, which is not intrusted to the judicial branch of the Government (same case).

The enactment of 1876 is not mandatory, and the courts can not review the action of the executive officers when they reduce the force of a department. The administrative officers charged with the authority must investigate and settle for themselves the matter of actual work done by various employees, by a comparison of one with another as to competency and attention to duty. (Wheelock v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 1, citing Keim v. U. S., above; see also Medrick v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 469.)

Under former laws the courts had no power to review the action of the head of a department in discharging an employee for inefficiency. Whether that rule is changed by the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat., 413), not decided, as that act has not been made effective by the action of the Civil Service Commission as therein provided. (Persing v. Daniels, 43 App. D. C., 470. [In this connection, see act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1007), noted above.]

Civil-service law and regulations.—The civil-service law (act Jan. 16, 1883, 22 Stat., 403) was intended to provide a body of civil officers selected solely for competency and fitness, protect them against accountability to any political party, and prevent their discharge, promotion, or degradation for giving or withholding political contributions; but it did not deprive the appointing power of any existing rights to remove or change in rank for other reasons. (Carr v. Gordon, 82 Fed. Rep., 373.)

An Executive order dated July 27, 1897, contained the following: "No removal shall be made from any position subject to competitive examination except for just cause and upon written charges filed with the head of the department or other appointing officer, and of which the accused shall have full notice and an opportunity to make defense." [Similar provisions since embodied in act of Aug. 24, 1912, section 6, 37 Stat., 555.] Notwithstanding this order an employee was removed by the Commissioner of Pensions without written charges filed against him and without notice or opportunity to make defense, but in consequence of the reduction of the clerical force required by law. Held that in legal contemplation the head of a department is an arm of the Executive, and the Pension Office is a branch of the Interior Department; an order sent out in the regular course of business from the appropriate executive department is the legal equivalent of the President's own order. The order which discontinued plaintiff's services was special in character and superseded the general order for the purposes of this case. When the head of the Pension Office exercises discretion as to capacity between clerks in his office, the exercise of his discretion can not be reviewed in the courts. (Medrick v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 469.)

The protection of the President's order of July 27, 1897, against removals from the civil service except upon written charges with opportunity for defense extends to an employee in the office of the United States Surveyor General in the State of Idaho. (U. S. v. Wickersham, 201 U. S., 390.)

The order of the President of July 27, 1897, prohibiting removals from positions subject to competitive examination except upon written charges and notice, is an administrative order regulating the conduct of the President's subordinates; but it has not the force of law and confers upon an incumbent no right to hold indefinitely, and no right of which a court of equity can take cognizance. (Carr v. Gordon, 82 Fed. Rep., 373.)

Neither Revised Statutes, section 1753, nor the civil-service act of January 16, 1883, puts any restrictions upon the power of removal from appointive offices, except for refusal to contribute to political funds or neglect to render political services; hence presidential rule 11, relating to the civil service and providing, as amended July 27, 1897, that no removal shall be made without giving the accused notice and an opportunity to make defense, has not such authority as law as confers upon the holder of an office a vested right thereto, with the right to invoke the equitable power of the courts to restrain his removal for violation of such rule. (Page v. Moffett, 85 Fed. Rep., 38.)

The civil-service law does not prohibit removal or discharge except for giving, withholding, or neglecting to make contributions of money for political purposes. (Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. Rep., 551.)

Removal of employee on probation.—Neither the statutes nor the rules promulgated cast upon the Government the obligation of employing men on probation or in the permanent service whose services are not needed; and a probationer has no right to be retained for the full period of six months if his services are not needed. (Brown v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 255.)

In the absence of a statute or express contract binding the Government to employ a person for a definite period, his employment comes under the general rule of master and servant, that a person who is not hired for a specified time may be discharged when his services are no longer needed. (Brown v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 255.)

The civil-service laws and rules were enacted and promulgated to prevent the discharge of employees whose services are needed but who may be discharged because of other considerations than the welfare of the public service. (Brown v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 255.)

Status of employee who refuses to resign.—Where the head of a department makes a request for a resignation and it is not handed in, the officer forfeits no right either because of his failure to resign or because requested to do so. (Knight v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cls., 129.)

Neglect of duty as ground for removal.—“A neglected duty often works as much against the interests of the Government as a duty wrongfully performed, and the Government has a right to demand and expect of its employees not merely competency but fidelity and attention to the duties of their positions.” (Keim v. U. S., 177 U. S., 295.)

Suspension of employees.—The power to suspend an officer without compensation is incidental to the power to appoint and discharge. The exercise of this power enables the head of a department to retain an officer who otherwise would have to be discharged. (Wertz v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cls., 397; 11 Comp. Dec., 570; see also file 2704-04; file 103-98.)

An order directing an officer appointed by the President to proceed to his home, notifying him that his daily pay will cease from and after the date of his arrival, does not discharge him from service. His status is that of an officer awaiting employment, and not entitled to his per diem compensation until employed. (Wertz v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cls., 397.)

An employee can not recover compensation from the time the appointing power furloughs him, if the furlough be without pay, to the time the employee is restored to duty. There is nothing to prevent the head of a department from putting an employee on furlough without pay at any time when the exigencies of the service require it. (Wheelock v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 1, citing Stillings v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 61, and U. S. v. Murray, 100 U. S., 536.)

The head of a department may put an employee on furlough without pay at any time if the exigencies of the service require it. He may be dismissed absolutely, and it is difficult to see why, if this can be done, he may not be furloughed without pay, which is the effect of a partial dismissal. (U. S. v. Murray, 100 U. S., 536; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 560.)

The head of a department is authorized to suspend an employee from duty without pay, pending the investigation of charges against him, whether said employee is paid from lump-sum appropriations or is specifically appropriated for by law. (11 Comp. Dec., 560; 21 Comp. Dec., 478; see also 10 Comp. Dec., 361, 11 Comp. Dec., 665, 20 Comp. Dec., 505; file 6696-212:4.)

Where the suspension of an employee from duty is clearly wrongful, he is entitled to recover salary for the time of the suspension. (Lellmann's case, 37 Ct. Cls., 128; Wickersham's case, 201 U. S., 390, affirming 39 Ct. Cls., 558; see also Medrick v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 479.) But where there was probable cause for the suspension, the fact that the employee is restored to duty because on investigation the evidence is found insufficient to support the charges does not entitle him to recover pay for the period of the suspension. (11 Comp. Dec., 560; 11 Comp. Dec., 661; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 776.)

Where a clerk in the classified service was suspended and charges were preferred against him by a surveyor general, and the commissioner investigated the charges and ordered that the suspension be permanent, the action of the commissioner was in legal effect a dismissal and can not be reviewed by the judiciary. (Lellmann v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 128.)

Investigation of charges.—The head of any department is authorized to detail any officer or clerk in his department to investigate any irregularity or misconduct of any officer or agent of the United States under his jurisdiction; and such officer or clerk so detailed, or any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps detailed to conduct an investigation, is authorized to administer oaths to witnesses. (See sec. 183, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 13, 1911, 36 Stat. 898.)

Perjury committed by a witness in such investigation is punishable by fine and imprisonment. (Sec. 125, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat 1111.)

In the Navy Department investigations of employees have been conducted under section 183, Revised Statutes, as amended (see file 26263); while investigations of misconduct by employees at naval stations have been conducted by court of inquiry authorized by section 1624, Revised Statutes, articles 56-60 (see file 6692-212:3) or by a naval board of investigation (see file 26283-166; Ct. Inq. No. 6171).

No examination of witnesses, nor any trial or hearing is required by law prior to removal of an employee, except in the discretion of the officer making the removal (act Aug. 24, 1912, sec. 6, 37 Stat., 555), but the person accused is entitled to notice and copy of the charges, with reasonable time to answer same prior to his removal. (Same act.)

Political contributions.—A statute (act Aug. 15, 1876, 19 Stat., 169) prohibiting executive officers or employees of the United States from giving to or receiving from each other contributions for political purposes, was designed to promote efficiency and integrity in the discharge of official duties and is constitutional. (Ex parte Curtis, 106 U. S., 371; affirming U. S. v. Curtis, 12 Fed. Rep., 824.)

Increases in pay not promotion to new office.—Where a clerk takes but one oath of office, receives but one letter of appointment, and during his whole period of service acts as a clerk in the same office, promotions, so-called, are but increases in pay and in no sense a promotion to a different office. (Butler v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 39.)

A new appointment is not made necessary merely by reason of an increase in the salary of an office. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 116, citing 1 Comp. Dec., 267, 1 Comp. Dec., 313, 3 Comp. Dec., 336.)

Where a civilian dentist employed at the Naval Academy was by act of Congress given "the same official status, pay, and allowances" as an officer of the Army serving as dental surgeon at the Military Academy, it was held that the law was self-operative, and did not require any action by the appointing power or the Navy Department to give it effect; that it did not create a new office and accordingly that no appointment or commission was necessary or could properly be issued to the dentist in question under its provisions. (File 13707-25, Oct. 24, 1915, construing proviso in act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat. 345. The following year Congress specifically provided for the appointment of this civilian dentist as "a dental surgeon in the Navy," (act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat. 891), and a new appointment was issued to him accordingly.)

Assignment of employees to duty.—A court of equity ought not to control the discretion which, under existing statutes, the executive department has in all such matters as the assignment and detachment of employees from duty. Interference by the judicial department in such cases would lead to the utmost confusion in the management of executive affairs. (White v. Berry, 171 U. S., 366.)

Employees doing duty at their homes.—Where a female clerk in an executive department, in consideration of the sickness of her husband, is excused from attendance and is to have her work sent to her residence, if it be not sent she is bound to report to the department; if she neglects to report, her tenure can not be deemed to extend beyond the current month. (Palmer v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 230.)

Extra pay on discharge.—Clerks discharged without fault on their part, by reason of reductions in force made necessary at the close of a fiscal year, by special authority of Congress have been allowed two months' pay as a gratuity on discharge. (See joint resolution, June 23, 1874, 18 Stat., pt. 3, p. 289; U. S. v. Murray, 100 U. S., 536; Schaeffer v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cls., 730.)

Employees incapacitated for duty.—The annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act contains the following provision: "That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons incapacitated otherwise than temporarily for performing such service." (See, for example, act Mar. 3, 1917, sec. 3, 39 Stat., 1121.) However, compensation may be paid in certain cases where employees are injured in course of employment. (Act Sept. 7, 1916, 39 Stat., 742.)

As to distribution of clerks, temporary details, transfers between departments, etc., see sections 166 and 169, Revised Statutes, and references thereunder.

Under the provisions of the act of March 4, 1915 (33 Stat., 1084), when one bureau of the War or Navy Departments performs any service for another bureau of such departments, the head of the department for which the service is to be performed may cause its funds to be transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the procuring department for direct expenditure by it. The funds so transferred are to be expended and accounted for under the rules and regulations of the department to which they are advanced. (21 Comp. Dec. 819; see also 22 Comp. Dec. 145, and sec. 3678, R. S.)

Voluntary services shall not be accepted, nor personal service employed in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving loss of life or destruction of property. (Act May 1, 1884, 23 Stat., 17; act Mar. 3, 1905, 33 Stat., 1257; and act Feb. 27, 1906, 34 Stat., 49; see sec. 3679, R. S.)

Use of contingent and miscellaneous appropriations for clerical compensation is restricted by section 3682, Revised Statutes, and act of August 5, 1882, section 4 (22 Stat., 255).

During the sessions of Congress an additional clerk can not be employed in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, as allowed by section 171, Revised Statutes, as that section is repealed by later laws prohibiting employment of clerical services in excess of annual appropriations therefor. Additional clerk may be detailed to office of Judge Advocate General, if necessary, from some other office or bureau of the Navy Department in accordance with section 166, Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., Oct. 28, 1915, file 26254-1906.)

Statutes authorizing assistant chiefs and chief clerks in the bureaus of the Navy Department are to be read in connection with section 178, Revised Statutes, as explaining who are authorized to act as chief of bureau during the latter's absence. Section 178 applies only to "assistants" to chiefs of bureaus who are specifically provided for by statute. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 503.)

Recording clocks not to be used in recording time of clerks or other employees in any of the executive departments at Washington. (Act Feb. 24, 1899, 30 Stat., 864.)

No part of the appropriations for the naval service shall be available for salary of any person making, with a stop watch or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any employee of the United States Government or of the movements of any such employee; nor for use as premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions of improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant. (See act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1195.)

Sec. 417. [Duties of the Secretary of the Navy.] The Secretary of the Navy shall execute such orders as he shall receive from the President relative to the procurement of naval stores and materials, and the construction, armament, equipment, and employment of vessels of war, as well as all other matters connected with the naval establishment. [See title Public contracts. Also secs. 3660-3667, 3669.]—(30 Apr., 1798, c. 35, s. 1, v. 1, p. 353.)

- Annual reports required to be made to Congress by Secretary of the Navy—see section 429, Revised Statutes.
- Appointment of employees in the Navy Department to be made by the Secretary of the Navy—see section 169, Revised Statutes.
- Appropriations for Navy Department controlled and expended by direction of the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 3676, R. S.)
- Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, Secretary of the Navy to serve on commission to make annual recommendations as to memorials, entombments, etc., in. (Act Mar. 4, 1921, 41 Stat., 1440.)
- Business of Navy Department to be distributed by Secretary of the Navy between the bureaus and offices therein. (Secs. 161 and 419, R. S.)
- Coast Guard to be under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy in time of war or when the President may direct. (Act Jan. 28, 1915, 38 Stat., 800.)
- Congressional Record, daily examination of, to be required by the Secretary of the Navy in his department. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 90, 28 Stat., 623.)
- Contracts and purchases of supplies to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 3714, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 27, 1877, sec. 1, 19 Stat., 249; see also sec. 3747, R. S.; secs. 3718-3730, R. S.)
- Courts-martial and courts of inquiry may be convened by the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 38, as amended by act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 10, 35 Stat., 621; and sec. 1624, R. S., art. 55.)
- Courts-martial proceedings may be set aside, or their sentences remitted or mitigated by the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1624, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat. 621.)
- Custody of property appertaining to the Navy Department to be in the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 418, R. S.)
- Desertion charge entered against enlisted men during Civil War may be removed by Secretary of the Navy. (Act Aug. 14, 1888, 25 Stat., 412, as amended by act May 24, 1900, 31 Stat., 183.)
- Discharge certificates in true names to be issued by Secretary of the Navy, in certain cases to persons who served in Navy under assumed names. (Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 324.)
- Duplicate discharge certificates may be issued by Secretary of Navy to officers and men in certain cases in lieu of lost discharges. (Act Feb. 7, 1890, 26 Stat., 6.)
- Duties of bureaus in the Navy Department to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 420, R. S.)
- Duties of Chief of Naval Operations to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 929.)
- Duties of Judge Advocate General to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164, as amended by act June 5, 1896, 29 Stat., 251.)
- Estimates to be submitted annually to Congress by Secretary of the Navy through the Secretary of the Treasury. (Secs. 3660, 3669, R. S.; see references under sec. 430, R. S.)
- Insane persons belonging to the Navy or Marine Corps to be placed in hospitals for the insane upon order of the Secretary of the Navy. (Secs. 1551 and 4843, R. S.; act Feb. 9, 1900, 31 Stat., 7.)
- Marine Corps, subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy except when detached by President for duty with the Army. (Sec. 1621, R. S.)
- Midshipmen may be appointed to Naval Academy by Secretary of the Navy without congressional nomination. (Acts June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 578; June 30, 1914, 38 Stat., 410; Feb. 15, 1916, 39 Stat., 9; Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 576; Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1182; Dec. 20, 1917, 40 Stat., 430.)
- Midshipmen may be dismissed by Secretary of Navy upon written approval of the President. (Act Apr. 9, 1906, sec. 1, 34 Stat., 104.)
- Midshipmen on graduation may be assigned by Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in Marine Corps or Staff Corps of the Navy. (Act July 9, 1913, 38 Stat., 103.)
- Navy-yard employees, number and compensation of clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force to be fixed by Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 754.)
- Ocean mail vessels to be constructed according to plans approved by Secretary of the Navy, with reference to their conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers; Postmaster General not to employ any vessel in ocean mail service which is not approved by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 3, 1891, sec. 4, 26 Stat., 831.)
- Officers may be furloughed by the Secretary of the Navy (sec. 1442, R. S.); may be assigned to duty on ocean mail vessels with furlough pay (act Mar. 3, 1891, sec. 7, 26 Stat. 832); may be employed on active duty after retirement (secs. 1462-1465, R. S.; acts Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329, and July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717); settlement of claims for traveling expenses under the control of the Secretary of the Navy (act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 774.)
- Official Register of the United States: Information for publication in, must be furnished biennially by the Secretary of the Navy to the Director of the Census. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 618, as amended by act June 7, 1906, 34 Stat., 219, and act Oct. 22, 1913, 38 Stat., 224.)

Opinion of the Attorney General may be obtained by the Secretary of the Navy upon questions of law pending in the Navy Department (secs. 356, 357, R. S.); decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury may be obtained by the Secretary of the Navy upon any question involving a payment to be made by or under the Secretary (act July 31, 1894, sec. 8, 28 Stat., 208); and a report by the Court of Claims of its findings of fact and conclusions of law may be obtained by the Secretary of the Navy for his guidance upon any claim or matter pending in the Navy Department which involves controverted questions of fact or law. (Judicial Code, act Mar. 3, 1911, secs 148-150, 36 Stat., 1137, 1138; Berger v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 243, 247.)

Regulations for the Navy Department and Naval Establishment are to be issued by the Secretary of the Navy. (Secs. 161 and 1547, R. S.; see also secs. 1548, 1549, 1620, 1621, and 1624, art. 34, R. S.; acts Feb. 9, 1889, 25 Stat., 658; May 22, 1896, 29 Stat., 133; May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128, amended Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329; May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 153; Feb. 16, 1909, secs. 5, 14, 35 Stat., 621, 622; Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 768; June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 619; Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 341; Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 909; Feb. 16, 1914, 38 Stat., 283; Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 930, 939, 941, 942, 943; etc.)

Requisitions on Treasury for moneys appropriated for the Navy, to be made by the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 3673, R. S.)

Requisitions on Treasury for advances to disbursing officers to be made by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act June 19, 1878, 20 Stat., 167.)

Smithsonian institution, Secretary of the Navy is member of. (Sec. 5579, R. S., as amended. See also note to sec. 415, R. S.)

State, War, and Navy Department Building to be under the care and supervision of a commission composed of Secretaries of State, War, and Navy. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 553.)

Superintendence of Navy hospitals (sec. 4807, R. S.) and of Naval Home (sec. 4811, R. S.) to be under the Secretary of the Navy.

Trustee of Navy Pension Fund, Secretary of the Navy to be. (Sec. 4750, R. S.)

Vessels to be named by Secretary of the Navy (secs. 1531-1533, R. S.; act May 4, 1898, 30 Stat., 390; act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 159); may be loaned by Secretary to nautical schools (act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1353). Naval equipment may be loaned to military schools. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1440, as amended by act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 620, and act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 613.)

Y. M. C. A. buildings in navy yards and stations may be furnished heat and light without charge, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1274.)

"The Secretary of the Navy represents the President, and exercises his power on the subjects confided to his department." (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92.)

As a general rule, no appeal lies to the President from the head of a department, whose acts are presumed to be the acts of the President himself. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 462.) However, in the naval service appeals may be taken to the President from the orders or decisions of the Secretary of the Navy. (Art. 5323, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

"The President acts and speaks through the heads of the departments, and the acts of the head of an executive department must be presumed to be by the direction of the President." (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, holding that the Secretary of the Navy acts for the President in appointing and dismissing midshipmen. But see act Apr. 9, 1906, sec. 1, 34 Stat. 104, providing for dismissal of midshipmen by the Secretary of the Navy "upon written approval of the President.")

The Secretary of the Navy's action in advancing money to contractors is the action of the President within the terms of the statute relating thereto. "In reference to this subject it may be said, with even more propriety than in Wilcox v. Jackson [13 Pet., 498, 513] that whatever the President is to do, he is to do through and by the Secretary. So far as the authority of the President was necessary, I must consider him as speaking and acting through the Secretary to whom the subject was committed by Congress. I must presume, in the absence of all evidence, that the advances made were with his approbation and under his direction within the meaning of the act of Congress." (U. S. v. Cutter, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14911.)

An order issued by the Secretary of the Navy is presumed to be issued with the approval of the President and meets the requirements of section 1547, Revised Statutes, although it does not bear the express approval of the President; and this applies even though the order may be in conflict with a prior regulation which was expressly approved by the President. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 211.)

The Secretary of the Navy may sign commissions issued to officers; but "it is proper" that the commission should declare the act to be an act of the President, performed by the head of the department as his representative. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 82. See also O'Shea v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 392; 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 292.)

The transfer of a part of the naval station in Porto Rico to the Government of Porto Rico in accordance with law may be made by the Secretary of the Navy, since in contemplation of law the acts of the heads of the executive departments are the acts of the President; but it would be preferable to have the formal transfer effected by Presidential proclamation. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 205.)

By the Constitution, the President is made Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. The Departments of War and of the Navy are the channels, through which his orders proceed to them, respectively, and the Secretaries of those departments are the organs by which he makes his will known to them. The orders issued by those officers are, in contemplation of law, not their orders, but the orders of the President of the United States. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 380; 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 357, 365.)

Where an appropriation was made "to be expended at the discretion of the President," it evinces the utmost confidence of Congress in the President to make proper distribution of the fund. The order of the Secretary of the Navy, in the administration of the appropriation, must be regarded as the order of the President, and was an exercise of the discretion vested in the President. (Hayden v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 39.)

A letter was addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to an officer of the Marine Corps, stating "you are hereby dismissed from the service from this date." At this time the power of summarily dismissing officers was possessed by the President. It was contended that "since the order in question simply purported to be the act of the Secretary, and did not purport to be the act of the President, or to have been issued in pursuance of any previous direction by him given, the presumption can not be indulged that the dismissal of Lieutenant McElrath was by order of the President." The court stated in its opinion: "These propositions open up a very broad field of inquiry as to what exceptions there are to the general rule that the direction of the President is to be presumed in all instructions and orders issuing from the proper department concerning executive business, notwithstanding they may contain no express statement of any direction from him, as to the matters to which such instructions or orders refer. There are undoubtedly official acts which the Constitution and laws require to be performed by the President personally, and the performance of which may not be delegated to heads of departments; or to other officers in the executive branch of the Government. It is equally true that as to the vast multiplicity of matters involved in the administration of the executive business of the Government, it is physically impossible for the President to give them his personal supervision. Of necessity he must, as to such matters, discharge his duty through the instrumentality or by the agency of others. Whether a particular act belongs to one or the other of these classes may sometimes be very difficult to determine, and we shall not attempt now to lay down any general rule upon the subject. Nor shall we extend this opinion by any consideration of the question whether the particular order signed by Secretary Welles should not be presumed to have been issued by direction of the President. The determination of that question is not essential to the disposition of this case, since if that order should, for the reasons urged by the claimant's counsel, be deemed a nullity, the nomination and confirmation subsequently of Lieutenant Haycock, followed by his commission as a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps in place of Lieutenant McElrath, as certainly operated under the law as it then was to remove the latter from the service as if he had been dismissed by direct order of the President under his own signature." (McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S., 426.)

For other decisions, see notes to Constitution, Article II, section 1, clause 1, and Article II, section 2, clause 1; and section 158, Revised Statutes. (See also Bishop v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 473; McCullum v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 101, and cases there cited; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 208 Fed. Rep., 469; De Arnaud v. Ainsworth, 24 App. D. C. 167, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 163; Hegler v. Faulkner, 153 U. S., 109, 117.)

Deliberate delays in performing duties.—An executive department has no right, at the request of a committee of Congress, to omit or delay the discharge of duties imposed upon it by law. When a right is created by law and a duty devolved upon an executive department under the same law, the enjoyment or enforcement of such right can not be suspended because of the possibility that the law may be changed. To deprive any person of a right which the law creates, at the request of anybody, would be a novel idea under a system of government which is supposed to be a government of laws and not of men. Such a result could not be attained by any action even of the whole House of Representatives, or of both branches of Congress, unless by a change in the law itself. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 113.)

Duties generally require judgment and discretion.—In general the official duties of the Secretary of the Navy, whether imposed by act of Congress or by resolution, are not mere ministerial duties. The head of an executive department of the Government in the administration of the various and important concerns of his office is continually required to exercise judgment and discretion. He must exercise his judgment in expounding the laws and resolutions of Congress under which he is from time to time required to act; if he doubts, he has a right to call on the Attorney General to assist him with his counsel; and it would be difficult to imagine why a legal adviser was provided by law for the heads of departments as well as for the President unless their duties were regarded as executive, in which judgment and discretion were to be exercised. (Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet., 497.)

Where the Secretary of the Navy is authorized by law to construct vessels in the most improved way, he is necessarily clothed with large discretion, both as to the materials and methods to be used. (Brooks v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 494.)

The Secretary of the Navy has authority to settle the amounts due under a contract for the building of a ship of war, and demands for extra work agreed upon, and expenses incurred because of the department's action of which the Government has received the benefit. (Myerle v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cls., 105.)

When the law constitutes the Secretary of the Navy, together with the heads of certain other departments, a board of commissioners of a fund for the benefit of the Navy, and gives some general directions in what way the fund is to be employed, but the mode and manner of transacting their business is not in any way prescribed, it rests in the discretion of the board whether or not its proceedings shall be in writing. It is fit and proper that important transactions should be reduced to writing, but the law imposes no such indispensable duty. (U. S. v. Fillebrown, 7 Pet., 28, concerning "commissioners of navy hospitals," which existed under laws not now in force.)

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to appoint a firm in London to act as his agent in paying drafts drawn by naval officers, and he may, when necessary, exact and receive all such securities as he can obtain to protect his department against loss by reason of the apprehended insolvency of such firm. (Weetjen v. St. Paul & P. R. Co., 4 Hun. (N. Y.), 529. But see sec. 1550, R. S., providing that "no person shall be employed or continued abroad to receive and pay money for the use of the naval service on foreign stations, whether under contract or otherwise, who has not been, or shall not be, appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.")

The head of a department of the Federal Government is authorized, in the administration of the duties of his office, to employ agents and to determine when an exigency arises demanding their employment. Section 3614, Revised Statutes, recognizes this right. (U. S. v. Potter, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16076; compare Weeks v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 124.)

Jurisdiction of courts over business of department.—The court can not entertain an appeal from the decision of the Secretary of the Navy nor revise his judgment in any case where the law authorized him to exercise his discretion or judgment; nor can it by mandamus control his judgment or discretion in the matters committed to his care in the ordinary discharge of his official duties. The interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the executive departments of the Government would be productive of nothing but mischief, and this power was never intended to be given to them. (Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet., 497; see also U. S. ex rel. Dunlap v. Black, 128 U. S., 40; U. S. ex rel. Redfield v. Windom, 137 U. S., 636; Boynton v. Blaine, 139 U. S., 306; U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S., 378; Keim v. U. S., 177 U. S., 290; Ness v. Fisher, 223 U. S., 683; Ray v. Garrison, 42 App. D. C. 34; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 31, 32.)

Where the administration of a statute rests within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, the exercise of his discretion is not subject to review by the courts or by the accounting officers. (Dyer v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 337.)

The Secretary of the Navy can not be compelled by mandamus to accept the highest bid for a naval vessel offered for sale. He has discretionary power under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. 599), to reject any bid, and unless he decides to accept it, there has been no sale. "It is reasonably practicable for Congress to provide on broad lines only for the control and disposition of vessels belonging to the United States, and wide discretion in respect of the many details thereof has necessarily been committed to the discretion of the executive department." (Goldberg v. Meyer, 37 App. D. C., 282; affirmed Goldberg v. Daniels, 231 U. S., 218.)

The Secretary of the Navy can not be compelled, by writ of mandamus, to record the name of a person upon the register of retired officers of the Navy as a paymaster's clerk where the court is of the opinion that the petitioner was not a paymaster's clerk within the meaning of the law. "He was no more an officer of the Navy than any one of the many employees of the Navy Department at Washington. We rule, therefore, that he never possessed any right to retirement." (U. S. ex rel Foreman v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 472; 227 U. S., 452.)

Where an officer of the Navy has been retired by order of the President with the rank of captain, the Secretary of the Navy can not be compelled, by writ of mandamus, to place his name upon the retired list with the rank of rear admiral. (U. S. ex rel Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13.)

The courts will not by mandamus compel the Secretary of War to change the position of an officer's name in the Army Register, even though it be conceded that an error exists therein. When an officer claims that, by reason of the erroneous position in which his name appears in the Army Register, he is deprived of a rank or position that might be of benefit to him in a future claim to promotion to the rank of captain, nevertheless he is not deprived of any right that he can appeal to a court of justice to enforce. His rank as shown by the official Army Register is conclusive of no such right of promotion. "Promotion in a certain sense is a new appointment, and to the position of captain can only be effected by the nomination of the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The mere entry, therefore, in the official Army Register of the name and rank of the appellant would not operate to entitle him to, or to control, such promotion. That must rest primarily upon the judgment and discretion of the President." (U. S. ex rel. Edwards v. Root, 24 App. D. C., 419, 431; file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

While the writ of mandamus may now be regarded as having become a writ of right, there is yet a sound judicial discretion reposing in the courts, even though the petitioner for it may be technically entitled to it, to refuse to grant it when its issuance would not promote the substantial ends of justice, or when it would be without beneficial results to the relator or petitioner. (Dancy v. Clark, 24 App. D. C., 487; see file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

A mere abstract right unattended by any substantial benefit to the relator will not be enforced by mandamus; the writ will issue to enforce only a right the denial of which affects the party's pecuniary interest, and the writ must be denied where the value of the thing in demand is insignificant and no substantial interest is involved. (See file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

Where the petition for a writ of mandamus is merely an attempt to obtain a decision of the court with a view to using such decision in furtherance of claims undoubtedly to be presented by petitioner later, it should not be granted. (See file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.) "The grant of the writ in this instance in the circumstances in which we find the case can have but one effect; that is, to encourage * * * in future petty litigation for the fees and emoluments of the office. The writ of mandamus should not be used for such purpose." (State v. Finley, 74 Mo. App. 213, 216; see file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911.)

"The principle that there can be no interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the executive departments is too well established for the court to group the authorities." (Medrick v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 469, 481.)

The courts will hesitate before requiring the executive heads of the departments of the Government to abandon their construction of departmental regulations, and their administrative action thereunder. (Hitchcock v. U. S., 22 App. D. C., 275.)

The national courts can not rightfully interfere with executive action in any case where an executive officer is authorized to exercise judgment or discretion in the performance of an official act. (Taylor v. Kercheval, 82 Fed. Rep., 497.)

The courts can not properly interfere with executive action, either by mandamus or injunction, in a matter in which the executive officer is authorized to exercise his judgment or discretion. (Dudley v. James, 83 Fed. Rep., 345.)

The courts have no power by mandamus to compel an executive officer to perform an act which is discretionary with him. (U. S. v. Leamen, 17 How., 225; Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall., 347; Cox v. U. S., 9 Wall., 298; U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S., 40; U. S. v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S., 80, affirming 26 App. D. C., 290.)

The courts of the United States have no authority to enjoin the officers of the Government against performing any act not merely ministerial, but involving the exercise of discretion. (McElrath v. McIntosh, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8781; Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall., 347; Maese v. Hermann, 17 App. D. C., 52, affirming 183 U. S., 572; Cummins Co. v. Burleson, 40 App. D. C., 500; Louisiana v. McAdoo, 234 U. S., 627; see also, to same effect, Enterprise Sav. Assn. v. Zumstein, 67 Fed. Rep., 1000; Walker v. Smith, 21 How., 579; Litchfield v. Register, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8388, affirming Litchfield v. Richards, 9 Wall., 575; Koehler v. Barin, 25 Fed. Rep., 161; Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 34 Fed. Rep., 835; Lane v. Anderson, 67 Fed. Rep., 563; Chapman v. Keindel, 46 Fed. Rep., 99.)

Where the head of a department in construing a statute has placed a construction thereon which is a possible one, and has acted accordingly, his action will not be restrained by injunction. (O'Brien v. Lane, 40 App. D. C., 493.)

Where an act of Congress, providing for an increase and reorganization of the Army, imposed upon the President and Secretary of War many and complicated duties in carrying out its purpose, it would require a very plain and unmistakable departure from its provisions to justify the judiciary in interposing by mandamus to control and reverse the action of the War Department in its work of reorganization. (U. S. v. Root, 22 App. D. C., 419.)

Mandamus may not lawfully issue to command or control an executive officer in the discharge of those of his duties which involve the exercise of his judgment or discretion, either in the construction of the law or in determining the existence or effect of the facts, though there may be no other method of review or correction provided by law. (Kimberlin v. Commission, 105 Fed. Rep., 653.)

The Secretary of State is the confidential political agent of the President for the execution of his will in matters committed to his discretion by the Constitution; and to coerce the action of the Secretary is to attempt the coercion of the President. (U. S. v. Hay, 20 App. D. C., 576.)

Whatever may be thought of the propriety of a particular direction of the President to the Secretary in respect to the business of his department, the latter simply complies with the law in obeying that direction, and mandamus will not lie to compel him to a contrary course. (U. S. v. Bayard, 4 Mackey, D. C., 310.)

It being the duty of the Secretary of State, in the conduct of every matter which constitutes a part of the business of his department, to act "in such manner as the President shall direct," and the acts of the Secretary in matters which the President is authorized to direct being presumed to have been directed by the President the Secretary can not be compelled by mandamus to pay over to a claimant moneys received from Spain in satisfaction of a judgment in his favor, as in refusing payment the Secretary is presumed to be acting under the direction of the President and therefore according to law. (U. S. v. Bayard, 4 Mackey, D. C., 310; but see U. S. v. Bayard, 5 Mackey, D. C., 428.)

The decision of the head of a department in restoring an attorney to good standing who had previously been disbarred can not be reviewed by the courts where the order of restoration is not completely satisfactory to the attorney. As the order of restoration was made in the exercise of the Secretary's unquestioned jurisdiction, the court has no power to review his judgment. (U. S. v. Ballinger, 35 App. D. C., 520.)

Under the Constitution the Supreme Court of the United States has no power to issue a writ of mandamus to the head of an executive department in the city of Washington; the issue of such writ being the exercise of an original jurisdiction not conferred by the Constitution. (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.)

The Supreme Court of the United States has neither an original nor an appellate jurisdiction to issue a mandamus to persons holding offices under the authority of the United States. (McClung v. Silliman, 2 Wheat., 369.)

Mandamus will not lie to the head of a department to direct a subordinate official to perform a mere ministerial duty, such as countersigning a check. If the duty be a mere ministerial one, no order of the head of the department could be justification for refusal on the part of the subordinate to perform it. (Hitchcock v. U. S., 22 App. D. C., 275.)

The United States can not be bound by a decision relating to its property rendered in mandamus proceedings against the Secretary of the Navy. The United States is not a party to such mandamus proceedings, and can not be "interfered with behind its back." (Goldberg v. Daniels, 231 U. S., 218.)

As to jurisdiction of the courts with reference to the appointment, removal, and assignment to duty of public officers, see cases noted under section 416, Revised Statutes.

As to freedom of Federal officers from interference by State courts, see note to Constitution Article I, section 8, clause 13.

For other decisions on subject of mandamus, see note to section 236, Revised Statutes.

When courts will interfere with business of department.—While the head of a governmental department is not subject to mandamus in any matter involving the exercise of discretion, this writ may issue against him in relation to matters wherein he performs a mere ministerial duty. (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524; Board of Liquidation of Louisiana v. McCombs, 92 U. S., 531.)

In a case where it is sought by mandamus to compel a public officer to perform a certain act, the question is whether the act is of a ministerial or of a judicial character, as those terms have been defined and limited by the courts; for there is no ministerial act to which the writ would be applicable that does not in some measure and to some extent involve the exercise of judgment and discretion; and there are acts apparently judicial which are not such in contemplation of law. (Payne v. U. S., 20 App. D. C., 581.)

Mandamus may issue to command an executive officer to act and to decide, though his act and decision involve the exercise of judgment and discretion; but in such case it may not direct him in what particular way or in whose favor he shall decide. (Kimberlin v. Commission, 105 Fed. Rep., 653.)

Courts will not compel executive officers to perform their official duties, even though such duties require an interpretation of the law, unless they refuse to act at all, or the act which it is sought to compel them to perform is purely ministerial. (U. S. v. Windom, 137 U. S., 636.)

While the exercise of discretion by executive officers acting within the scope of their authority will not be questioned by mandamus, when such officers exceed their authority and act without warrant of law, mandamus will lie. (Griffin v. U. S., 30 App. D. C., 177, 188, 190; 31 App. D. C., 231, 232, 233, 234.)

The court is powerless to direct the action of an executive officer by mandamus unless a positive legal right is being invaded by him in violation of a duty clearly imposed upon him by law; and such duty must be so plain and positive that he has no discretion left. (Moore v. U. S., 32 App. D. C., 243.)

While the action of an officer clothed with a discretion is not reviewable if exercised upon matters left to his discretion, yet his judgment as to the extent of his discretion under the law, and the matters on which it may be exercised, are reviewable on mandamus; and where a discretion is abused and made to work injustice, it may be controlled by mandamus. (U. S. v. Custis, 35 App. D. C., 247; see also U. S. v. Cortelyou, 26 App. D. C., 298.)

The necessary ground of an application for the writ of mandamus against an executive officer of the United States is that it shall appear that he has been charged by law with the performance of a specific official duty to which the petitioner is entitled, and that he refuses to perform that duty. (U. S. v. Bayard, 4 Mackey, D. C., 310.)

While the lawful exercise of discretion by public agents and officers can not be controlled by mandamus, the writ will lie to compel the person or body in whom the discretion is lodged to proceed to exercise its discretion, and in case the manner of such exercise has been prescribed by law, to compel the person or body not to proceed in any other way. (Huidekoper v. Hadley, 177 Fed. Rep., 1.)

Mandamus is the proper remedy, and the only remedy to compel the auditor of the Panama Canal to pay the United States judge for the Canal Zone the salary provided by law for the latter, the auditor's refusal being based upon an alleged indebtedness of the judge to the United States. (Smith v. Jackson, 241 Fed. Rep., 747; affirmed Smith v. Jackson (246 U. S., 388).)

Mandamus will lie to compel the Secretary of State to pay over money to which, under an act of Congress, the petitioner has a clear legal right; and the Secretary can not justify under an order from the President. (U. S. v. Bayard, 5 Mackey, D. C., 428.)

Mandamus will lie to compel the members of the Board of Labor Employment at the United States navy yard in the city of Washington, to register an applicant for examination for employment as mechanic or laborer, where they rest their refusal solely on the ground that the applicant is not a citizen of the United States, although a resident of Porto Rico, and owing allegiance to the United States. Rule 5 of the Civil Service Commission, promulgated by the President April 15, 1903, which modifies previous regulations of the Navy Department, provides that "no person shall be admitted to examination unless he be a citizen of or owe allegiance to the United States"; and that an applicant who claims citizenship by virtue of residence in Porto Rico and who shows birth or naturalization in Porto Rico, will not be required to show further evidence of citizenship. (U. S. v. Bowyer, 25 App. D. C., 121.)

The members of the United States Board of Labor Employment at the United States navy yard in the city of Washington are ministerial officers, and their duty to register an applicant for employment does not cease to be ministerial because they rest their refusal of the registration on the determination of a pure question of law, involving the ascertainment of no fact whatever. (U. S. v. Bowyer, 25 App. D. C., 121.)

The courts of the District of Columbia have power by mandamus proceedings to compel the head of an executive department in the city of Washington to do a ministerial act. (Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 524; affirmed Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet., 497.)

A cabinet officer may be enjoined from doing an act which was not authorized by the statutes under which he assumed to act. (American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S., 94; see also Caldwell v. Robinson, 59 Fed. Rep., 653; Frayser v. Russell, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5067; Kirwin v. Murphy, 83 Fed. Rep., 275, 170 U. S., 205; Sang Lung v. Jackson, 85 Fed. Rep., 502; Wong Wai v. Williamson, 103 Fed. Rep., 1; Lane v. Watts, 234 U. S., 525, affirming 41 App. D. C., 139.)

Where a Cabinet officer reopens and rejudicates a case decided by his predecessor, there being no contention that the former decision was obtained by fraud, and the law providing that such decision should be "final and conclusive," a court of equity has jurisdiction to require such officer to recognize and enforce the prior decision. (Mickadiet v. Lane, 43 App. D. C., 414.)

Subpœnas for heads of departments.—See note to Constitution, Article II, section 1, clause 1, and section 871, Revised Statutes; see also note to section 418, Revised Statutes, concerning power of courts to compel production of public records and documents.

Decisions of heads of departments not binding on courts.—If a suit should come before the Supreme Court which involved the construction of any of the laws imposing duties on the heads of the executive departments, the court certainly would not be bound to adopt the construction given by the head of the department; and if they supposed his decision to be wrong, they would of course so pronounce their judgment. But the judgment of the court upon the construction of a law must be given in a case in which they have jurisdiction, and in which it is their duty to interpret the act of Congress. (Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet., 497.)

Whatever the conclusiveness of executive acts so far as executive departments are concerned, as a rule of administration, it has long been settled that the action of executive officers in matters of account and payment can not be regarded as a conclusive determination when brought in question in a court of justice. (Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S., 205. For other cases, see note to sec. 236, R. S.)

Where the head of a department is authorized by law to ascertain "the legal heirs" of a decedent, and it is provided that his decision shall be "final and conclusive," this does not mean that he could arbitrarily ignore the legal heirs and decide in favor of a collateral heir or a stranger in blood; and when he does this, his decision is arbitrary and capricious and not binding on the courts. (Mickadiet v. Lane, 43 App. D. C., 414.)

Decisions of heads of departments are binding on their successors.—"The law is well settled that public officers can not open and reexamine cases decided by their predecessors except for fraud, mistake in matters of fact arising from errors in calculations, or newly discovered material evidence." (Maine v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 531, 553, quoting Waddell v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 325, 328, and cases there cited.)

"It has long been held in the executive departments that when a claim or controversy between the United States and individuals therein pending has once been fully considered, and final action and determination had thereon by any executive officer having jurisdiction of the same, it can not be reopened, set aside, and a different result ordered by any successor of such officer, except for fraud, manifest error on the face of the proceedings, such as a mathematical miscalculation or newly discovered evidence, presented within a reasonable time and under such circumstances as would be a sufficient cause for granting a new trial in a court of law. This ruling and practice of the departments has been approved elsewhere and has been sustained by the courts." (Rollins and Presbrey v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 123, citing, 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 34; 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 172, 358; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 387, 456; 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 275; U. S. v. Bank of Metropolis, 15 Pet., 401; Lavelette's case, 1 Ct. Cls., 147; Jackson's case, 19 Ct. Cls., 504; State of Illinois case, 20 Ct. Cls., 342; McKee's case, 12 Ct. Cls., 560; Day's case, 21 Ct. Cls., 264; and opinion of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, reported by Senator and Judge David Davis, quoted in Jackson's case, above referred to.)

"The doctrine of res judicata [a thing adjudicated—meaning that a specific case which has once been finally adjudicated can not be reopened] as being applicable to the jurisdiction of the head of a department is fully recognized by this court in several adjudications." (Day v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 264.)

"It is desirable upon all accounts that there should be an end of controversies. * * * Unless such is the case, as each successive incumbent of one of the great administrative offices assumes his position he may be compelled to review all the decisions of his predecessors which have been against applicants and claimants." (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 315.)

It is "a rule of action prescribed to itself by each administration, to consider the acts of its predecessors conclusive, as far as the Executive is concerned. It is but a decent degree of respect for each administration to entertain of its predecessor, to suppose it as well qualified as itself to execute the laws according to the intention of their makers; and not to set an example of review and reversal, which, in its turn, may be brought to bear upon itself, and thus keep the acts of the Executive perpetually unsettled and afloat. In conversing with President Adams on this subject, I understood him to concur in the general rule of considering all acts of the preceding administration as final; and, although partial injuries may now and then remain unredressed by the operation of this, in common with all other general rules, yet it is better to bear that partial evil, or leave it to legislative redress, than to introduce the more extensive, incalculable evils which must result from considering all the past acts of all the past Executives as open to reconsideration and readjudication, at the pleasure of the individuals who were interested in them. And if a decision made in regard to these gentlemen, eight years ago, during the presidency of Mr. Monroe, is open to review and reversal, I do not see upon what principle of discrimination we can refuse to review and reverse a decision made during the presidency of Mr. Washington, upon the application of any other individual supposing himself aggrieved by it." (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 9.)

If the present administration has authority to review the acts of its predecessors, "the Executive which is to follow us must have the like authority to review and unsettle our decisions, and to set up again those of our predecessors; and upon this principle, no question can be considered as finally settled. The establishment of such a principle, besides the uncertainty and confusion just noticed, would throw upon the Executive a load of duties which it could not possibly sustain. Each administration has already as much as it can do, in the current business which belongs to it; but if to this is to be superadded the burden of reviewing all the acts of preceding administrations by which individuals may suppose themselves to have been aggrieved, it is manifest that the burden will become immediately insupportable." (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 9.)

"The principle has been so frequently declared that the final decision of a matter before the head of a department is binding upon his successors in the same department, under certain well-defined exceptions, that it is now entitled to be regarded as a settled rule of administrative law. (See on this subject, United States v. Bank of Metropolis, 15 Pet., 401; Opinion of Mr. Wirt, 2 Opins., 9; of Mr. Taney, 2 Opins., 464; of Mr. Nelson, 4 Opins., 341; of Mr. Toucey, 5 Opins., 29; of Mr. Johnson, 5 Opins., 123; of Mr. Black, 9 Opins., 101, 301-2, 387; of Mr. Stanberry, 12 Opins., 358; of Mr. Hoar, dated Apr. 26, 1869, in relation to the case of Admiral Goldsborough, ante, p. 33; and another, dated May 5, 1870, in relation to the claim of George Chorpennig, ante, p., 226; all of which authorities are cited and approved in a recent opinion addressed to you by the Attorney General, dated Mar. 7, 1871, in the case of R. C. Sargent and others against the Western Pacific Railroad Company.) None of the exceptions referred to are shown to exist in the case submitted; and thus, as it seems to me, the rule just stated being properly applicable here, under its operation you clearly have no authority to disturb the decision of your predecessor or reopen the case finally determined by him." (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 457.)

The head of a department is without jurisdiction to reopen and readjudicate a case finally decided by his predecessor; there being no allegation that the previous decision was obtained by fraud, and it being, under the law, "final and conclusive." In such a case, it was held that a court of equity has jurisdiction to order the Secretary to recognize and enforce the former decision, upon petition of parties injuriously affected by its reversal. (Mickadiet v. Lane, 43 App. D. C., 414.)

The principles enunciated in the authorities above quoted have been consistently followed by the Navy Department in the past with reference to decisions of previous administrations. (File 5252-32, re legality of appointment to the Naval Academy of Midshipman Douglas, and 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 180, in same case; file 26256-111:2, naval service of Captain Owen S. Willey, U. S. R. C. S.; file 11130-6, application of Captain Julius S. Turrill, U. S. M. C., for change in date of commission; file 27231-42, Civil-War service of Captain Robert E. Impey, Commander Charles A. Adams, Commander Dennis W. Mullan, and Chief Boatswain John B. F. Langston, U. S. N., retired, and file 27231-42:2 and 3, in same cases; see also file 20971-19:1, Apr. 14, 1913; file 26252-71:2, Aug. 29, 1913; file 26836-15, Nov. 17, 1913.)

For other cases, see note to section 236, Revised Statutes.

Decision not binding on successors except as to specific case adjudicated.—The head of an executive department of the Government has the right to reverse a departmental practice, based on the decisions of a predecessor, even if a long-continued one, and such a former decision can be said to have no elements of estoppel or res judicata save in respect of subject matter finally settled and closed under it. (Payne v. Houghton, 22 App. D. C., 234; Smith v. Payne, 22 App. D. C., 463.)

But "it is almost as important that the law should be settled permanently as that it should be settled correctly. Its rules should be fixed deliberately and adhered to firmly, unless clearly erroneous. Vacillation is a serious evil." (File 5252-68, May 15, 1915, quoting Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall., 724.)

According to the doctrine of stare decisis, where a statute has been construed by the Navy Department in a previous administration and such construction is not clearly erroneous, the matter should be regarded as settled so far as the law is concerned, and the previous construction should not be disturbed. (File 5252-68, May 15, 1915.)

The Navy Department having decided in a specific case that the law does not prohibit the appointment of an alien to the Naval Academy, although he can not be commissioned as an officer without in the meantime becoming a citizen, and this decision not being "clearly erroneous," it should be adhered to as the correct interpretation of the law, but the regulations may be amended so as to prohibit the appointment of aliens to the Naval Academy, this not being contrary to statute. (File 5252-68, May 15, 1915.)

No change in a usage can have a retroactive effect, but must be limited to the future. (U. S. v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet., 1, 15; see also Campbell v. U. S., 107 U. S., 407.) Where payments have been made under a long-continued practice of the administrative department, sanctioned by the accounting officers of the Treasury, payments so made by disbursing officers prior to the promulgation of a Comptroller's decision reversing the former construction of the law, if otherwise correct, will be passed to their official credit. (20 Comp. Dec., 182; see also Comp. Dig., 295, 296. In this connection, consult Muhlker v. New York & Harlem R. Co., 197 U. S., 544; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall., 175; Ohio Life & Trust Co. v. Debolt, 16 How., 432; compare Weber v. Rogan, 188 U. S., 10, and cases there cited.)

Jurisdiction of Secretary of the Navy and accounting officers of the Treasury.—See cases collected on this subject in note to section 236, Revised Statutes.

Secretary of the Navy will not decide hypothetical questions.—The official business of the Navy Department is such that it is compelled to decline answering hypothetical questions, assuming facts which may never actually be presented to the person requesting decision. As was stated by the Attorney General in an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury, "you will readily perceive the inconvenience of giving, upon a hypothetical case, an opinion which, upon the consideration of an actual case, might require modification on account of circumstances not imagined, and, therefore, not considered in the preparation of the opinion." (File 26287-1776, Oct. 28, 1913, citing 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 531. See in this connection, note to sec. 356, R. S.)

Legal liability of Secretary for official acts.—The head of a department incurs no personal liability in approving by his signature vouchers or other instruments in writing involving the expenditure of public moneys if he acts in reliance upon properly chosen subordinates whose ability and good faith he has no reason to question, even if it turns out that the voucher or other instrument should not have been executed. The head of a department must, of course, exercise due care in every official act connected with his department. But as his personal investigation of every detail is in the nature of things impossible, he has a right to act in reliance upon properly chosen subordinates whose ability and good faith he has no reason to question. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 573.)

The same general considerations of public policy which demand, for judges of courts of superior jurisdiction, immunity from civil suits for damages arising from acts done by them in the course of the performance of their judicial functions, apply to a large extent to official communications made by heads of executive departments when engaged in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them by law. The interests of the people require that due protection be accorded to them in respect of their official acts. As in the case of a judicial officer, a distinction exists between action taken by the head of a department in reference to matters which are manifestly or palpably beyond his authority and action having more or less connection with general matters committed by law to his control or supervision. Whatever difficulty may arise in applying these principles to particular cases in which the rights of the citizen may have been materially impaired by the inconsiderate or wrongful action of the head of a department, it is clear that he can not be held liable to a civil suit for damages on account of official communications made by him pursuant to an act of Congress and in respect of matters within his authority by reason of any personal motive that might be alleged to have prompted his action, for personal motives can not be imputed to duly authorized official conduct. In exercising the functions of his office the head of an executive department, keeping within the limits of his authority, should not be under an apprehension that the motives that control his official conduct may at any time become the subject of inquiry in a civil suit for damages. It would seriously cripple the proper and effective administration of public affairs as intrusted to the executive branch of the Government if he were subjected to any such restraint. He may have legal authority to act, but he may have such large discretion in the premises that it will not always be his absolute duty to exercise the authority with which he is invested. But if he acts, having authority, his conduct can not be made the foundation of a suit against him personally for damages, even if the circumstances show that he is not disagreeably impressed by the fact that his action injuriously affects the claims of particular individuals. Where the head of a department does not exceed his authority nor pass the line of his duty the motive that impelled him to act is wholly immaterial. Even though he acted maliciously, that could not change the law. (Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S., 483; see also Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch, 345; Lamar v. Browne, 92 U. S., 187.)

A report made by the chief of a bureau or office in a department to the head of the department as to the merits of a claim for a medal of honor which has been referred to him for investigation, which report contains nothing that does not relate to or reflect upon the alleged questionable character of the claimant and the want of just foundation for his claim, is absolutely privileged, notwithstanding the motive which may have actuated the maker, or the mistakes of fact which it may contain. If the report complained of as a libel had been made by the head of the department to the President for his action, it could hardly be contended for a moment that an action for libel could be maintained against the Secretary. The latter is the regularly constituted organ of the President for the administration of the military establishment of the nation; and rules and orders publicly promulgated through him must be received as those of the Executive. And as it is impossible for a single individual to perform in person all the various duties assigned to the particular department of which he is head, he must of necessity, under proper orders and regulations, perform the larger portion of such duties through the agencies of the heads of bureaus and divisions of his department. But the work when done is in contemplation of law the work of the department, and is entitled to all the privilege and protection that would attach to it if done by the Secretary in person. It is, therefore, not the particular position of the party making the report or communication that entitles it to absolute privilege, so much as the occasion of making it and the reasons of public policy for the immunity. (De Arnaud v. Ainsworth, 24 App. D. C., 167; 5 L. R. A. (N. S.), 163.)

The question of motive is not material. A party is not liable for the motives with which he discharges an official duty; nor is he liable for any mistake of fact he may commit in the course of the exercise of that duty. Public policy affords absolute protection and immunity for what may be said or written by an officer in his official report or communication to a superior, when such report or communication is made in the course and discharge of official duty. Otherwise the perfect freedom which ought to exist in the discharge of public duty might be seriously restrained, and often to the detriment of the public service. Of course, when a party steps aside from duty and introduces into his report or communication defamatory matter wholly irrelevant and foreign to the subject of inquiry, a different question is presented. (De Arnaud v. Ainsworth, 24 App. D. C., 167; 5 L. R. A. (N. S.), 163.)

Section 1547 of the Revised Statutes, by express terms, provides that orders, regulations, and instructions issued by the Secretary of the Navy are to be recognized as the regulations of the Navy. One of these regulations directs that "all officers through whom communications from inferiors are to be forwarded to the department, one of the bureaus, or any authority higher than themselves, must forward the same, if couched in respectful language, as soon after being received as practicable, and they will invariably state their opinion in writing, by indorsement or otherwise, in relation to every subject presented for decision." [Similar provision was contained in Art. I-5305, Naval Instructions, 1913.] M. was a professor at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, and placed his resignation in the hands of W., then superintendent of the academy, to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Navy for his decision. The resignation was forwarded by W. with his indorsement thereon of reasons why it should be accepted. In an action for libel, based upon this indorsement, brought by M. against W., it was held, (1) that the indorsement in question did not fall within the class of communications which are absolutely privileged; (2) that it was, however, privileged to the extent that the occasion of making it rebutted the presumption of malice, and threw upon the plaintiff the onus of proving that it was not made from duty, but from actual malice and without reasonable and probable cause. (Maurice v. Worden, 54 Md., 233.)

The mere sending to the head of a department, by a subordinate officer in the course of official duty, of a communication reflecting upon the character and conduct of a subordinate is not such a publication as is essential to maintain an action for a libel. (Gardner v. Anderson, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5220.)

Handing to another a copy of a Senate document containing a report of an official of the War Department adverse to a claim for a medal of honor for distinguished service in the Army is not a libelous publication of the matter therein contained, since the report is a public document which every one may circulate, receive, and inspect. (De Arnaud v. Ainsworth, 24 App. D. C., 167; 5 L. R. A. (N. S.), 163.)

For decisions concerning the production in court of papers on file in the departments, for use in libel suits against public officers, see note to section 418, Revised Statutes.

"No man in this country is so high that he is above the law. No officer of the law may set that law at defiance with impunity. All the officers of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law and are bound to obey it. It is the only supreme power in our system of Government, and every man who by accepting office participates in its functions is only the more strongly bound to submit to the supremacy and to observe the liabilities which it imposes upon the exercise of the authority which it gives." (U. S. v. Lee, 106 U. S., 196.)

Executive Federal officers are personally liable at law in the ordinary forms of action for illegal official ministerial acts or omissions to the injury of an individual. (U. S. v. Kendall, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15517; affirmed Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet., 526.)

An officer is bound to use that care and diligence in the discharge of his duties that a conscientious and prudent man, acting under a just sense of his obligations, would exercise under the circumstances of a particular case; and if he fails and neglects to do so he is culpable. (U. S. v. Baldridge, 11 Fed. Rep., 552.)

Where a public act or order rests in executive discretion, neither the President nor his authorized agent is personally civilly responsible for the consequences. (Durand v. Hollins, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4186.)

For other decisions concerning legal liability of public officers, see notes to Constitution, Article II, section 1, clause 1, and Article I, section 8, clause 13.

The signature of the head of a department does not require the use of pen and ink, held and guided by the hand of the person himself. The impress of his name with a stamp or copperplate by himself or in his presence is legally sufficient. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 670.)

The head of a department can not delegate authority to other officers to sign his name in attestation of commissions, Treasury warrants, passports, and the like without authority of Congress. If the time occupied in signing his name becomes a serious impediment to the prompt performance of his merely intellectual duties, relief should be obtained from Congress. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 594.)

The abbreviation employed by the head of a department is in legal contemplation his signature, if used for that purpose; and if in any case it should become material to establish it by evidence, the same testimony would avail as would suffice to verify his name written out at length. (4 Op. Atty. Gen. 187.)

The signature of a public official, in the form of a facsimile stamp affixed by a subordinate under the direction of such officer and initialed by the subordinate authorized to affix the same, is a valid signature and conveys the authority of the officer in all cases where he is authorized to act. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 349, file 22724-39:3.)

Secretary of the Navy may exercise powers vested by law in subordinates.—The office of Commandant of the Marine Corps is under the direct supervision and control of the Secretary of the Navy, and its duties may be performed by him or by the Acting Secretary while the office of commandant is vacant. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 486, citing Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 28 Ct. Cls., 221, in which the courts held that "a military officer can not be invested with greater authority by Congress than the Commander in Chief.")

Similarly, held that the Secretary or Acting Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, may sign all mail which requires the signature of the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering during a vacancy in that office. (File 22724-7e, May 14, 1909; compare Williams Eng. and Cont. Co. v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 349.)

Power of Secretary to reprimand subordinates.—"No doubt the Secretary of the Navy may, within his discretion, when he believes it for the good of the service, send communications to subordinate officers which may be in the nature of a reprimand. This right is necessarily vested in him as the chief officer of a department; but such communications can not be regarded in the nature of a punishment as defined in the Regulations." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 625.)

"The assumption that the Secretary of the Navy can not pronounce a rebuke, public or private, upon an officer for a breach of discipline, or a failure in the performance of duty, without obtaining the sanction of a court, is an unheard of proposition. The department impartially awards praise or blame to the officer who deserves one or the other, as occasion may arise; and the practice is as old as the department itself. Cases have occurred where the department, without trial, has pronounced emphatic reprimand upon officers in general orders. The publicity that is given either to its commendation or its reproof is a matter within its own discretion, in the exercise of which it consults only the public interests." (File 26251-2993, Mar. 10, 1910, quoting letter of Jan. 14, 1891, to Commander George C. Reiter, U. S. Navy; see also, G. C. M. Order No. 9, Jan. 31, 1893, citing precedents, and see file 26283-522, Feb. 12, 1913.)

The Secretary of the Navy has authority to detail enlisted men of the Marine Corps to guard and protect property of the Government placed on exhibition at an exposition. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 576); to order a naval detachment to Raleigh, N. C., to participate in ceremonies attending the unveiling of monument to late Ensign Bagley (file 3679-2); and to detail the Marine Band to appropriate duty anywhere (file 4288-6, Apr. 22, 1907), including its participation in a charity fete (file 4288-4, Apr. 18, 1907).

The act of June 3, 1916, section 35 (39 Stat., 188), does not prohibit the detail or permitting of enlisted men, including members of the Marine Band, to engage in their profession in civil life without remuneration, even though this may possibly interfere with the employment of local civilians. (File 4924-435, June 20, 1916).

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 612), members of the Marine Band are prohibited as individuals from furnishing music in competition with civilian musicians, and from accepting remuneration for furnishing music except under special circumstances when authorized by the President.

As to detail of enlisted men to duty in an executive department, see statutes noted under section 416, Revised Statutes, "Restrictions on employment of clerical services."

Sec. 418. [Department property, books, and records.] The Secretary of the Navy shall have the custody and charge of all the books, records, and other property now remaining in and appertaining to the Department of the Navy, or hereafter acquired by it.—(30 Apr., 1798, c. 35, s. 3, v. 1, p. 554.)

Accounts, property: "Clothing and small stores" fund created by act of June 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 197).

Accounts: "Naval supply account" was created and the "naval supply fund" abolished by acts of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 792), and March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1279).

Accounts: Property returns to be audited and responsibility for losses determined by Paymaster General of the Navy and officer in charge of the Quartermaster's Department of the Marine Corps. (Act Mar. 29, 1894, 28 Stat., 47.)

Miscellaneous.—The head of a department should see that contracts which belong to his office are properly and faithfully executed, whether he made the contracts or conferred authority on others to do so; and if he becomes satisfied that contracts which he made are being fraudulently executed, or that contracts made by others were made in disregard of the rights of the Government, or with intent to defraud, it is his duty to interpose, arrest execution thereof, and adopt measures to protect the Government against the dishonesty of his subordinates. (U. S. v. Adams, 7 Wall., 463.)

Navy regulations are binding on the subordinates of the Secretary of the Navy, but do not bind the Secretary himself. (See U. S. v. Burns, 12 Wall., 246; Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 215; and 9 Comp. Dec., 280; noted under sec. 161, R. S., "IX. Waiver of Regulations.")

The presumption is that officers of the Government perform their duty, and the presumption is strengthened in a particular case by the fact that heavy statutory penalties will be incurred by neglect. (Crussell v. U. S., 7 Ct. Cls., 276, publishing decision of Supreme Court.)

The failure of an officer of the United States to discharge a plain duty imposed on him by law does not charge the Government itself with the loss caused by the default. (In re Schmalz, 4 Ct. Cls., 142.)

All the officers of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, are but agents with delegated powers; and if they act beyond the scope of those delegated powers, their acts do not bind the principal. (U. S. v. Maxwell, etc., Co., 21 Fed. Rep., 19; see also Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128, holding Government not bound by illegal action of Navy Department, noted under sec. 236, R. S., VIII, (C), 3.)

All instructions from the executive which are not supported by law are illegal, and no inferior officer is bound to obey them. (Gilchrist v. Collector, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5420; see cases on this subject collected in note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 13.)

The fact that one is an officer of the Navy of the United States, and is acting under orders, gives him no justification for the retention of premises held by him under that authority against the claim of the true owner. (San Francisco Sav. Union v. Irwin, 28 Fed. Rep., 708.)

Army supplies: Transfer of, as needed, to naval or marine officers commanding detachments on shore, was required by sections 1135 and 1143, Revised Statutes.

Bids may be rejected under certain circumstances. (Secs. 3722 and 3724, R. S.)

Coal produced by certain mines in Alaska required to be sold to United States for use of Navy at price fixed by President. (Act May 28, 1908, sec. 2, 35 Stat., 424.)

- Foreign materials for construction or repair and equipment of naval vessels may be imported without duty. (Act Oct. 3, 1913, sec. IV, J, subsecs. 5, 6, 38 Stat., 196.)
- Foreign war material may be purchased in emergencies and imported free of duty. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 896. See also act June 30, 1914, 38 Stat., 399.)
- Foreign supplies not to be purchased in excess of prevailing market prices. (Sec. 3723, R. S.)
- Gifts of flags used for draping coffins may be made by Secretary of the Navy to relatives of deceased, or to schools, patriotic orders, or societies. (Act June 30, 1914, 38 Stat. 406.)
- Gifts to vessels of silver, colors, books, and articles of equipment or furniture, to be accepted and cared for by Secretary of the Navy. (Act May 20, 1908, 35 Stat., 171.)
- Government publications (one copy) are to be furnished by the Superintendent of Documents to the libraries of the Executive Departments, and of the United States Military and Naval Academies, which libraries are constituted designated depositories of such publications. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 98, 28 Stat., 624.)
- Inventory of property pertaining to Navy is required to be kept by the Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 197, R. S.; amended by act Feb. 27, 1877, sec. 1, 19 Stat., 241.)
- Inventory to be kept of all supplies pertaining to Naval Establishment, and annual report thereof made to Congress, by Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. (Act Mar. 2, 1889, 25 Stat., 817.)
- Life-saving dress authorized as part of naval equipment. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 475.)
- Loan of naval vessels to nautical schools, authorized by act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1353).
- Loan or permanent transfer of naval vessels to U. S. Shipping Board, authorized by act of September 7, 1916, section 6 (39 Stat., 730).
- Loan of naval equipment to military schools, authorized by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1440), as amended by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 620), and June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 613).
- Loan or gift of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls by the Secretary of the Navy to soldiers' monument associations, posts of Grand Army of the Republic, and municipal corporations, authorized by act of May 22, 1896 (29 Stat., 133).
- Loan of scientific instruments by Secretary of the Navy to the Weather Bureau was authorized by act of October 19, 1888, section 3 (25 Stat., 600), as amended by act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 653).
- Loan of articles to Red Cross was authorized by joint resolution of May 8, 1914 (38 Stat., 771), as amended by joint resolution of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat., 164).
- Official Register of the United States—20 copies of each edition to be furnished to the Navy Department under Public Printing and Binding Act, January 12, 1895, section 73 (28 Stat., 618).
- Punishment for injuring or destroying naval supplies and property is provided by Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, section 286 (35 Stat., 1144); and section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 4.
- Punishment for injuring naval vessel or equipment is provided by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 4.
- Punishment for failure to prevent destruction of public property is provided by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 8.
- Punishment for wasting ammunition, provisions, or other public property, or permit- ting such waste, is provided by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 8.

- Punishment for unlawfully purchasing naval property from person not having lawful right to sell same is provided by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14; and Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, section 35 (35 Stat., 1095).
- Punishment for stealing, embezzling, or unlawfully selling ordnance, arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, or other naval property is provided by section 1624 Revised Statutes, article 14; and Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 36 and 47 (35 Stat., 1096, 1097).
- Punishment for unlawfully concealing, removing, mutilating, obliterating, falsifying, or destroying any public record, book, paper, etc., is provided by Criminal Code, sections 128 and 129 (35 Stat., 1111, 1112).
- Punishment for forging or altering public records for purpose of defrauding United States is provided by section 28, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1094); and section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 14. (See also act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1355.)
- Purchase of supplies is deemed to be for the Navy, and not for any bureau thereof, and they shall be classified and issued accordingly. (Act Mar. 2, 1891, 26 Stat., 807; act June 30, 1890, 26 Stat., 205.)
- Purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from unlawful combinations or monopolies, or at price in excess of a reasonable profit, is prohibited by a clause in the annual naval appropriation act under "Increase of the Navy." (See act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1195.)
- Purchase of naval supplies, when time will permit, is to be made by contract after advertisement and from lowest bidder. (Sec. 3718, R. S., as amended by act June 30, 1890, 26 Stat., 189; act July 19, 1892, 27 Stat., 243; and act Mar. 3, 1893, 27 Stat., 715.)
- Purchase of material for steam boilers is authorized without advertisement. (Res., June 14, 1878, 20 Stat., 253.)

- Records of Revolutionary War pertaining to the Navy, in the possession of any official of the United States, are required to be transferred to the Navy Department. (Act Mar. 2, 1913, 37 Stat., 723; act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 579.)
- Records pertaining to the Navy, from beginning of the Navy Department to the Civil War, in the possession of any of the executive departments, are required to be transferred to the Secretary of the Navy. (Act Apr. 27, 1904, 33 Stat., 403.)
- Records and books of bureaus in the Navy Department are to be retained in custody of the bureaus. (Sec. 420, R. S.)
- Records of courts of inquiry are admissible in evidence before courts-martial. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 60.)
- Records of naval retiring boards are to be laid before the President by Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1452, R. S.)
- Records of Revolutionary War are to be classified by Secretary of the Navy with view to pub-

- lication. (Act Mar. 2, 1913, 37 Stat., 723; act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 579.)
- Records of Civil War are to be published by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act July 31, 1894, 28 Stat., 190; see also legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation acts for subsequent years.)
- Regulations for the purchase, preservation, and disposition of naval supplies are to be made by the President. (Sec. 1549, R. S.)
- Regulations for the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to any executive department, are to be made by the head of such department. (Sec. 161, R. S.)
- Regulations and general orders shall be furnished each commissioned and warrant officer of the Navy. (Sec. 1548, R. S.)
- Repairs to naval vessels are restricted by sections 1538 and 1539, Revised Statutes, and laws noted thereunder.
- Sale of naval stores to persons in the Navy and Marine Corps and civilian employees at certain naval stations is authorized by act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 768); act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 619); and act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 909).
- Sale of Navy and Marine Corps subsistence supplies to officers and enlisted men of the Army is authorized by annual appropriation acts. (See act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1072. See also sec. 1135, R. S., and note thereto.)
- Sale of vessels unfit to be repaired is authorized by sections 1540 and 1541, Revised Statutes, and subsequent laws noted thereunder.
- Sale of unserviceable materials and condemned naval supplies and stores is authorized by section 1541, Revised Statutes, and subsequent laws noted thereunder. [The chief of the Bureau of Ordnance was authorized to sell certain small arms on hand and use proceeds for purchase of new arms and ammunition by act of June 20, 1878 (20 Stat., 242). See also act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 388).]
- Sale of useless papers in the Navy Department, on naval vessels, and at navy yards, is authorized by acts of February 16, 1889 (25 Stat., 672); March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 933); February 16, 1909, section 14 (35 Stat., 622); August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329); and March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 929).
- Sale of individual pieces of United States armament, when sentimental reasons exist for such sale, is authorized by act of March 2, 1905 (33 Stat., 841).
- Sale or gift of lubricating oil and gasoline to vessels of Volunteer Patrol Squadron. (See act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 600.)
- Sales of vessels and materials are to be reported to Congress (secs. 429, 1541, R. S.; sec. 3672, R. S., as amended by act Feb. 27, 1877, sec. 1, 19 Stat., 249; act Aug. 5, 1882, sec. 2, 22 Stat., 296).
- Sales of old material, etc.: Proceeds in certain cases are to be covered into the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts." (Sec. 3618, R. S.)
- Scientific investigators and students shall be afforded the facilities for study and research in the Government departments under such restrictions as heads of departments may prescribe. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1039.)
- Statutes at Large—100 pamphlet copies are required to be furnished to the Navy Department by Secretary of State at close of each session of Congress. (Public Printing and Binding Act, Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 614.)
- Statutes at Large—75 bound copies are required to be furnished by Secretary of State to Navy Department at close of each Congress. (Public Printing and Binding Act, Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 615.)
- Supreme Court reports are to be furnished to the Secretary of the Navy, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, and the Naval Academy, for official use. (Judicial Code, act Mar. 3, 1911, sec. 227, 36 Stat., 1154.)
- Timberlands are reserved for naval purposes, and removal or destruction of timber thereon is made punishable by sections 2458-2463, Revised Statutes.
- Transfer of aeroplanes and equipment to Post Office Department was authorized by Act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1194).
- Transfer of supplies from one bureau of the War or Navy Departments to another bureau of such departments. See act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1084), and 21 Comp. Dec., 819. See also section 1135, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.
- Transfer of supplies between Bureaus of the Navy Department was authorized by act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 818).
- Transfer of naval vessels to the Department of Commerce was authorized by Act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat., 1058); and to the Shipping Board by Act of September 7, 1916, sec. 6 (39 Stat., 730; compare Act June 5, 1920, 41 Stat., 990; see also Act May 12, 1917, 40 Stat., 75).
- Transportation of naval supplies by Army transport service, is authorized by act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1170).
- Transportation of naval supplies shall be in vessels of United States, unless freight charges are unreasonable and excessive. (Act Apr. 28, 1904, 33 Stat., 518.)
- Vehicles, passenger-carrying, are not to be purchased, operated, or repaired from any appropriation without specific authority of Congress. (Act July 16, 1914, sec. 5, 38 Stat., 508).
- Vessels, foreign built and registered as vessels of United States, may be taken and used as cruisers or transports. (Act May 10, 1892, sec. 4, 27 Stat., 28.)
- Vessels used in ocean mail service may be taken and used as transports or cruisers. (Act Mar. 3, 1891, sec. 9, 26 Stat., 832.)

Transfer of property.—Where articles of equipment, purchased for use of a particular bureau of a department have served the purpose for which purchased, they may be transferred for use of another bureau of said department without any adjustment of appropriations. (21 Comp. Dec., 788.)

Under the provisions of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1084), when one bureau of the War or Navy Departments procures supplies or performs any service for another bureau of such departments the head of the department for which the supplies are to be procured or the service performed may cause its funds to be transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the procuring department for direct expenditure by it. The funds so transferred are to be expended and accounted for under the rules and regulations of the department to which they are advanced (21 Comp. Dec., 819; see also 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 480).

Authority of Congress is necessary for transfer of naval vessel to the Revenue-Cutter Service. (File 3160-54, May 4, 1907.)

There is no authority for the Navy Department to transfer to another department absolutely, or temporarily (under certain circumstances), property purchased from its appropriations. Accordingly, declined to loan model of the U. S. S. Bancroft to the Revenue-Cutter Service, to which the vessel itself had been transferred pursuant to act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat., 702). (File 3160-36, Nov. 15, 1906. See also 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 480; 20 Op. Atty. Gen., 93, 96; 23 Comp. Dec., 175. Compare file 809-3, Sept. 28, 1906, holding that the loan of a gun to the State of Virginia might be made under the general powers of the Secretary of the Navy, there being no express statutory authority covering the case.)

The Secretary of the Navy can not exchange a vessel belonging to the Navy, which has been condemned as unfit for naval purposes, for another vessel, notwithstanding the exchange might be of advantage to the public service. The disposition of such vessel is controlled by the law providing for the sale of vessels and materials which can not be advantageously used. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 369.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 161 and 355, Revised Statutes; and see various laws authorizing loan or transfer of Government property—for example, joint resolutions of February 3, 1913 (37 Stat., 1024), and February 9, 1917 (39 Stat., 902), authorizing Secretary of Navy to loan flags to inaugural committee, subject to certain restrictions—and see laws noted above and section 427, Revised Statutes.

Records of department.—The Navy Department is unable to comply with the request of attorneys that original correspondence be furnished them from the files of the department, notwithstanding their offer to give any reasonable security for its custody and return. The law requires that the records shall be kept safely in the department, and the Secretary of the Navy is made personally the custodian. (Letter of Hon. R. W. Thompson, Secretary of the Navy, May 12, 1879, published in Maurice v. Worden, 54 Md., 237; see also file 12475-64, Aug. 9, 1915.)

It has been the invariable practice of the Navy Department to decline to furnish in the case of legal controversies, at the request of the parties litigant, copies of papers or other information to be used in the course of the proceedings. (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914; see also file 1959-99, and 12475-53:1, Jan. 30, 1915.)

The Navy Department does not grant permission to attorneys to make preliminary and informal examination of the records, but will promptly furnish copies of papers or records upon call of a civil court before which proceedings are pending. (G. O. No. 121, Navy Dept., Sept. 17, 1914; see also file 5467-8, Mar. 27, 1907.)

"No information shall be furnished from the records of the Navy Department to attorneys or agents concerning the naval service of officers or enlisted men of the Navy until such attorneys or agents shall file a power of attorney in the department, showing that they have authority from the person whose record is desired, or his legal representatives, to request such information, and shall also file a statement of the purpose for which such information is desired. If such statement be deemed satisfactory to the department, the information will be furnished, provided the attorney or agent submits to the department the same proof of the identity of the person or persons he represents, as is required when the application for such information is made by the person or persons themselves." (Art. 26, Naval Instructions, 1913.)

It would be establishing a dangerous precedent for the Secretary of the Navy to furnish information from the official records for the use of an attorney in preparing a case against the United States in the Court of Claims, even though such attorney file a power of attorney from the legal representative of the person whose record is desired. The furnishing of such information "might be construed in violation of section 5498 Revised Statutes." The information sought might be furnished very properly upon the call of the Court of Claims. (Attorney-General to Secretary of the Navy, Jan. 18, 1915, file 12475-53:1; see also sec. 164, Judicial Code, act Mar. 3, 1911, 36 Stat., 1141, and sec. 188, R. S.) [Section 5498, Revised Statutes, above-mentioned, was repealed by section 341, Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1153), and similar provisions were embodied in section 109 of said Criminal Code (35 Stat., 1107).]

There is a class of communications which the courts will not require to be produced in evidence where those having the custody of them object to their publicity on the ground of public policy. Such are official communications to the heads of Government, and between its different departments. "And where the law is restrained by public policy from enforcing the production of papers, the like necessity restrains it from doing what would be the same in effect, namely, receiving secondary evidence of their contents." (Maurice v. Worden, 54 Md., 254; citing 1 Green. Ev., sec. 251.)

However, where the Secretary of the Navy furnished copies of correspondence from the files of the department, for use by attorneys in the prosecution of a libel suit against the superintendent of the Naval Academy, it was held that such copies under the department's seal might be used in evidence, as the Secretary of the Navy, by furnishing such copies, showed that he did not object to their publicity. (Maurice v. Worden, 54 Md., 254.)

Communications in writing passing between officers of the Government, in the course of official duty, relating to the business of their offices, are privileged from disclosure on the ground of public policy, and their production will not be compelled by courts of law or equity. Neither will secondary evidence of their contents be admissible, whether in the form of copies or of oral statements of witnesses who have read and recollected the same. An official letter from the head of an office to the head of the department, recommending a person for appointment as clerk in the former's office in place of one whose removal is recommended for inefficiency and bad conduct, is a privileged communication within the rule, and can not be admitted in evidence to sustain an action for libel brought against the head of the office by the person whose removal is recommended. (Gardner v. Anderson, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5220. In this case, the head of the department declined to appear before a commission to take his testimony, or to produce any paper or copy, and sent the commissioner a letter to that effect. The appointment clerk who attended and was examined, by direction of the Secretary declined to produce any paper or to speak of the contents of any. The Secretary later declined to attend the trial in obedience to a subpoena, and directed the United States attorney to state his reasons to the court. The court refused to proceed against the Secretary for contempt, as moved by plaintiff. The court advised plaintiff to apply to the Secretary for a copy of the letter. The Secretary replied that, at the date of alleged letter, the defendant was appraiser of merchandise, and any communications from him to the department were official in their nature, confidential, and protected from disclosure; and he, the Secretary, was not at liberty to furnish a copy of the same to enable the plaintiff to maintain an action against a late appraiser whose defense the Government had assumed. The plaintiff then called a clerk in the appraiser's office, who had charge of the official letter copying book. The court, however, excluded such secondary evidence, its decision being as stated above.)

Removal of papers from existing records of officers is not approved. (File 4435-5, May 13, 1908.)

The official records of the Navy Department should remain inviolate, and should not be changed a hundred years after the events they purport to record. Where it is alleged that the record of an officer is in error, the evidence in support of such claim may be filed with his record, thus showing just what is claimed and just what authority there is for each claim. (File 24413-5, July 12, 1913. See also note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 7, clause 2.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 161, 188, and 871, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 419. [Establishment of Bureaus and Distribution of Business.] The business of the Department of the Navy shall be distributed in such manner as the Secretary of the Navy shall judge to be expedient and proper among the following Bureaus:

First. A Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Second. A Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting.

Third. A Bureau of Navigation.

Fourth. A Bureau of Ordnance.

Fifth. A Bureau of Construction and Repair.

Sixth. A Bureau of Steam Engineering.

Seventh. A Bureau of Provisions and Clothing.

Eighth. A Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.—(31 Aug., 1842, c. 286, s. 2, v. 5, p. 579; 5 July, 1862, c. 134, s. 1, v. 12, pp. 510, 511.)

Advisory committee for aeronautics was established, and its duties prescribed, by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 930).

Aircraft Board was established by act of October 1, 1917 (40 Stat., 296).

Assistant Secretary of the Navy is authorized by act of July 11, 1890 (26 Stat., 254), and is to "perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy or required by law." (Act Mar. 3, 1891, 26 Stat., 934.)

Boards, commissions, councils, etc., are not authorized to perform any work at the expense of appropriations made by Congress, unless the creation thereof has been authorized by law; no personal services from any executive department shall be employed by such boards, etc., nor expenses of members paid. (Act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat., 1027.)

Boards: The General Board was created by Navy Department General Order No. 544 of March 13, 1900. Its composition and duties were prescribed by Navy Regulations, 1913, Arts. R-104, 166, 167. It received statutory recognition in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 563 and 39 Stat., 581). As to precedence of members of General Board, see note to section 421, Revised Statutes, under "IV. Rank, Titles, and Precedence."

Bureau of Construction and Repair is to designate members of board to report cost, etc., of repairs to vessels (sec. 1538, R. S.), and to conduct work of investigating and determining the most suitable and desirable shapes and forms to be adopted for naval vessels, by means of model tank at navy yard, Washington, D. C. (Act June 10, 1896, 29 Stat., 372.) The Chief Constructor to be member of Aircraft Board. (Act Oct. 1, 1917, 40 Stat., 297.)

Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting was designated as Bureau of Equipment in annual appropriation acts commencing with the fiscal year 1892; provision was made for distribution of the duties, funds, and employees of the Bureau of Equipment among the other bureaus and offices of the Navy Department by naval appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1911-1914; and the Bureau of Equipment was abolished by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 408).

Bureau of Medicine and Surgery is to recommend Medical Corps officers for appointment to the regular Medical Corps (act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 344), and to detail expert as member of advisory board of hygiene laboratory (act July 1, 1902, sec. 5, 32 Stat., 713). Surgeon-General of the Navy is to be member of board to hear appeals from decision of Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to deleterious ingredients of imitation butter (act Aug. 2, 1886, sec. 14, 24 Stat., 212) and of filled cheese (act June 6, 1896, sec. 15, 29 Stat., 256).

Bureau of Provisions and Clothing was designated as Bureau of Supplies and Accounts by act of July 19, 1892 (27 Stat., 243, 245); it was required to keep property accounts of all supplies pertaining to the naval establishment and to make annual report thereof to Congress, by act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 817); to audit property returns from officers of the Navy and determine responsibility for losses, by act of March 29, 1894 (28 Stat., 47); to make annual report of receipts and expenditures to the Secretary of the Navy, by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 153); to cause payment of death gratuity to be made in cases of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps by act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 824); to receive quarterly returns of property from storekeeper at the Naval Academy, by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 153); to receive report of inspection and recommendation from general inspector of the Pay Corps, on accounts of storekeeper at the Naval Academy, by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 153); to pay witness fees in naval courts by act of February 16, 1909 (sec. 12, 35 Stat., 622); to audit accounts of ships' stores profits, by act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 619); and to keep money accounts so as to show direct and indirect charges incident to cost of work, and make annual report thereof to Congress, by act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267).

Bureau of Steam Engineering was designated as Bureau of Engineering by act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 828).

Bureau of Yards and Docks to have supervision of power plants at navy yards. (Act Apr. 27, 1904, 33 Stat., 337).

Bureaus in contracting for naval supplies shall be at liberty to reject bids of persons who have previously defaulted (sec. 3722, R. S.), and shall not contract for supplies in foreign country except after advertisement in New York (sec. 3723, R. S. See laws relating to contracts noted under sec. 418, R. S.).

Chief of Naval Operations, authorized by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 929), as amended by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 558), is charged, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, with the operations of the fleet and with the preparation and readiness of plans for its use in war; and is to succeed to duties of the Secretary of the Navy during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary.

Hydrographic Office was established by law as a part of the Bureau of Navigation, and its duties prescribed by Congress. (See secs. 431-433, R. S.)

Judge Advocate General's Office was established by act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164), amended by act June 5, 1896 (29 Stat., 251), the duties of the Judge Advocate General as prescribed by Congress being, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, to "receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and boards for the examination of officers for retirement and promotion in the naval service," and to "perform such other duties as have heretofore been performed by the solicitor and naval Judge Advocate General."

Nautical Almanac Office is provided for by section 436, Revised Statutes. (See note to that section as to consolidation of Nautical Almanac Office with the Naval Observatory.)

Naval Communications Office was established by appropriations contained in act of May 29, 1920 (41 Stat., 664).

Naval Intelligence Office was established by act February 24, 1899 (30 Stat., 874). See also General Order No. 292, March 23, 1882.

Naval Observatory is included in Title X, "The Department of the Navy," by section 434, Revised Statutes, and is included in the annual appropriations for the Navy Department in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act.

Naval Records and Library Office was established by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat., 1025), which consolidated appropriations made in previous years for "Library of the Navy Department" and "Office of Naval Records of the Rebellion."

Solicitor's Office was created by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of May 22, 1908 (35 Stat., 218), which transferred certain clerical positions from the office of the Judge Advocate General to the "office of the solicitor." The duties of the solicitor were not fixed by statute, except that he should "perform the duties of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of that officer"; which provision, however, was omitted from appropriation acts for the following years, and is not now in force. (See file 24690-774, Feb. 12, 21, 1908; file 25462-6, Apr. 22, 1909; file 3980-1450, Nov. 6, 1913; and file 22724-51.)

The Navy pay office at Washington is not one of the "bureaus and offices" of the Navy Department within the meaning of a contract to deliver ice to the Navy Department and its various bureaus and offices. (File 6482, July 26, 1904.)

The Marine Corps is not one of the bureaus of the Navy Department. It is a part of the Naval Establishment, but it is not a part of the Navy Department as established at the seat of government; it is under the supervision of an executive department, but that relation to the department is not the same as being a part of it. (11 Comp. Dec., 558; see also 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 487, and note to sec. 159, R. S.)

"The office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, while simply designated as an office, is, nevertheless, one of the coordinate branches of the Navy Department, with responsibilities of no less importance than those of the chiefs of bureaus." (S. Repts., vol. 2, 54th Cong., 1st sess., 1895-96, No. 472.)

"The office of Judge Advocate General is one of great responsibility and requires a high order of talent to successfully perform the duties thereof." (H. Repts., vol. 1, 54th Cong., 1st sess., 1895-96, No. 285.)

"Owing to the peculiar nature of the duties pertaining to the office of Judge Advocate General in the Navy Department, it seems to be absolutely necessary that the officer appointed to said office should be familiar with the law, forms and practice of courts-martial, the rules, regulations, and established customs of the Navy; that he should have practical experience in the naval service and an acquaintance with the application of the law and regulations to the rank, grades, ratings, and of the various classes of officers and enlisted men in the service, and that he should possess proper legal attainments to enable him to discharge satisfactorily the duties of that office." (H. Repts., vol. 2, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 1879-80, No. 459.)

The duties required to be performed by the Judge Advocate General "are among the most important branches of the public business which have been confided to the Navy Department." (H. Repts., vol. 2, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 1879-80, No. 459.)

The office of the naval solicitor, as it existed under the Department of Justice [sec. 349, R. S.], was unsuited to the requirements of the naval service. After that office was abolished [act June 19, 1878, 20 Stat., 205] and prior to the establishment of the office of Judge Advocate General [act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164], the necessity of having an officer of the service, possessing the necessary qualifications, to systematize the details of administration of law and justice in the Navy and perform the duties of Judge Advocate General was partially met by the detail of a suitable officer by the Secretary of the Navy to act in that capacity. But in view of the changes to which such office was subjected by their temporary assignments it was found important that Congress should fix the status of such officer by a provision for the Navy analogous to that which had long been established in the Army, except that the rank and pay of the Judge Advocate General of the Army are of a higher relative grade (brigadier general) than that given by law to the officer appointed to discharge similar duties as Judge Advocate General of the Navy (captain in the Navy or colonel in the Marine Corps). (H. Repts., vol. 2, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 1879-80, No. 459.)

The business which it was proposed to assign to the office of Judge Advocate General by the act of June 8, 1880, "consists of the records of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, boards for the examination of officers for retirement and promotion, the preparation of charges and specifications for courts-martial, the organization of courts and boards, the various claims filed for investigation, numerous questions of law, regulation, and other matters. The records of proceedings of the various courts and examining boards, many of them being voluminous, require careful reading and examination preliminary to action thereon by the Secretary. The claims filed for investigation and the questions of law and regulation arising in the department necessitate a thorough examination and consideration of the statutes, regulations, and established customs of the service relating thereto; and the business generally of the office being so extensive, it is impossible for the Secretary, in the midst of other varied and important duties required of him, to give to this branch of the public business the attention and consideration that its importance demands. * * * All other executive departments of the Government are provided by law with an officer to perform the duties therein similar to those required of the officer who may be appointed to the office of Judge Advocate General of the Navy." (H. Repts., vol. 2, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 1879-80, No. 459.)

The word "revise" as used in section 1199, Revised Statutes, prescribing the duties of the Judge Advocate General of the Army with respect to court-martial proceedings, implies no authority to reverse; it indicates the discharge of a clerical duty, analogous to that of receiving and recording the proceedings. (Ex parte Mason, 256 Fed. Rep., 384.)

The creation of a new bureau in a department can only be authorized by act of Congress, designating its chief, defining his duties, and providing for the appointment or transfer of the necessary clerical force and messenger. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 11, holding that the President was not authorized, without statutory enactment, to create a militia bureau in the War Department.)

Contracts for bureaus.—"The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts is the purchasing agent of the Navy Department for all supplies, and should be so recognized." (File 28233-1216, June 1, 1914.)

The law expressly authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to distribute the business of the department between the bureaus concerned in such manner as he deems fit. The Naval Instructions, 1913 (art. I-4651), provides that "all purchases and payments therefor shall be made under the direction of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and orders directing such purchases and payments shall be given only by that bureau. When open purchase requisitions have been approved by chiefs of bureau, they shall be transmitted to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts for action." It is also provided by the Navy Regulations, 1913 (art. R-4641), that "the word 'purchase,' when used in the Navy Regulations or Naval Instructions, shall be construed as relating * * * to the contract or agreement for the sale and delivery of any article or for the performance of any service * * *." Thus interpreted, as it must be, the above article of the Naval Instructions expressly provides that the "contract or agreement * * * for the performance of any service" shall be made under the direction of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and that "orders directing" such contract or agreement shall be given "only by that bureau." (File 3973-126, Mar. 31, 1916.)

The terms of naval contracts are settled by the administrative bureau; a requisition embodying the transaction is then sent to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, which prepares a formal contract in writing, in accordance with section 3744, Revised Statutes. The contract is made by the United States through the administrative bureau, and the formal contract will be reformed where, through clerical error in the requisition, it did not embody the agreed terms. (Ackerlind v. U. S., 240 U. S., 531, reversing Lind v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 635, and 12 Comp. Dec., 447.)

Duties of the various bureaus.—In the Navy, while the different bureaus and the manner of appointments of chiefs of bureaus are established by law, the descriptions and distribution of the duties performed in each bureau are left to the discretion and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President. The powers vested in the Secretary of the Navy are of more than usual extent. Thus, for instance, in the organization of the Army the statutes define the duties of the chiefs of bureaus (or departments, as they are styled), such as the Quartermaster, the Commissary, the Ordnance officers, etc. (Op. Atty. Gen., Oct. 27, 1909, file 3980-530.)

It is unquestionable that Congress has intended that the administration of affairs in the Navy should be through the bureaus created by the statutes now embodied in section 419, Revised Statutes. In isolated instances some of the duties of officers in one of the bureaus have been made the subject of statutory definition; but the business of the department "shall be distributed among these bureaus." This language is mandatory. The manner of the distribution is left to the discretion of the Secretary. The instrumentalities through which he performs the business are fixed by the statute. Having the power to make the regulations, he can repeal, modify, or alter them. Having the power to distribute the business, he can change the distribution and make new distribution. Subject to restrictions in the appropriation acts, he can take duties from one bureau and assign them to another bureau. (Op. Atty. Gen., Oct. 27, 1909, file 3980-530.)

Congress makes appropriations for the naval service in recognition of the distribution of duties under section 419. In the appropriation acts the moneys appropriated for expenses are placed under the headings of the different bureaus in conformity with the requirements of sections 430 and 3676, Revised Statutes. While, therefore, it is within the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to make any changes in the distribution of business that may seem to him expedient and proper, such authority must be exercised so as not to conflict with any act of Congress. (Op. Atty. Gen., Oct. 27, 1909, file 3980-530.)

The grant of power by Congress to distribute the business of the department, although general and extensive, must be considered in connection with other statutes in relation to the same subject matter. Thus, by the act of June 22, 1906, section 4 (34 Stat., 448), it is required that the annual estimates shall be prepared and submitted "according to the order and arrangement of the appropriation acts for the year preceding," and that "any changes in such order and arrangement and transfers of salaries from one office or bureau to another office or bureau, or the consolidation of offices or bureaus desired by the head of any executive department, may be submitted by note in the estimates." This provision does not interfere with the authority to redistribute the matters of administration or to transfer duties from one bureau to another, nor does it alter the manner of appropriations for the different bureaus. Indeed, it clearly recognizes the authority to change the duties of the several bureaus. But it also declares the manner in which changes in the appropriations shall be made. This applies to specific appropriations made for disbursements in the different bureaus. (Op. Atty. Gen., Oct. 27, 1909, file 3980-530. In this connection see act of Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1084, with respect to transfer of funds between bureaus and departments.)

Grouping of bureaus in "divisions."—The work of the Navy Department may be grouped under general divisions, each of which may include different bureaus; and in each division the Secretary of the Navy may detail an officer of the Navy as an "aid" to advise the Secretary on all matters pertaining to the duties of the division and to transmit orders of the Secretary to the various chiefs of bureaus and to other subordinates of the department, signing such orders "by direction of the Secretary of the Navy." However, such aids can not, individually or collectively, exercise any supervisory authority over the chiefs of bureaus. That is the exclusive province of the Secretary and can not be delegated by him. The authority of the aids to transmit orders "by direction of the Secretary" can not be considered as conferring authority to issue orders. This formula can not be used to warrant any independent action by the aids. The aids are merely the eyes and hands of the Secretary, and the grouping of the bureaus under divisions are merely convenient methods of enabling the Secretary to exercise his legal authority over them. (Op. Atty. Gen., Oct. 27, 1909, file 3980-530.)

If the plan involved the creation of new offices and the appointment of new officers to perform the business of the department, it would be beyond the power of the Secretary, with the approval of the President, to make such regulations. That work has been provided for by the establishment of the bureaus and the appointment by the President, under his constitutional power, of the officers to administer their duties. To assign those duties to other of-officers in other bureaus or boards would be to create new offices and new officers, which would be not authorized and in conflict with existing law. (Op. Atty. Gen., Oct. 27, 1909, file 3980-530.)

That officers detailed as aids under this plan can not by virtue of such detail perform the duties of the Secretary during the latter's absence, see note to section 179, Revised Statutes.

[The "aids" referred to above, namely "Aid for Operations," "Aid for Personnel," "Aid for Material," and "Aid for Inspections," were established by Changes in Navy Regulations No. 6, of November 18, 1909, and were abolished by Changes in Navy Regulations No. 5, of July 15, 1915.]

The Secretary of the Navy may perform any duties vested by law in the chief of a bureau during a temporary vacancy in such bureau chiefship. (File 22724-7e, May 14, 1909, and see 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 487.) But where a contract provides that the chief of a bureau may under certain conditions annul the same, the Secretary of the Navy, during the temporary absence of the bureau chief, has no authority to annul said contract. (Williams Eng. and Cont. Co., v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 349.)

Sec. 420. [Orders considered as emanating from Secretary.] The several Bureaus shall retain the charge and custody of the books of records and accounts pertaining to their respective duties; and all of the duties of the Bureaus shall be performed under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and their orders shall be considered as emanating from him, and shall have full force and effect as such.—(31 Aug., 1842, c. 286, s. 8, v. 5, p. 580; 5 July, 1862, c. 134. s. 4, v. 12, p. 511.)

See note to section 418 Revised Statutes, as to department's books, records, and property.

The orders of the Chief of Naval Operations shall be considered as emanating from the Secretary and shall have full force and effect as such. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558.)

The duties of the Judge Advocate General shall be performed under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164.)

Legal liability of chiefs of bureaus for official acts.—See note to section 417, Revised Statutes, "Legal liability of Secretary for official acts."

Orders issued by bureaus.—This statute does not mean to say that these bureaus, and the Secretary of the Navy in relation to them, are independent of the President. Of course the chief of the bureau does not profess to speak in the name of the President, but in that of the Secretary; yet his acts have legal effect as the acts of the President, represented, pro hac vice, by the Secretary of the Navy. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 453, 474; see also McGowan v. Moody, 22 App. D. C., 148, noted under sec. 158, R. S.)

It is well settled that the President may act through the heads of the different departments, and if the head of one of the executive departments acts it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he acted by direction of the President. But no such power has been delegated to other subordinate officers of the Government, whether civil or military, and the acts of such officers, without express authorization from the President or from Congress, are ineffectual for any purpose. Although the court will presume that the head of a department acts by direction of the President in the absence of evidence to the contrary, this presumption does not extend down the line to all civil and military officers of the Government, of whatever grade. (Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mitchell, 208 Fed. Rep., 469.)

In all the cases considered—and we are aware of no authority to the contrary—it will be noted that the power of the President was exercised through the head of the department and not by a subordinate. (Truitt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 404.)

The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation is not empowered to detach one member of a naval court-martial and substitute another without authority from the Secretary of the Navy who convened the court. Where this was done, the court was illegally constituted, and its judgment ought not to be enforced. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

Under this section, appointments issued by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation to officers in the naval auxiliary service have the same legal effect as if they had been signed by the Secretary of the Navy. (14 Comp. Dec., 334. But civilian employees of the bureaus and offices of the Navy Department must be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy or with his written approval, by express requirement of Art. 52, Naval Instructions, 1913, quoted under sec. 416, R. S.)

This statute gives full authority to the heads of the various bureaus, and to the acting heads thereof, when properly designated, to issue under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy all orders pertaining to the business of their respective bureaus with the same force and effect as though the orders were issued by the Secretary himself. Nor is it necessary that such orders should afterwards be approved by the Secretary, but only that they should be issued under his authority. It is understood that the Acting Secretary has lately directed that all orders signed by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation shall have the same force and effect as though signed by the Secretary. It may be doubted whether such an order was necessary, in view of the law and regulations defining the duties of that bureau; but supposing such specific authority necessary, this action on the part of the Acting Secretary would supply such authority. (9 Comp. Dec., 351.)

An order * * * issued by the Bureau of Navigation under authority of the Secretary of the Navy, directing an officer to perform a journey, is sufficient authority for him to perform the travel and to entitle him to mileage therefor, without the approval of the Secretary." (9 Comp. Dec., 351.)

The general rule that orders of the Bureau of Navigation have full force and effect as orders of the Secretary of the Navy has no application where the law specifically directs otherwise, and such special cases must be given effect as exceptions to the general rule. Thus where the law vests in the Secretary the exercise of personal judgment or discretion, or requires him personally to perform a certain duty he can not delegate to another the authority to exercise such judgment or discretion or designate another to perform the special duty which the law devolves upon him. (9 Comp. Dec., 351, citing 18 Op. Atty. Gen., 424, 432, and Reeside v. U. S., 2 Ct. Cls., 1.)

A statute, providing that where repeated travel between two or more points is performed by officers, "in such vicinity as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy is appropriate," he may direct that actual and necessary expenses only be allowed (act July 1, 1902, 32 Stat., 663), requires that the Secretary personally exercise his discretion in determining whether an allowance of expenses instead of mileage is appropriate, being limited in this respect to repeated journeys made between two or more places in such vicinity as he may decide upon. The decision of these questions can not be delegated to the head of a bureau of the Navy Department, nor to any one, but is imposed upon the Secretary himself. (9 Comp. Dec., 351.)

See cases noted under section 415, Revised Statutes, "Assistant Secretary of the Navy."

Appeals from chiefs of bureaus.—It is competent for Congress to give finality to the determination of subordinate administrative officers, provided due process of law, that is, a notice and a hearing, is provided (Orchard v. Alexander, 157 U. S., 372). Where Congress does not do this, the head of a department may change the erroneous decision of a subordinate (U. S. v. Cobb, 11 Fed. Rep., 76); and appeals may be taken to the head of the department because of his supervisory powers over the whole business of the department (Knight v. U. S. Land Assn., 142 U. S., 161). In such cases the appeal should be to the head of the department and not to the President. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 526.)

Sec. 421. [Chiefs of Bureaus.] The chiefs of the several Bureaus in the Department of the Navy shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the classes of officers mentioned in the next five sections respectively, or from officers having the relative rank of captain in the staff corps of the Navy, on the active list, and shall hold their offices for the term of four years.—(5 July, 1862, c. 134, ss. 1, 2, v. 12, p. 510; 3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 10, v. 16, p. 537.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1006), by changing the words "the relative rank of" to read "the rank of."

Assistants to chiefs of bureaus are specifically provided for by the following laws: Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, section 1375 Revised Statutes. Bureau of Navigation, act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 717). Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, acts of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 132); March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1038); and February 25, 1903 (32 Stat., 890). Bureau of Ordnance, act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 373). Bureau of Steam Engineering, act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1111). Bureau of Yards and Docks, Bureau of Construction and Repair, Office of the Judge Advocate General, and Office of Chief of Naval Operations, act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 558).

Judge Advocate General is to be appointed "from the officers of the Navy or the Marine Corps." (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164.)

Pay of chiefs of bureaus was fixed by section 1565, Revised Statutes, as highest pay of grade to which they belong, not below that of commodore; the act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), provided that they should receive the same pay and allowances as a brigadier-general in the Army; the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), provided that their pay and allowances "shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, and not below that of rear admiral of the lower nine;" the act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607), provided that their pay and allowances should be the highest shore-duty pay and allowances of the rear admiral of the lower nine; and the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), repealed the provision of the act of June 24, 1910, without making any further provision on the subject. [Act of May 13, 1908, was revived by the law last quoted. Comp. Dec., June 22, 1916, file 26254-2045.] By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department are to receive the same pay and allowances as chiefs of bureaus in the War Department.

Pay of Chief of Naval Operations shall be $10,000 per annum (act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558); and he shall have such allowances as are or may be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for the grade of General in the Army. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 716.)

Pay of Judge Advocate General was the highest pay of a captain in the Navy or the pay and allowances of a colonel in the Marine Corps under the act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164), as amended by act of June 5, 1896 (29 Stat., 251); by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), he is to receive the same pay and allowances as the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

Rank of chiefs of bureaus was fixed as commodore by sections 1471 and 1472, Revised Statutes; the act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), provided that they should have rank of rear admiral, if below that grade; the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), gave them rank corresponding to that of chiefs of bureaus in the War Department.

Rank of Judge Advocate General was that of captain in the Navy or colonel in the Marine Corps, under the act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164), as amended by act of June 5, 1896 (29 Stat., 251); by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), he is given rank corresponding to that of the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

Rank of Chief of Naval Operations is that of Admiral. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558.)

Retirement of Chiefs of the Bureaus of Medicine and Surgery, Supplies and Accounts, Steam Engineering [now Engineering] and Construction and Repair, with rank of commodore [now rear admiral], if retired for age or length of service, was authorized by section 1473, Revised Statutes.

Retirement of any officer who shall serve as chief of a bureau "and shall subsequently be retired," with "the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such bureau chief," was authorized by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128).

Retirement.—Chiefs of bureaus eligible for retirement after 30 years' service were entitled to the permanent rank, title, and emoluments of a chief of bureau, while on the active list, the same as they would have received if retired for age or length of service. (Act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 607.) This provision was repealed by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), which contained a proviso that no officer who had received the benefits of the act of 1910 should be deprived thereof on account of such repeal.

Retirement of Chief of Naval Operations shall be with the lineal rank and retired pay to which he would be entitled if not so serving. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558.)

Service.—Any officer with the rank of rear admiral who has heretofore served a full term and is now serving as chief of any bureau of the Navy Department shall be credited with service for all purposes as provided by section 1486 of the Revised Statutes, and nothing herein contained shall operate to increase the rank or pay of any such officer as now authorized by law. (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 140.)

Staff officers who have served a full term as chief of bureau were thereafter exempted from sea duty, except in time of war, by section 1436, Revised Statutes.

Titles of Chiefs of Bureaus of Medicine and Surgery, Supplies and Accounts, Steam Engineering [now Engineering], and Construction and Repair, shall be Surgeon-General, Paymaster General, Engineer in Chief, and Chief Constructor, respectively. (Sec. 1471, R. S.)

VI. RETIREMENT OF CHIEFS OF BUREAUS.

VII. ASSISTANTS TO CHIEFS OF BUREAUS.

I. APPOINTMENT OF CHIEFS OF BUREAUS.

Who may be appointed chiefs of bureaus.—The act of July 5, 1862, reorganizing the Navy Department (12 Stat., 510), established eight bureaus therein, and in the second section made the following provisions with respect to the appointment of chiefs: "The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint from the list of officers of the Navy, not below the grade of commander, a chief for each of the Bureaus of Yards and Docks, Navigation, Equipment and Recruiting, and of Ordnance, and shall in like manner appoint a chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, who shall be a skillful naval constructor; and shall also appoint a chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, who shall be a skillful engineer, and be selected from the list of chief engineers of the Navy; and shall also appoint a chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, who shall be selected from the list of surgeons of the Navy; and a chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, who shall be selected from the list of paymasters of the Navy of not less than ten years standing."

The subsequent act of March 3, 1871, which prescribes the number, rank, and pay of the officers of the various staff corps of the Navy, contained near the close of the tenth section the following proviso (sec. 10, chap. 117, 16 Stat., 537): "And provided further, That chiefs of bureaus may be appointed from the officers having the relative rank of captain in the staff corps of the Navy on the active list."

The commissioners who drafted the Revised Statutes treated the act of 1871, not as superseding but as supplementing the act of 1862, and enlarging the power of the President with respect to the appointment of chiefs, so they brought the two together in section 421, with this explanation (Commissioner's Draft Rev. Stats., p. 235):

"The Commissioners have treated the act of 1871, cited in the margin, not as repealing or superseding the restrictions in the act of 1862 on the appointment of chiefs of bureaus, but as giving an alternative or optional power of appointment; so that the President may make a given appointment either from the class indicated by the act of 1862 or from that indicated by the act of 1871, as he judges best."

Congress adopted the revision as recommended, thus giving its apparent approval to the interpretation placed on the acts of 1862 and 1871 by the commissioners. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 47; see also note to section 422, R. S.)

on the active list, the clause, "on the active list," being separated from the other clauses by commas, and therefore qualifying them all. Without the commas, the words "on the active list" apply to appointments from the staff corps only. The original statutes which are consolidated in section 421 restricted appointments to the active list, only where made from the staff corps. The change in the law, if made, rests, therefore, upon the mere insertion of a comma in the revision. Where doubt exists as to the meaning of a section of the Revised Statutes, it is admissible in construction to seek light in the history of the legislation. Also, a construction that the revision amends the law is not favored. Nor is a construction favored which is restrictive of the right of selection in making appointments. Accordingly, held, while not free from doubt, that a retired line officer is eligible for appointment as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. (File 21-5, Dec. 11, 1907, Opinion of Solicitor. See also 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 47, noted above.)

The statute authorizing the employment of retired officers on active duty would not empower the Secretary of the Navy to order a retired officer to perform the duty of Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. Doubtless, however, such statute should be liberally construed, and, in so far as it has any bearing on the matter, its obvious purpose was to enlarge the eligibility of retired officers for active duty. The intention of Congress in passing it was to make retired officers generally available for whatever active duty they were able to perform. (File 21-5, Dec. 11, 1907, opinion of Solicitor.)

The selection of the Judge Advocate General is not limited to the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps, but may be made from the retired list as well, since officers on the retired list come within the description of "officers" within the meaning of the act authorizing the appointment to be made. (8 Comp. Dec., 895.)

Retired officer not eligible.—Retired officers are not eligible for appointment as chiefs of bureaus, since section 421 in terms requires that bureau chiefs shall be appointed from officers on the active list. This requirement is not modified by the subsequent statute with respect to the assignment of retired officers to active duty, since by such assignment officers are not in fact placed on the active list, but are merely detailed for the performance of active duty. (See file 21, Nov. 25, 1902, Op. J. A. G.)

The construction placed upon the law by the department, in its practice, is against the eligibility of retired officers for appointment as chiefs of bureaus. Officers so serving have, during their terms of office, been retired without vacating their positions; but it is understood that no officers on the retired list, during the past 15 years at least, have been selected to act as chiefs of bureaus. (File 21-5, Dec. 11, 1907, Opinion of Solicitor.)

It would seem that under the laws authorizing the assignment of retired naval officers to active duty, the Secretary of the Navy is not authorized to assign a retired officer to duty as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department in case of a vacancy, when the officer is below the required grade as fixed by sections 421-426, Revised Statutes. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 489.)

As to effect of retirement upon status of officer serving as chief of bureau, see below under "VI. Retirement of Chiefs of Bureaus."

Temporary vacancies.—A naval officer assigned to duty as an assistant to the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department is not authorized by section 178, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the incumbent, to perform the duties of such chief until a successor is appointed or the absence or sickness shall cease, unless the appointment of such assistant is specifically provided for by statute. In determining who is to act in the place of a chief of bureau during his absence, section 178, Revised Statutes, is to be read in connection with the laws which make provision for the appointment of officers in the bureaus of the Navy Department. Where the highest officer recognized by statute after the chief of the bureau is the chief clerk in such bureau, the latter succeeds to the duties of the chief during a temporary absence unless otherwise directed by the President in accordance with section 179, Revised Statutes. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 503.)

Officers who hold commissions in the naval service issued by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but do not hold any office in the Navy Department or in a bureau by such appointment of the President after confirmation by the Senate, can not be legally designated by the President to act as chiefs of bureaus, under section 179, Revised Statutes, in the absence of the incumbents. Accordingly, an officer of the Navy detailed as assistant to the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, but whose appointment as such assistant is not specifically provided for by statute, is not eligible for designation by the President, under section 179, Revised Statutes, to act as chief of bureau in the latter's absence. There is no more authority to authorize such an officer to perform the duties of the vacant office than there is to authorize any officer of the Navy not connected directly with the business of the department. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 95.)

During a vacancy in the office of chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, the Secretary or Acting Secretary of the Navy may sign mail requiring the signature of the chief of bureau. (File 22724-7c, May 14, 1909; see also 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 487, noted under sec. 179, R. S.; compare Williams Eng. and Cont. Co. v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 349.)

A vacancy caused by the retirement of the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department can not be temporarily filled by the President under sections 178-181, Revised Statutes. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 177-182, Revised Statutes.

II. TERM OF OFFICE.

Commencement of term.—The four-year term of office of a chief of bureau commences on the date of his confirmation by the Senate. (10 Comp. Dec., 56.)

"Where a new commission is accepted, it supersedes the old one; and the four years prescribed by law as the official term of the appointee must commence to run from its date."

(2 Op. Atty. Gen., 333. This related to the appointment of a Navy agent, which was for the term of four years under laws then in force, the same as chiefs of bureau.)

The law, of course, controls special language in the nomination and confirmation. Section 421, Revised Statutes, makes the term of a chief of bureau four years from the appointment with the consent of the Senate. The term during which he served under a temporary appointment was, by law, a different term from that which commenced when he was appointed with the consent of the Senate. Accordingly, where an officer was commissioned as chief constructor in April, 1878, after confirmation by the Senate, "from April 28, 1877," having previously served under a recess appointment, held that notwithstanding the special wording of the nomination and the confirmation by the Senate, the term of office of the appointee as prescribed by section 421, Revised Statutes, must be deemed to begin from the date of his appointment, namely, in April, 1878, and not from "April 28, 1877," the date specified in the nomination. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 656.)

"The fiction familiar to lawyers under the phrase nunc pro tunc [now for then] has no application in cases of appointments to office. Such executive action cannot, in the nature of things, operate by relation. Especially must that be so where, as here, the office during one portion of the very time to which the regular appointment and commission are made to relate had been occupied by the appointee under another competent appointment and commission, and during a second portion had been occupied by others in due course of law." (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 656.)

Nominations to take effect from past dates are familiar in the naval service, but these are made under statutes relating to promotions, to fill vacancies occurring in due course, which are not applicable to the appointment of an officer as chief of bureau. (File 21-5, Dec. 11, 1907.)

Where a chief of bureau retired while serving under an ad interim commission, held that, if such retirement rendered him ineligible for regular appointment by and with the advice and consent of the Senate [as to which point see cases noted above], the difficulty could not be overcome by wording the nomination to take effect from a prior date when he was on the active list and when his ad interim commission as chief of bureau took effect. (File 21-5, Dec. 11, 1907.)

Expiration of term.—"The chief of a bureau in the Navy Department can not lawfully hold over after the expiration of the term for which he was appointed. The general rule is that where Congress has not authorized the officer to hold over, his incumbency must be deemed to cease at the end of his term, though no appointment of a successor may then be made." (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 648; see also Romero v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 331.)

There is nothing in section 421 nor in any other of which I am aware which confers authority upon the incumbent of the office of chief of bureau to continue therein after the expiration of his term; and I am of opinion that in the absence of a statutory provision conferring it, such authority does not exist. Congress has in terms provided that certain officers whose appointments are for a definite term shall hold until their successors are appointed and qualified (see, for example, secs. 1841, 1843, 1875, and 1876, R. S., concerning certain appointments in Territories); from which it is plainly to be inferred that officers not thus authorized can not lawfully hold over: "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius"—the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 648, citing U. S. v. Eckford's Executors, 1 How., 250, and 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 262, 263.)

Chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department do not hold over after expiration of the term of office for which they were appointed. In the draft of a proposed new revision of the statutes, the revisers added to section 421 the provision, "or until their successors are appointed and qualified," explaining that this addition was made in view of the opinion of the Attorney General above cited; but of course these words are not yet incorporated into the statute. Accordingly, where the term of the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department expires while the Senate is not in session, a recess commission should appropriately be issued, filling the vacancy thus created. (File 21-3, Nov. 13, 1907, Opinion of Solicitor. As to inherent power of President to fill temporary vacancies, see notes to secs. 177 and 181, R. S.)

Removal by President.—The President has the power, without the concurrence of the Senate, to remove an officer (United States attorney) who was appointed for a fixed term, prior to the expiration of such term. (Parsons v. U. S., 167 U. S., 324; for other cases, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 2.)

As to trial by court-martial, see below, "III. Status of Chiefs of Bureaus."

III. STATUS OF CHIEFS OF BUREAUS.

Not civil offices.—It is very clear that the office of Secretary of the Navy is a civil office. Congress has not attempted to confine the appointing power to any class or profession in choosing the incumbent for that position. But this can not be said of the several bureaus of the Navy Department, the chiefs of which must be appointed from certain classes of officers of the Navy. When, therefore, it is said that these offices are civil, it must be shown satisfactorily why it was that Congress denied the appointing power the same range of selection in filling them as in filling the office of Secretary of the Navy and civil offices generally. It is quite clear to me that if Congress had intended to make the several bureaus of the Navy Department civil offices, it would have provided for the appointment of civilians to fill them, and not frustrated its purpose to secure the benefits of a civil administration by declaring that these offices should be filled by naval officers exclusively. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 176.)

Rank, title, pay, and retirement are the indicia of military, not civil, officers. No statute directly or indirectly classes these bureau chiefs as civilians, and it does not appear that they have ever been so regarded in the department. Giving them a dual character, civil and military, might not only lead to confusion and inconvenience in the department, but deprive the chiefs themselves of some advantages secured to them by the opposite practice. (Smith v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 143.)

Trial by court-martial.—"Under every system of military law, for the government of either land or naval forces, the jurisdiction of courts-martial extends to the trial and punishment of acts of military or naval officers which tend to bring disgrace and reproach upon the service of which they are members, whether those acts are done in the performance of military duties, or in a civil position, or in a social relation, or in private business." (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 168, 183.)

The Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the Navy department is amenable to the jurisdiction of a naval court-martial upon charges and specifications preferred against him for acts done as such chief. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 176; see also Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564.)

The chief of a bureau (Paymaster General), may be removed from that office by sentence of court-martial. (Smith v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 143; see also Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 181.)

"As to the case of staff bureau officers whose service has not been creditable and who have been guilty of misconduct or malfeasance in office, the law and practice provide for that case. Such an officer would be relieved of his duties, or, depending upon the seriousness of the offense, would be court-martialed. And section 1446, Revised Statutes, provides that no officer of the Navy shall be placed on the retired list because of misconduct, but he shall be brought to trial by court-martial for such misconduct." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294, 298.)

The office of chief of bureau is a military one, to the extent that its incumbent is amenable to trial by court-martial. (5 Comp. Dec., 822.)

The Judge Advocate General of the Army may be tried by court-martial and suspended from rank and duty pursuant to the sentence of such court. (Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173; 165 U. S., 553; see also note to sec. 179, R. S.)

Dual status of bureau chiefs.—The law requires the President to appoint chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department from the list of officers in the Navy. Compliance with this law certainly could not have the effect to withdraw the appointed officer from that list, or to deprive him of the rank or pay to which he was or might become entitled by law. Such a result would involve injustice too gross to be imputed to Congress. The act limited the selection to naval officers, not below a certain grade, for the purpose of securing at the head of the bureaus named, the skill and experience of prolonged service. But nothing could be more unjust, indeed, more absurd, than to deprive the Navy of officers who possessed these qualities, by transferring them to positions which, under the law, they could hold but four years, when, if not reappointed, they would be retired from the public service altogether. The law has no such operation. It simply means that the officers appointed shall, for the term specified, be assigned to these positions, and it implies no withdrawal from the list of officers, and no loss of rank or pay. If the officer so assigned receive less pay by virtue of his rank in the Navy than the salary provided by the law for the chief of bureau, he is entitled to draw the latter salary in lieu of his pay. But if his naval pay exceed the salary of the office, he is not bound to accept the latter and relinquish the former. If he be a rear admiral, he is entitled to the pay allotted by the law to the class of service he renders. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 377; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337; Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3.)

The appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of a naval officer to be Chief of the Bureau of Navigation is an investiture of him with an additional office. While Chief of the Bureau of Navigation he remains a captain in the Navy. By virtue of the former office, his orders have the force and effect of an order emanating from the Secretary of the Navy, and while he continues to hold said office he has the higher rank attached thereto by law. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154; see also, as to Chief of Bureau of Steam Engineering, 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 340.)

A naval officer by accepting the office of Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering did not vacate the office and grade he already held of captain. His appointment as chief of bureau invested him with an additional office and an additional rank. His status "while holding said office" was that of an officer of the line of the Navy of the grade of captain, with the additional rank of rear admiral and the additional office of Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering. (15 Comp. Dec., 860, citing 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154, and 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 378.)

An officer appointed to be chief of one of the Navy bureaus is in effect detailed to perform shore duty, retaining during the period of his incumbency his regular rank and grade on the Navy Register, and also filling the post of chief of bureau with the rank and emoluments incidental thereto. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 341, citing 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 378, 379.)

A chief of bureau in the Navy Department is, therefore, an incumbent of two offices. First, he is an officer of the Navy holding in this case the rank of captain; second, he had been detailed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to hold the office of chief of bureau, with the rank of rear admiral for a period of four years. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 341.)

For other cases see below, "IV. Rank, Titles, and Precedence," and particularly Opinion of Attorney General, March 15, 1911 (file 22724-16:3) noted under "Rank of chiefs of bureaus."

Office of chief of bureau not a "grade" in the Navy.—While the office of chief of bureau is a military one, to the extent that its incumbent is amenable to trial by court-martial, the office itself does not constitute a grade in the Navy. The next higher "grade" referred to in section 11 of the Navy personnel act (Mar. 3, 1899, 30 Stat., 1007) is one of the different gradations in the line of the Navy or in the several staff corps, and does not include the office of chief of bureau. (5 Comp. Dec., 822.)

The grade to which an officer belongs, under section 1457, Revised Statutes, while holding the office of Chief of the Bureau of Navigation is that of captain, which in this case was his regular grade in the line, and not that of the rank incidental to his temporary occupation of another and distinct office. For it is by virtue of his office of captain, and not of chief of bureau, that he is entitled to examination for promotion and that he is entitled or subject to retirement. It may be further remarked that, within the language of section 1457, he "continues to be borne on the Navy Register" as captain, and that the moment he ceases to be chief of bureau he loses his temporary rank incident to that office. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154.)

That Congress regards the grade to which the bureau chief belongs as something different from the position of chief of bureau is further evidenced by the provisions of the naval appropriation act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), that "the pay and allowances of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, and not below that of rear admiral of the lower nine." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 383; 15 Comp. Dec., 860.)

As I have heretofore pointed out, the office of chief of bureau in the Navy Department is not designated in the acts of Congress as a grade. On the contrary, in section 421 of the Revised Statutes it is called an "office," and in section 1471 a "position"; by section 1471 the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair has the "title" of Chief Constructor. Under the act of March 3, 1899, the incumbent, if an officer below the rank of rear admiral, has that "rank" while holding the office. The office of Chief Constructor was not formerly a grade in the Navy, and was not made such because the rank, title, and emoluments of the incumbent, theretofore temporary, were made permanent by the act of June 24, 1910 [now repealed]. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 526, citing 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 379. See also file 5038-19, Feb. 29, 1912.)

Neither, in my opinion, was the honorary "rank" of rear admiral, which he held as an incident to his occupation of the office of chief of bureau, a "grade" within the meaning of the act of June 7, 1900. (31 Stat., 703, reenacted, with modifications, by act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329.) The grade from which he was retired, within the meaning of said act, was therefore that of captain. (15 Comp. Dec., 860.)

Office held to be a grade.—Section 1457, Revised Statutes, which occurs in a chapter of law relating to retired officers of the Navy in general, although perhaps especially contemplating the line, provides that officers retired from active service shall be placed on the retired list of officers of the grade to which they belonged, respectively, at the time of their retirement, and continue to be borne on the Navy Register. Grade here appears to mean rank in the line, or by relation to the line—using rank and grade interchangeably, as those words sometimes are used, and not as indicating an officer's number in a particular grade. Section 1471 speaks of the headship of a bureau as a "position"; section 1472 as an office; section 1473 again as a position; and the Navy Regulations, incorporating the statutes and adding to them administrative details, use both terms. I think, however, that grade may include such staff officers, and may mean in an untechnical sense and by a certain equity, the highest post to the rank and title of which an officer has attained upon his retirement, and that section 1457 fairly includes the office or position of Paymaster General. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294; disapproved, 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376.)

By the use of the word "grade" Congress intended to indicate any marked distinction fixed by law among officers which would be expressed in their commission, title, or pay, not excluding chiefs of bureaus having a certain rank. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, 515.)

For other cases, see below, "VI. Retirement of Chiefs of Bureaus."

IV. RANK, TITLES, AND PRECEDENCE.

Rank of chiefs of bureaus.—The Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), provides that "when the office of chief of bureau is filled by an officer below the rank of rear-admiral, said officer shall, while holding said office, have the rank of rear-admiral." Similar provisions were previously contained in sections 1471 and 1472, Revised Statutes, except that the rank of bureau chiefs was there fixed as the "relative rank" of commodore instead of the actual rank of rear admiral.

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department, including the Judge Advocate General, shall while so serving have corresponding rank as prescribed by law for chiefs of bureaus of the War Department and the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

Of course, it is not to be doubted that the advanced rank and pay attached to service as a bureau chief ceases when the term of service is over and other active service resumed. The former relative rank pro tempore, the present actual rank, are only while holding said position; and no doubt a corollary to be drawn from this is that the title falls also if and when an officer returns from active service in the bureau to active service in his corps. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294; other portions of this opinion were disapproved in 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376.)

The moment an officer ceases to be chief of bureau he loses his temporary rank incident to that office. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154.)

In the opinion of the department, where the law creates an office with a fixed term and confers upon the holder of that office a certain rank during his occupancy thereof, the rank thus conferred ends for all purposes and in all respects with the term of the office, except as otherwise provided by law. When the terms of office held by the chiefs of bureaus to which the rank of rear admiral was by statute annexed have ended, with them have ended the accompanying rank. Without a new appointment the officers holding these positions would return to their respective ranks in the line or staff of the Navy, and their ranks there would be affected in no way by the fact that they had, as an incident of service in the bureaus, temporarily enjoyed a higher rank. All the force and effect of their commissions as chief of bureau have been expended when the term of office ends, and unless reappointed they would hold only effective and living commissions as officers of their regular grade in the Navy. (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902.)

"In the course of my investigation it has appeared that upon the appointment of Rear-Admiral Taylor on the 29th day of April, 1902, as chief of the Bureau of Navigation, a commission was issued to him as such 'with the rank of rear-admiral from the 29th day of April 1902.' This commission was erroneously expressed, as the provision of the 'Personnel Act' which gives the rank of rear-admiral to the chiefs of bureaus while holding such office is applicable only in case the 'office is filled by an officer below the rank of rear-admiral.' As at the time Rear-Admiral Taylor was not an officer within the description of the act, it had no effect upon his rank and his commission as chief of the Bureau of Navigation should not have attempted to confer upon him a rank which he already possessed independently of the statute." (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902; see also 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 557.)

The Navy personnel act changed the rank of chiefs of bureaus from the "relative rank of commodore" to the "rank of rear-admiral." New commissions were issued to those holding the offices of chiefs of bureaus at the time of the passage of this act, for the unexpired portions of the terms for which they had been appointed, "with the rank of rear-admiral." It may well be doubted whether these commissions were not entirely superfluous. They were not of such character as to amount to new appointments or reappointments. The chiefs of bureaus were already appointed to their positions for a period of four years, and the new rank which they enjoyed came not by virtue of any new appointment or commission but was annexed to their office by statute law. (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902; see also file 22724-33, Aug. 22, 1916; 22 Op. Atty. Gen., 480. As to whether officers should be given new commissions when merely advanced in rank, without change in office or grade, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3.)

An officer of the Navy or Marine Corps serving as Judge Advocate General has actual rank as a captain in the Navy or a colonel in the Marine Corps. His rank while he holds this office is not an assimilated rank, but an actual rank. His rank is a fact, not a courtesy. (Remey v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 218; 8 Comp. Dec., 895.)

The act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607) [repealed by act Aug. 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328)], provided that "all officers of the Navy who are now serving or shall hereafter serve as chief of bureau in the Navy Department, and are eligible for retirement after thirty years service, shall have, while on the active list, the rank, title and emoluments of a chief of bureau, in the same manner as is already provided by statute law for such officers upon retirement by reason of age or length of service, and such officers after thirty years service shall be entitled to and shall receive new commissions in accordance with the rank and title hereby conferred." Under this law a naval officer who was a bureau chief in the Navy Department, and who attained 30 years' service, thereby becoming eligible for retirement, was entitled to retain the rank, pay, and emoluments of such bureau chief on the active list if he then resigned or was removed from his position of bureau chief and returned to general service. This is the only interpretation which can give force and effect to all the language used. For if the intention had been to confer this "rank, title, and emoluments" only during the continuance of such officer as chief of bureau, this provision as to continuance would have been quite unnecessary; for the rank, title, and emoluments would, of course, continue unless otherwise provided by law so long as the officer continued in such office, and the other provisions would have meant precisely the same without this clause as with it. The only possible effect of that clause is to continue, as it plainly does, such rank, title, and emoluments during the time that the officer remains on the active list of the Navy, whether as bureau chief or otherwise. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 429; quoted in 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 529; and Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3.) [The officers who received permanent commissions under this act prior to its repeal and who were not affected by such repeal were Rear Admiral R. F. Nicholson, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Chief Constructor Washington L. Capps, Paymaster General Eustace B. Rogers (File 22724-18), and Paymaster General Thomas J. Cowie.]

Where the officer was serving as chief of bureau on June 24, 1910, and then had 30 years' service, he is entitled to a permanent commission from the date of the act. (Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3.)

A rear admiral of the senior nine, serving as chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, should not be given another commission under the act of June 24, 1910, as he already had the permanent rank of rear admiral, and that act did not, therefore, confer any rank upon him. Also, the law should not be construed so as to require the doing of a futile or useless thing. (Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3.)

The chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, upon completion of 30 years' service, is entitled under the act of June 24, 1910, to a permanent commission with the rank of rear admiral, and not commodore. (Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3.)

Where an officer was serving as chief of bureau on June 24, 1910, and then had 30 years' service, he is entitled to a permanent commission from the date of the act, although before such commission was issued he was retired. Under these circumstances a commission under the act of June 24, 1910, may be issued nunc pro tunc, and confirmation by the Senate is not required. (File 22724-18, Dec. 4, 6, 1911, and Jan. 3, 1912.)

The purpose of the act of 1910 quite clearly was to extend to chiefs of bureaus becoming eligible for retirement the same privileges as under the prior law they could claim upon actual retirement. This affords an adequate motive for and explanation of the new legislation; and it serves to show at once that the act of 1910 had a logical and important purpose. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 531.)

The sole purpose of the act of June 24, 1910, was to make permanent the rank, title, and emoluments of an officer serving as chief of bureau, who had become eligible for retirement by reason of age or length of service, but who preferred to remain on the active list. Accordingly, the passage of said act and the issuing of a permanent commission thereunder to the Chief Constructor, did not operate to create a new grade in the Construction Corps. No vacancy was created thereby in the grade of naval constructor nor in the total number of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors provided by law. Since the office of chief of bureau was not a grade prior to the time the incumbent became eligible to retirement after 30 years' service, it would seem necessarily to follow that the mere issuance of another commission "in accordance with the rank and title" theretofore conferred, and the making permanent of such theretofore temporary rank, title, and emoluments, would not have the effect of making it a grade. To hold otherwise would operate to increase to that extent the Naval Establishment, although there is no indication of such an intention on the part of Congress in the language of the statute. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 526; followed in case of line officer serving as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3.)

A line officer serving as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation continues in his regular grade, that of captain, notwithstanding the issuance to him of a permanent commission with the rank of rear admiral in accordance with the act of June 24, 1910. Accordingly, when he is reached in regular course for promotion to the grade of rear admiral, he must qualify physically and professionally prior to such promotion. (Op. Atty. Gen., Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3.)

The only way to give effect to the law of June 24, 1910, as construed by the Attorney General, is to hold that its result was to make permanent the dual status formerly occupied temporarily by the officer serving as Chief Constructor at the head of the Bureau of Construction and Repair. Accordingly, held that such officer continued to hold his regular place in the grade of naval constructor, although at the same time enjoying the rank, title, and emoluments of Chief Constructor under a permanent commission. (File 5038-19, Feb. 29, 1912.)

Titles of chiefs of bureaus.—Unless the numerous laws which have established the offices of the service or subsequently affected them, positively affix or altogether prohibit the titles which it is claimed or suggested should be used by chiefs of bureaus, the matter is subject to the administrative settlement of the Secretary of the Navy, and does not involve legal questions upon which the Attorney General may render an opinion. That is to say, the only proper inquiry for the Attorney General is whether, and how far, a rule has been laid down by the statutes which restrains the disposition of the subject by Executive order or department regulation and usage. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122.)

Section 1471, Revised Statutes, as amended, provides that the Chiefs of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Supplies and Accounts, Steam Engineering [now Engineering], and Construction and Repair, "shall have, respectively, the title of Surgeon-General, Paymaster-General, Engineer-in-Chief, and Chief Constructor." The titles thus fixed by statute were not affected by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1005), providing that "when the office of chief of bureau is filled by an officer below the rank of rear-admiral, said officer shall, while holding said office, have the rank of rear-admiral," for the same act provided that it should not be construed "as changing the titles of officers in the staff corps of the Navy." The bureaus named in section 1471 are the staff bureaus of the Navy, under the existing organization, excepting that the Engineer Corps (steam engineering) has now been transferred to the line by the personnel act of 1899. Accordingly, held that the titles of the existing staff bureaus are positively fixed by section 1471, Revised Statutes, and are unchanged by the later legislation of March 3, 1899. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122. See note to sec. 422, R. S., as to "line" and "staff" bureaus as now existing.)

"Nor is it necessary to discuss and consider the distinctions between 'rank,' 'grade,' and 'title,' which are different aspects or attributes of office. It is sufficient to say that the terms bespeak relations and functions of the thing, and are not to be confounded; and that a statute which confers upon an officer the rank and pay of another grade does not, also, necessarily confer the title." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122, 123.)

Respecting bureaus which, though aiding in central administration, are not technically of the staff, and respecting line officers serving as chiefs of those bureaus, and respecting the special case of the Judge Advocate General, in all these cases the law lays down no explicit rule relative to titles, and hence in those situations and aspects the subject may and should be disposed of by Executive order, or Navy regulations and usage, paying due regard to such logical inferences or necessary effect respecting staff titles in general as the Secretary of the Navy may deem to be derivable from the statutes. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122; affirmed 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

"The post of Paymaster-General is an office known immemorially in the military service, with as definite, if not as technical, status as regards rank, grade, and title as any office of the line. 'Paymaster-General of the forces,' is a historical phrase, applied either to land or sea forces, not restricted to a particular force in the field or at sea, and not to be narrowed to the conception of a mere detail in administration, so as to strip the name of a certain independent rank and dignity as a definite office." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294, 295.)

"It seems certain that military usage universally recognizes that the highest legal rank which an officer attains marks the title accorded to him in practice for all purposes of courtesy and etiquette." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294, 295.)

The head of a department for his own purposes as such has authority to designate bureaus and offices therein and to cause his subordinates to designate them in official communications by names other than those theretofore borne by such offices. There is no statute or rule of law which forbids the employment of certain names in such cases, where the head of the department considers that new relations acquired by such branches of business under a reorganization of his department so requires. Congress has not seen fit to so hamper a coordinate branch of the Government. Its own use of names is not such a prohibition. There is no legal objection to the employment of two names or many names for the same object nor will it be "inconsistent with law" for the head of the department under section 161, Revised Statutes, to make use of other names than those used by Congress. Names are ordinarily free for the person speaking or writing to choose. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 697).

"The chiefs of the Bureaus of Medicine and Surgery, Supplies and Accounts, Engineering, Construction and Repair, and Yards and Docks, while holding these offices, shall have, respectively, the title of Surgeon General of the Navy, Paymaster General of the Navy, Engineer in Chief of the Navy, Chief Constructor of the Navy, and Chief of Civil Engineers of the Navy. Each such chief of bureau, however, shall be addressed and designated by the title of his rank, in written communications the title of his office to be stated next after his name." (Art. 152, Navy Regs., 1920; see also Art. R.-1006 (2) Navy Regs. 1913, as amended by C. N. R. 12, Sept. 12, 1918.)

See section 1471, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Precedence of chiefs of bureaus.—Chiefs of bureaus should sign papers, where joint signatures are necessary, in order of their seniority in the service, and not in order of the seniority of bureaus. "While the question is, perhaps, not of grave importance, the department considers that, since it has been raised, it must be held that the rule universally governing in military organizations, that papers should be signed in order of rank, must prevail." (File 6417, Feb. 18, 1907, re precedence of Chiefs of Bureaus of Construction and Repair, and Steam Engineering.)

The precedence of a chief of bureau is determined by the date of the existing commission which confers upon him the rank of rear admiral and is not at all affected by the date he first attained the rank of rear admiral under previous appointments as chief of bureau. The effect of reappointment is not to continue the former term, but to create a new one. (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902.)

Where a naval officer with the rank of rear admiral is commissioned as chief of bureau, his precedence is determined by the date of his commission as rear admiral and not by the date of his subsequent commission as chief of bureau. The latter commission did not confer upon him the rank of rear admiral which he already held, as under the statute it is only "when the office of chief of bureau is filled by an officer below the rank of rear admiral," that his commission as chief of bureau confers upon him the rank of rear admiral "while holding said office." (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902.)

Where the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation was commissioned as such on April 29, 1902, but had previously been commissioned as rear admiral in the line in the ordinary course of promotion on February 11, 1901, by virtue of the latter commission he takes precedence of the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment [now abolished], whose commission as such is dated December 18, 1901, notwithstanding that the latter had previously served as chief of bureau with the rank of rear admiral under commissions dated August 19, 1899, and December 1, 1899, the first being an ad interim commission. If the two officers concerned were requested to produce the commissions by which they claim and hold the rank of rear admiral, one would produce his commission dated February 11, 1901, as rear admiral in the line, and the other would produce his existing commission as chief of bureau dated December 18, 1901. Without the commission of December 18, 1901, the latter officer would hold only an effective and living commission as captain in the line, all the force and effect of his former commissions as chief of bureau having been expended. (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902.)

Section 1467 of the Revised Statutes provides that "line officers shall take rank in each grade according to the dates of their commissions." Whether this section of the statute applies to a case where one line officer holds a commission as rear admiral by virtue of promotion in the ordinary course, and another line officer has the rank of rear admiral by virtue of his position as chief of bureau, may not be entirely clear. Nevertheless it states the rule of priority which must, by military usage and apart from statute law, be applied to officers having rank in the same grade in the Navy. (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902.)

The personnel act of March 3, 1899, changed the rank of chiefs of bureaus from commodore to rear admiral. Accordingly, commissions were issued to those holding the offices of chiefs of bureaus at the time of the passage of the personnel act for the unexpired portions of the terms for which they had been appointed, "with the rank of rear-admiral." These commissions "were not of such character as to amount to new appointments or reappointments," as the chiefs of bureaus were already appointed to their positions for a period of four years, and the new rank which they enjoyed came not by virtue of any new appointment or commission, but was annexed to their office by statute law. It may well be doubted whether the new commissions were not entirely superfluous. Held, that these commissions for the unexpired portions of the terms of office to which chiefs of bureaus had been respectively previously appointed did not affect their relative rank and precedence. (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902.)

Assuming, without deciding, that General Order 544, constituting the General Board, designating the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation as the second member thereof, and providing that "in the absence of the Admiral of the Navy the chief of the Bureau of Navigation will preside at meetings of the Board and exercise the functions of President of the Board," does not affect the order of precedence established by law, nevertheless held that the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation takes precedence, by virtue of his commission as a rear admiral in the line, ahead of the chief of another bureau whose rank in the line is captain and whose commission as chief of bureau is later in date than the commission of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation as rear admiral in the line. (File 4649-02, July 17, 1902, affirming decision of the Admiral of the Navy as to seating of members of the General Board.)

In the absence of the Secretary of the Navy, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the Chief of Naval Operations, the duties of the Secretary of the Navy, by direction of the President, are to be performed by the following designated chiefs of bureaus, in the order named: The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation; in his absence, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance; and in the absence of those two, the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering. (File 1159-765, Bu. Nav.; Navy Reg., 1920, art. 392, as amended; see also file 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919, and see note to sec. 415, R. S., under "Secretary of Navy.")

A Paymaster General in the Navy having the permanent rank, title, and emoluments of a chief of bureau by virtue of the act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607—now repealed), although his term of office as bureau chief has expired, does not, while serving as member of a general court-martial, take precedence of line officers whose commissions as rear admiral are of a later date than his, but whose length of service in the Navy exceeds his total length of actual and constructive service. Precedence in such case is determined by length of service, under sections 1485, 1486, Revised Statutes, and not by date of commission. (File 28025-385.5, Oct. 30, 1915, overruled by file 22724-40, Apr. 24, 1919, construing act of Aug. 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), under which it is held that all officers, line and staff, take precedence by date of commission. Compare 32 Op. Atty. Gen., 476, file 11130-63.8, noted under sec. 1485, R. S.)

V. PAY OF CHIEFS OF BUREAUS AND ASSISTANTS.

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department, including the Judge Advocate General, shall receive the same pay and allowances as chiefs of bureaus and the Judge Advocate General in the War Department. Prior to this enactment the pay of these officers was governed by the statutes and decisions noted below:

Entitled only to shore-duty pay.—The 10 per cent additional pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908, for officers of the Navy while serving on sea duty and on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States is not a part of the "pay of the grade" and should not be included in computing the "highest pay of the grade to which they belong" of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department and the assistants thereto under said act. (14 Comp. Dec., 929, 88 S. and A. Memo., 756; affirmed Comp. Dec., Aug. 7, 1908, 90 S. and A. Memo., 817.)

It is a primary rule in the construction of statutes that the intention of the legislature shall be followed when the intention is shown. Reports of committee show that the purpose of the Navy Pay Act of May 13, 1908, was to place chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department on the same basis as officers holding like positions in the Army. If the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department of the grade of rear admiral of the lower nine be allowed $6,600 per annum—the pay of his grade increased by 10 per cent for service at sea—he would not be paid on the same basis as officers holding like positions in the Army, but $600 per annum more. (90 S. and A. Memo., 817.)

A rear admiral of the second nine when chief of bureau is entitled to the pay of a rear admiral of the second nine and not to the pay provided for a rear admiral of the first nine. The Navy Pay Act of May 13, 1908, divides rear admirals into two grades, at least as to pay. In this provision for pay the pay of rear admiral of the first nine is as distinct from that of a rear admiral of the second nine as is the pay for captain or any other grade. (98 S. and A. Memo., 1034; see also Terry v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 353; Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182.)

The pay of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department is the grade or shore-duty pay of a rear admiral of the lower nine, $6,000 per annum, without the increase for service on sea duty, and is not affected by the fact that the commandant of the navy yard at Mare Island and the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, although serving on shore, are allowed sea-duty pay by joint resolution of March 3, 1863 (12 Stat., 825), and act of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat., 515). (18 Comp. Dec., 15.)

Assistant chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department are not entitled to the 10 per cent additional of their salaries allowed for sea duty, or shore duty beyond seas, as a part of the "highest pay of their grade." (90 S. and A. Memo., 826.)

Under the provision in the act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164), as amended by the act of June 5, 1896 (29 Stat., 251), providing that the Judge Advocate General should receive the "highest pay of a captain in the Navy," an officer of the Navy serving as Judge Advocate General is entitled to the sea pay of a captain, but he is not entitled to the additional pay provided by law for officers of the Navy serving in insular possessions. "The evident purpose of said act of June 15, 1896, was to give claimant the sea pay of a captain instead of shore-duty pay. It contains no phrase looking to the future. It provides the highest pay of a captain, but not the pay which a captain in the Navy might thereafter have; no words of anticipation are in this act * * *. By the acts of June 8, 1880, and June 5, 1896, the pay of the Judge Advocate General was fixed at $4,500 a year as distinctly as if they had specifically named said amount." (11 Comp. Dec., 11; compare Schuetze v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 299; but see Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137, holding that the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 380), providing that acting assistant surgeons in the Navy shall have the "compensation of assistant surgeons," did not, as held by the Comptroller of the Treasury, limit the pay of acting assistant surgeons to the amount of pay received by assistant surgeons on May 4, 1898, but entitled them to increases in pay thereafter allowed by law to assistant surgeons. The pay of the Judge Advocate General under the act of May 13, 1908, was not the subject of decision, but in practice he was allowed $5,000 per annum, being the highest shore-duty pay of a captain. See in this connection House Reports, volume 1, No. 285, and Senate Reports, volume 2, No. 472, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, 1895-96, which explain that the purpose of the act of June 5, 1896, was to allow the Judge Advocate General, when an officer of the Navy, the "sea pay" of a captain, which had been denied under the previous laws by the Court of Claims in Lemly v. U. S. (28 Ct. Cls., 468); see also H. Rpts., vol. 1, 52d Cong., 2d sess., 1892-93, No. 2191; and S. Rpts., vol. 1, 52d Cong., 2d sess., 1892-93, No. 1188.)

Prior to the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), the pay of chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department was provided for by section 1565 of the Revised Statutes, as follows: "The pay of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, but not below that of commodore." The said personnel act provided for their pay as follows: "That when the office of chief of bureau is filled by an officer below the rank of rear-admiral, said officer shall, while holding said office, have the rank of rear-admiral and receive the same pay and allowances as are now allowed a brigadier-general in the Army." The law now covering the pay of chiefs of bureaus is the following provision of the act of May 13, 1908: "That the pay and allowances of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, and not below that of rear-admiral of the lower nine." By section 1375 of the Revised Statutes the officer detailed as assistant to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery is entitled to the "highest shore pay of his grade." The other assistants to chiefs of bureaus are each entitled to the "highest pay of his grade" by the following acts in the different cases: March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 717); May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 373); March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1038), and March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1111). Section 1555 of the Revised Statutes, the pay statute for naval officers in effect before the Navy personnel act, provided three distinct rates of pay for each grade—one for sea duty, another for shore or other duty, and another for an officer on leave or waiting orders, and each of these rates was graduated by length of service. The act of May 13, 1908, fixes one annual pay only for each grade, with an increase of such pay, and equally permanent, for each five years' service. When the longevity pay is earned by service it becomes a part of the permanent pay of the grade. But the 10 per cent additional allowed by the act of May 13, 1908, for sea duty and for shore duty abroad is pay for particular duty and to be given only "while so serving." It is true that old Navy sea pay was only earned while on sea duty, but it was an established pay of the grade, just as the other two rates were. There is no longevity pay attached to the grade of rear-admiral of the nine lower numbers, so that there appears to be only one rate of pay provided for that grade notwithstanding the use of the words "highest pay." It is difficult to give the word "highest" a meaning in this case, and its use in the above provision seems to create an ambiguity as to the meaning of the law. Rear admirals of the nine lower numbers receive the same advance in pay by the act of May 13, 1908, as brigadier-generals of the Army receive under the Army act of May 11, 1908, viz., $500 per annum; so that the present pay of each is $6,000 per annum, and I am of opinion that chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department are entitled to the same unless they are of higher grade. (14 Comp. Dec., 929.)

Formerly there were three separate and distinct rates of pay of each grade, sea pay, leave or waiting-orders pay, and shore-duty pay. Under the act of May 13, 1908, in lieu of the three there is only the one rate of pay for each grade, with increases for certain purposes. the pay of the grade of rear-admiral of the lower nine being $6,000 per annum, with a 10 per cent increase thereon for serving on sea duty or on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States. No express mention is made in the act of any increase for shore duty in the United States, and therefore the grade pay alone remains the pay for that duty, or "shore-duty pay," within the commonly accepted meaning of the term. While no meaning can be attached to the word "highest," yet the intent of Congress should not be defeated for the purpose of conferring upon it a meaning. (18 Comp. Dec., 15.)

The term "highest pay of his grade," in the cases of assistant chiefs of bureaus, is given effect by including full longevity pay, as it is a part of the pay of the grade; but the additional pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908, for a particular duty, such as sea duty and shore duty abroad, is not a part of the yearly pay of the grade. Under the act of May 13, 1908, as interpreted by the Comptroller, assistant chiefs of bureaus receive an increase of pay of at least $500 per annum over their former pay, which is the increase generally provided by that act. (90 S. and A. Memo., 826. NOTE.—Pay Director C. J. Peoples, while serving as assistant to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, was paid the highest pay of the grade of pay director, viz., that of rear admiral of the upper half.)

[NOTE.—The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 129), and act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 754), each provided that "the estimates for the support of the Navy shall hereafter show, under the head of Pay of the Navy, the sums allowed for pay of officers belonging to the line, to the several departments of the staff, and to the retired list; the estimates to show under each head the amount allowed for pay proper, for increases due to longevity and foreign service, and for *pay at sea rates to officers employed on shore * * **"]

Pay not reduced by appointment as chief of bureau.—A rear admiral of the senior nine, serving as chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, is entitled to the pay of a rear admiral of the senior nine, and is not restricted to "the highest shore-duty pay and allowances of the rear admiral of the lower nine," notwithstanding the provision to that effect in the act of June 24, 1910 [since repealed]. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 557, file 22724-16:3, approving 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 377.)

VI. RETIREMENT OF CHIEFS OF BUREAUS.

Rank on retirement same as while serving.—Section 1254, Revised Statutes, relating to the Army, and made applicable to the Marine Corps by section 1622, Revised Statutes, provides that "officers hereafter retired from active service shall be retired upon the actual rank held by them at the date of retirement." Held that, under these statutes, a captain in the Marine Corps, holding the office of Judge Advocate General of the Navy, with the rank of colonel while so serving, is entitled to be retired with the latter rank. While he held this office he held actual rank as a colonel of the Marine Corps, and not assimilated rank; his rank was a fact, not a courtesy. (Remey v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 218.)

Section 1457, Revised Statutes, provides that "officers retired from active service shall be placed on the retired list of officers of the grades to which they belonged, respectively, at the time of their retirement, and continue to be borne on the Navy register. They shall be entitled to wear the uniform of their respective grades * * *." The effect of this statute upon the retirement of naval officers while serving as chiefs of bureaus has never been judicially decided. The decisions of the executive officers on the subject have been conflicting, the cases being noted below:

The decision of the Court of Claims in Remy's case (above noted) was extended to the case of Capt. Samuel C. Lemly, U. S. Navy, who was retired under section 1457, Revised Statutes, from the office of Judge Advocate General, with the rank of captain, which he held while so serving on the active list, although his rank in the line was lieutenant commander. (See file 21-2, Mar. 12, 1906.)

The act authorizing the appointment of a Judge Advocate General confers actual and not assimilated rank upon the officer so appointed, and an officer of the Navy retired while holding the rank conferred by such appointment is retired on said rank. (8 Comp. Dec., 895.)

The Attorney General (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294) held that the word "grade" in section 1457 "appears to mean rank in the line or by relation to the line—using rank and grade interchangeably, as those words sometimes are used, and not as indicating an officer's number in a particular grade. Section 1471 speaks of the headship of a bureau as a 'position,' section 1472 as an office, section 1473 again as a position, and the Navy Regulations, incorporating the statutes and adding to them administrative details, use both terms * * *. I think, however, that grade may include such staff offices and may mean in an untechnical sense and by a certain equity the highest post to the rank and title of which an officer has attained upon his retirement, and that section 1457 fairly includes the office or position of Paymaster-General." (See note to section 1362, Revised Statutes, for other citations in which "grade" and "rank" have been used synonymously.)

In the opinion noted in the preceding paragraph, the Attorney General further stated: "As I understand the matter, the situation is precisely the same in the line. An officer serving as chief of a bureau, who is a rear-admiral in fact, or is in the next lower grade, viz, captain, if he were retired during his incumbency of the bureau headship would be retired with the rank, pay and title of rear-admiral."

The above opinion of the Attorney General was followed in an opinion of the Judge Advocate General (file 21-2, Mar. 12, 1906), holding that "a captain in the Navy reaching the retiring age while serving as chief of bureau with the rank of rear-admiral, is retired with the latter rank." It was stated by the Judge Advocate General that the Attorney General's opinion was followed in the case of Paymaster General Kenny, who was "retired as a rear-admiral while a pay director in a staff corps of the Navy having no rank corresponding to that of rear-admiral; also in the case of the present Paymaster-General [Harris], retired as rear-admiral, his rank in his corps being that of pay director." The Judge Advocate General also supported his opinion by the decision of the Court of Claims in the Remy case, above noted, and the fact that a marine officer serving as Judge Advocate General was retired with the rank of colonel, and a naval officer in the same position was retired with the rank of captain, although their lineal ranks were captain in the Marine Corps and lieutenant commander in the Navy, respectively. The Judge Advocate General further supported his opinion by the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), providing that "hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired."

The Navy Regulations of 1905 and 1909 provided that "officers retired while serving as chiefs of bureau or as Judge Advocate General shall retain the rank and titles held by them, respectively, while so serving." (Art. 24, Regs. 1909; art. 23, Regs. 1905; file 22724-7d, May 17, 1909. There is no similar provision in the Navy Regulations of 1913.)

The Attorney General's opinion, above noted, (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294) reversed a former opinion of his department (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154), which was as follows: "Where W., while holding a commission as captain in the Navy, was appointed to the office of chief of the Bureau of Navigation, with the relative rank of commodore: Held that, in case of his retirement by reason of a disability incident to the service, or on his own application, during his incumbency of that office, and whilst he is borne on the Navy Register as a captain, he should be placed on the retired list with the rank of captain." Nevertheless, in this opinion the Attorney General stated: "The interchangeability of the words rank and grade throughout the statutes leads me to the conclusion that whatever may have been their original differences in meaning, they are now to a great extent used synonymously," but his conclusion was that the word "rank" in section 1588, Revised Statutes, providing that retired officers shall receive 75 per cent of the pay of the "grade or rank which they held, respectively, at the time of their retirement," meant "grade," which was the reverse of the conclusion reached later (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294); that the word "grade" in section 1457, Revised Statutes, meant "rank."

The decisions of the Court of Claims and of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the opinion of the Attorney General (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294), and the Navy Regulations (art. 24, Regs., 1909), all support the view that the chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, retired for physical disability, is entitled to the rank and retired pay of a rear admiral of the lower nine. (File 22724-7d, May 17, 1909, memo. J. A. G.)

By act of May 13, 1908, Congress provided that "any officer of the Navy who is now serving or shall hereafter serve as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such bureau chief." At the time this legislation was enacted the law as construed by the Attorney General (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294), by the Navy Department (file 21-2, Mar. 12, 1906), and by Navy regulations approved by the President (art. 23, Regs., 1905), authorized the retirement of bureau chiefs with the rank held by them while so serving, and the contrary opinion (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154) had been reversed. [In this connection see "Introduction," ante, VI, D, "Aids to Interpretation of Ambiguous Statutes."]

Referring to this act of May 13, 1908, the Attorney General stated: "It is obvious under the language last quoted that an officer actually retired from active service while still acting as chief of bureau became entitled * * * to pay during retirement of not less than three-fourths of the pay of a rear-admiral of the lower nine." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 531.)

It is the opinion of the Navy Department that the existing laws entitle a line officer of the Navy, on retirement, while serving as Judge Advocate General or chief of bureau, to the rank held by him while so serving, the same as a Marine officer retired while serving as Judge Advocate General and a staff officer retired while serving as chief of a bureau or Judge Advocate General in the Navy Department, and any officer of the Army retired while serving as Judge Advocate General or chief of a bureau in the War Department retains on retirement the rank held by him while so serving. (File 22724-41, May 14, 1919.)

The former opinions and decisions were reviewed by the Attorney General, July 3, 1919, and the conclusion reached that "a line officer of the Navy, retired while serving as chief of bureau or Judge Advocate General, should be placed on the retired list with the rank attached by law to the said position of chief of bureau or Judge Advocate General." (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505.)

Rank on retirement not same as while serving.—In 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, the Attorney General disapproved the opinion expressed in 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294 (above quoted), and reverted to that expressed in 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154 (above quoted), that the word "grade," in section 1457, Revised Statutes, does not mean "rank," but requires that a captain in the Navy, serving as chief of bureau with the rank of rear admiral, be retired with the rank of his grade in the line, namely, with the rank of captain, except as specified in section 1473, Revised Statutes, quoted below. [In this opinion the Attorney General did not consider the effect of the act of May 13, 1908, as constituting legislative approval of the existing construction of the law under which chiefs of bureaus were held entitled to retirement with the rank attached to the office of chief of bureau.]

In 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, the Attorney General stated that the Court of Claims' decision in Remy's case (33 Ct. Cls., 218), that a marine officer serving as Judge Advocate General is entitled to retirement with the rank of colonel, which he held by virtue of his office as Judge Advocate General, does not apply to the retirement of an officer of the Navy serving as chief of bureau, for the reason, among others, that section 1254, which applies to the retirement of marine officers, uses the word "rank," while section 1457, which applies to the retirement of officers of the Navy, uses the word "grade"; and that while a chief of bureau has the rank of rear admiral he does not by virtue of his office belong to the "grade" of rear admiral.

In 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 529, the Attorney General quoted approvingly from his opinion of May 26, 1909 (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 379), that a chief of bureau whose actual grade is below that of rear admiral is not entitled to retirement with the rank of rear admiral except in the cases specified by section 1473, Revised Statutes (quoted below).

The Chief of Naval Operations, by express enactment, if retired while so serving, shall have the lineal rank and retired pay to which he would be entitled if not so serving. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558).

Rank on retirement of chiefs of "staff" bureaus.—Section 1482, Revised Statutes, provides that "staff officers, who have been or shall be retired for causes incident to the service before arriving at 62 years of age, shall have the same rank on the retired list as pertained to their position on the active list." [The effect of this section upon the retirement of a staff officer serving as chief of bureau has not been decided. See, however, file 22724-41, May 14, 1919, and 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, noted above.]

Section 1473, Revised Statutes, as amended, provides that "officers who have been or who shall be retired from the position of Chiefs of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, of Supplies and Accounts, of Steam Engineering [now Engineering] or of Construction and Repair, by reason of age or length of service, shall have the rank of commodore [now rear admiral]."

Rank of commodore in certain cases.—In 5 Comp. Dec., 823, it was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that under section 1473, Revised Statutes, the officers therein mentioned would retire, under the conditions specified, with the rank of commodore, and not rear admiral; notwithstanding the fact that the grade of commodore on the active list was abolished by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, and that chiefs of bureau now have the rank of rear admiral instead of commodore, as was the case when section 1473 was enacted. (See also, to same effect, file 22724-16:1, Feb. 13, 1911, overruled by Attorney General, Mar. 15, 1911, file 22724-16:3; and see note to sec. 1362 R. S.) [The pay of commodore and rear admiral of the lower nine is the same, and as the Comptroller of the Treasury has jurisdiction only of questions involving payments, and the case before him involved the pay of an officer retired under section 1473, Revised Statutes, the question of rank to which such officer was entitled was not under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller to decide. The Comptroller of the Treasury, in a subsequent letter to the Secretary of the Navy, relating to a similar matter, stated: "The decision of * * * referred only to the pay of such retired officers and not to the rank upon which they should be retired, as that was a question outside of my jurisdiction and in any event did not affect the rate of pay in the particular case considered. * * * In this decision the assistant comptroller had in mind the question of pay, which was the only question before him and the only one over which he had jurisdiction to render a binding decision. * * * The question of the rank upon which such an officer should be retired has therefore no bearing upon the rate of pay which he is to receive when so retired. The question of rank is one peculiarly within the province of your department to determine and a proper one for submission to the Attorney General for his opinion in case of doubt." (File 4784-99, Dec. 8, 1899.)]

Rank of commodore now rear admiral.—In the following opinions the Attorney General has indicated the view that the rank of officers retired under section 1473, Revised Statutes, is now rear admiral instead of commodore: 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 296; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 344; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376; 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, 518, 519. (See also file 21-2, Mar. 12, 1906.)

In 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 344, the Attorney General stated that under section 1473 "officers who have been or who shall be retired from the position of chiefs of the bureau of * * * Steam Engineering * * * by reason of age or length of service, shall have the relative rank of commodore," (now the actual rank of rear-admiral * * *).

In 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, the Attorney General stated that Congress has provided that officers retired from the position of Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering by reason of age or length of service shall have the rank of rear admiral.

Had the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering been retired on his own application, after 30 years' service, he would have been entitled, under section 1473, Revised Statutes, to the rank of rear admiral on the retired list. (File 22724-71, July 13 and Dec. 9, 1909, letters from Secretary of the Navy to House and Senate Committees on Naval Affairs.)

The Navy Regulations of 1905 and 1909 provided that a chief of bureau retired while so serving was entitled to the rank of rear admiral. (Art. 24, Regs., 1909, and art. 23, Regs., 1905. No similar provision in Regulations of 1913.)

According to the department's practice, the Paymaster General of the Navy, if retired under section 1473, Revised Statutes, is retired with the rank of rear admiral. (See file 22724-18, Nov. 28, 1911; Bu. Nav. file 2425-61, 2108.)

The Surgeon General of the Navy, Presley M. Rixey, was retired February 4, 1910, on his own application after 30 years' service, with the rank of rear admiral. (See Navy Register, Jan. 1, 1915, p. 168.)

The act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607) [repealed by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328)], provided that chiefs of bureau becoming eligible for retirement after 30 years' service "shall have, while on the active list, the rank, title and emoluments of a chief of bureau, in the same manner as is already provided by statute law for such officers upon retirement by reason of age or length of service, and such officers after thirty years' service shall be entitled to and shall receive new commissions in accordance with the rank and title hereby conferred." The purpose of the act of 1910 "quite clearly was to extend to chiefs of bureau becoming eligible for retirement the same privileges as under the prior law they could claim upon actual retirement." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 531.) Under this act of 1910, the officers affected thereby became entitled to permanent commissions with the rank of rear admiral (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 429); and such officers were commissioned accordingly with the rank of rear admiral, including Rear Admiral R. F. Nicholson, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

Section 1473, Revised Statutes, does not restrict retirement with same rank as while serving to cases specified.—Section 1473, Revised Statutes, in providing that chiefs of certain bureaus shall be retired with the rank of commodore, was not intended to discriminate against the chiefs of the other bureaus, but the inference is that Congress intended thereby to confer upon chiefs of the so-called staff bureaus a rank on retirement which it thought already appertained to the chiefs of the so-called line bureaus. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, 519, holding that line officers serving as chiefs of bureaus are entitled to retire with the rank of rear admiral.)

Section 1473 expressly provides that the chiefs of four bureaus shall, on retirement for age or length of service, retain the rank which they held while so serving. "Expressio unius exclusio alterius"—the expression of one thing excludes another. Accordingly, held that a captain in the Navy, serving as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, which is not one of the bureaus mentioned in section 1473, should be retired with the rank of captain. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154; overruled by 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505.)

Section 1473 would have been entirely unnecessary if in the view of Congress or of the revisers of the statutes the effect of section 1457, in the event of the retirement of a chief of bureau, was to place him on the retired list of officers of the grade temporarily held by him during his incumbency of the office of chief of bureau. It was because of the expression of such intention only in the two cases mentioned, viz, first, on retirement by reason of age, and second, on retirement by length of service, "thus inferentially excluding all other cases," that Attorney General McVey reached the conclusion expressed by him in the Whiting case that chiefs of bureaus not coming within the provisions of section 1473 are entitled to retirement only with the rank of their regular grade in the Navy—an opinion in which I am constrained to concur. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, affirming 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 155, and disapproving 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294; but see 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, noted above.)

When, therefore, a line officer of the Navy, holding the position of Engineer in Chief, is retired from active service by reason of physical disability and not because of age or length of service, he is to be placed on the retired list of officers of the grade to which he belonged at the time of retirement—in this case the grade of captain—and not on the retired list of Engineers in Chief, for such office is not a grade. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376.) [Following this opinion, a special act of Congress was enacted May 6, 1910 (36 Stat., 352), providing for the appointment of John K. Barton as Engineer in Chief on the retired list, with the rank of rear admiral, from December 22, 1905, the date of his original retirement, under the Attorney General's opinion, with the rank of captain. Thereafter this opinion was reversed by the Attorney General. (see 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, noted above.)]

Rank on retirement of former bureau chief who has returned to general service.—Prior to the act of May 13, 1908, the authorities clearly supported the following proposition: A chief of bureau appointed from the grade of captain, whose time of bureauhip expires, then reverts to the grade from which he was appointed, and, if afterwards retired, retires in the lower grade to which he so reverts. (File 21-2, Mar. 12, 1906.)

However, by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128) it was provided that "any officer of the Navy who is now serving or shall hereafter serve as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such bureau chief."

In an informal opinion of the Attorney General it was held that the above legislation of May 13, 1908, refers only "to the case of retirement during service as chief of bureau," and does not extend to the retirement of one who has left the office of chief of bureau and returned to general duty in the service at large. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 531.) This informal opinion was not rendered in any specific case, and had not the force and effect of an official opinion. (See cases noted under sec. 356, R. S., "V. Weight of Opinions.") However the informal opinion of the Attorney General was followed by the Court of Claims in the case of Stokes v. United States. (54 Ct. Cls., 70.)

The above provision of the act of May 13, 1908, was copied from the following clause in the Army act of February 2, 1901, section 26 (31 Stat. 755): "And any officer now holding office in any corps or department who shall hereafter serve as chief of a staff corps or department and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such corps or department chief." (See file 22724-7m, Nov. 22, 1909.) By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 762), relating to the Army, it was provided that "any officer who shall have served four years as chief of a branch, and who may subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay and allowances authorized by law for the grade held by him as such chief."

No actual case has been judicially decided in the Army involving the interpretation of this legislation. For memoranda relating to the informal opinion of the Attorney General above cited, and presenting certain considerations which were not before the Attorney General at that time, see file 27231-66:3, Office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, and file 88-400, Office of the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

Orders to chief of bureau to appear before retiring board.—While immaterial, it seems to be an irregularity to order a chief of bureau before a retiring board by his title as chief of bureau—e. g., as "engineer in chief"—instead of the title of his office in the line, viz, "captain," for it is by virtue of his office of captain and not of chief of bureau that he is entitled or subject to retirement. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 343. Compare cases noted above.)

Titles of chiefs of bureau after retirement.—I have no doubt whatever, in view of the authorities which I have cited and the various considerations affecting the subject which I have indicated, that when retirement occurs during service as head of one of the staff bureaus, the titles for the chiefs of which are provided for in section 1471, the retired officer is entitled under the law to be borne upon the Navy Register as a retired officer under that title permanently. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 294; affirming 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122; compare 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376.)

Effect of retirement upon status of chief of bureau.—Chiefs of bureaus are eligible, after retirement, to serve out unexpired terms, particularly in view of the statute authorizing the employment of retired officers on active duty. (File 21, Nov. 2, 1902.)

An officer of the Navy on the active list is eligible for appointment as chief of bureau although he will be retired about a year later; and when the date of his retirement arrives he may be ordered to continue in the performance of his duties as chief of bureau during the unexpired portion of his term. (File 21-1, Mar. 7, 1906.)

At least one Engineer in Chief and two Paymasters General, retired while chiefs of bureaus, have been ordered to active duty upon retirement and have continued serving as chiefs of bureau until the expiration of their respective terms. The same is true of a former Judge Advocate General. Such action is therefore in accordance with precedents. (File 21-1, Mar. 7, 1906.)

The retirement of an officer of the Navy while holding the office of Judge Advocate General of the Navy did not vacate that office, and the incumbent continued to be entitled to the pay attached thereto, if continued on active duty as Judge Advocate General under the order of the Secretary of the Navy after his retirement. (8 Comp. Dec., 895.)

The Paymaster General of the Navy having been retired under section 1444, Revised Statutes [age], was ordered by the Secretary of the Navy to continue his duties as Paymaster General and Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts until further orders. Held, that he is entitled to the pay of that office until the expiration of his term of appointment, unless sooner relieved from active duty as chief of said bureau. (10 Comp. Dec., 56.)

It was quite properly held by the Comptroller in 8 Comp. Dec., 895, that a captain in the Navy, serving as Judge Advocate General, who after his retirement as captain was by the Secretary of the Navy directed to continue his duties as Judge Advocate General pursuant to the statute authorizing the employment of retired officers on active duty, was entitled to hold the rank and enjoy the pay adhering in such office so long as he continued to fill the office and perform the duties of Judge Advocate General, even though he had been retired as an officer of the line. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376.)

The retirement of an officer while Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering "vacated the office of Engineer in Chief of the Navy, and left his legal status that of an officer on the retired list of the Navy, holding the rank of captain." (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 344.)

An officer retired for physical disability while serving as chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering became incapable of performing his active shore duties as Engineer in Chief unless the Secretary of the Navy, under the statute authorizing employment of retired officers on active duty, ordered him to continue his duties as chief of bureau, which was not done. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 382.)

Pay after retirement of officers serving as chiefs of bureaus.—See cases noted above under "Rank of chiefs of bureaus on retirement," "Rank on retirement of former bureau chief who has returned to general service," and "Effect of retirement upon status of chief of bureau."

A line officer of the grade of captain, retired while holding the office of Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, is entitled to the retired pay of an officer of the rank of captain. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 154.)

Chiefs of bureaus coming within the terms of section 1473 are entitled to the retired pay of commodore if retired while holding such positions, but chiefs of bureaus who do not fall within said section are entitled on retirement only to the retired pay of their commissioned grade. (5 Comp. Dec., 823.)

An officer of the Marine Corps retired while serving as Judge Advocate General of the Navy is entitled to the retired pay of colonel. (Remey v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 218.)

An officer of the Navy serving as Judge Advocate General is retired with the rank of captain and is entitled to be paid accordingly. If continued on active duty as Judge Advocate General under the order of the Secretary of the Navy after retirement, he is entitled to receive the active-duty pay of a captain. (8 Comp. Dec., 895. Capt. Lemly, in whose case this decision was rendered, performed other active duty under orders of the Secretary of the Navy, after expiration of his service as Judge Advocate General, and received the active-duty pay of a captain for such service; and when not on any active duty he received the retired pay of a captain; see file 22724-7d, May 17, 1909.)

Where a line officer of the grade of captain was retired from the office of chief of bureau and was continued on active duty but not as chief of bureau, he was entitled by statute to the active-duty pay of the grade from which he was retired, which, in his case, was that of captain. (15 Comp. Dec., 860.)

VII. ASSISTANTS TO CHIEFS OF BUREAUS.

Status and powers of assistant.—Without making a question that the assignment of commissioned officers of the Navy to act as assistants to chiefs of bureaus may be within the general power of the Secretary of the Navy, officers so detailed are not legally "the assistant or deputy of such chief," unless their appointment is specifically authorized by statute. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 503; affirmed 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 95. See also note to sec. 178, R. S.)

The office of Surgeon General (Army) is one of the distinct or separate bureaus of the administrative service of the War Department. It has been found in regard to many of these bureaus, and even to the heads of departments, that it is impossible for a single individual to perform in person all the duties imposed on him by his office. It was to relieve the overburdened principal of some part of those duties that the office of assistant was created. If no virtue attached to the acts of the assistant until approved by the Surgeon General, any inferior clerk would have answered the purpose as well. It is not intended to deny that the Assistant Surgeon General was subordinate to the chief of his bureau, could be ordered to do or not to do particular things, and when an order made by him was disapproved it might be revoked by that officer. But until so revoked or disapproved it was valid, and parties required to act under it had a right to rely on it. (Parish v. U. S., 100 U. S., 504; McCollum v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 101.)

In some of the executive departments the statutes provide for assistants to the heads thereof, and also assistants and deputies to the heads of some of the bureaus. The duties of these assistants are generally not specifically defined by law, but are left to the direction and regulation of superior officers. Such assistants are supposed to have the confidence of those immediately above them, and to be officially engaged in carrying out the will of their principals in the details of the work of the department or bureau in which they are employed. When their acts, decisions, or directions are reduced to writing, signed by them in their official capacity, filed, or recorded among the archives of the department, and do not appear to have been revoked, annulled, or modified by the head of the department or bureau, they must be held in the absence of fraud, mistake, or irregularity to have been done within the scope of the authority of the assistant and to be as binding on the Government as though expressly ordered by the superior. Especially is that so when copies of such written documents are sent out by the head of the department in which they are found, without objection on his part to their having been made in the due and regular course of business under his control. (McCollum v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cls., 101.)

The assistant to an officer designated to perform the latter's duties under section 179, Revised Statutes, is qualified to act as member of a board which the law provides shall include in its membership the officer whose duties he is temporarily performing. (20 Op. Atty. Gen. 483.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 177, 182, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 422. [Bureaus of Yards and Docks, Equipment, Navigation, and Ordnance.] The chiefs of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, of the Bureau of Navigation, and of the Bureau of Ordnance, shall be appointed from the list of officers of the Navy, not below the grade of commander.—(5 July, 1862, c. 134, s. 1, v. 12, p. 510.)

Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting: Was designated as Bureau of Equipment in annual appropriation acts commencing with the fiscal year 1892; provision was made for distribution of the duties, funds, and employees of the Bureau of Equipment among the other bureaus and offices of the Navy Department by naval appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1912, 1913, and 1914; and the Bureau of Equipment was abolished by act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 408).

Bureau of Navigation: Detail of an officer of the Navy as assistant to the chief of the Bureau of Navigation was authorized by act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 717).

Bureau of Ordnance: Detail of a line officer of the Navy temporarily as assistant to the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance was authorized by act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 373).

Bureau of Yards and Docks: Chief shall be selected from Corps of Civil Engineers and have had not less than seven years' active service. (Act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 564.) Detail of an officer of the Corps of Civil Engineers as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks was authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 558).

Line bureaus.—These four bureaus are essentially line bureaus, while those mentioned in sections 423–426, inclusive, are staff bureaus (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 47); excepting that the engineer corps (steam engineering) has now been transferred to the line by the personnel act of 1899 (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 122). [By amendments to sections 422 and 424, the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks is now appointed from staff officers (civil engineer corps), and the chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering is now appointed from line officers.]

The Bureau of Steam Engineering [now Engineering] has now become a line bureau through the amalgamation of the Engineer Corps with the line by act of March 3, 1899 30 Stat., 1004. (File 22724–16:1, Feb. 13, 1911.)

The Bureau of Yards and Docks forms a part of the Navy Department, and the Navy Department is an executive department; accordingly the embossing of envelopes for the use of the Bureau of Yards and Docks is printing for an executive department and must be done at the Government Printing Office. The procurement of such embossing by a private establishment being contrary to law there is no authority for the payment of a voucher therefor. (13 Comp. Dec., 366.)

Only line officers eligible for appointment under this section.—This section restricts the President in his choice of chiefs of the four bureaus mentioned to officers of the line not below the grade of commander; and the act of March 3, 1871, incorporated in section 421, enlarges the President's power, giving him the alternative of making the appointment "from officers having the relative rank of captain in the staff corps of the Navy on the active list." Accordingly the appointment may be made either from line officers not below the grade of commander, under this section, or from staff officers of the rank of captain on the active list, under section 421. It may be said that the law as thus construed discriminates against the officers of the staff corps in the matter of appointment of chiefs of the four bureaus mentioned in this section by requiring them to hold a higher rank than officers of the line in order to be eligible; but the answer is that since line officers are not eligible at all to the chiefship of staff bureaus it is not unfair to require some extra evidence of fitness in a staff officer who is to be made head of a line bureau. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 47. Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks is now appointed from staff officers. See law noted above.)

An officer of the corps of civil engineers, not below the rank of captain, is eligible for appointment as Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks under section 421; but a civil engineer with the rank of commander is not an officer of the "grade" of commander, and therefore is not eligible for appointment as Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks under section 422. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 47. But see subsequent amendment to this section noted above; see also note to sec. 421, "Appointment of Chiefs of Bureaus," and note to sec. 423, below.)

For other cases, see note to section 421, concerning appointment, status, rank, title, precedence, pay, retirement, etc., of chiefs of bureaus.

Sec. 423. [Bureau of Construction and Repair.] The chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair shall be appointed from the list of officers of the Navy, not below the grade of commander, and shall be a skillful naval constructor.—(5 July, 1862, c. 134, s. 1, v. 12, p. 510.)

By act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 716), it was provided that "any naval constructor having the rank of captain, commander, or lieutenant commander shall be eligible as Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair."

By section 1471, Revised Statutes, it was provided that the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair shall have the relative rank of commodore [now the rank of rear admiral], while holding said position, and the title of Chief Constructor. (See note to sec. 421, concerning the rank and titles of chiefs of bureaus.)

By section 1473, Revised Statutes, it was provided that officers retired from the position of Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, by reason of age or length of service, shall have the relative rank of commodore [now the rank of rear admiral—see note to section 421, Revised Statutes, concerning retirement of chiefs of bureaus.]

Officer of the Corps of Naval Constructors may be detailed as assistant to the Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558.)

The expression, "the list of officers of the Navy, not below the grade of commander," in sections 422 and 423, strictly construed, applies only to officers of the line. Naval constructors belong to the staff; nevertheless, they have been treated as eligible, under section 423, for appointment as Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair. Thus, under the practical interpretation of section 423, naval constructors are treated as officers of the Navy, and their rank as the "grade" required by the section; but it is to be observed that, in no other way could compliance be had with the explicit requirement that the officer appointed Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair shall be "a skillful naval constructor." Faults in expression were disregarded in order to carry out the manifest intention of the law-maker. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 47; see also note to sec. 422, R. S., and note to sec. 421, R. S., "Appointment of Chiefs of Bureaus.")

The office of Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair is not a "grade" in the Navy, and was not made so because the rank, title, and emoluments of the incumbent, theretofore temporary, were made permanent by the act of June 24, 1910 [now repealed]. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 526. But see cases noted under sec. 421, R. S., "111 status of Chief of Bureaus.")

For other cases, see note to section 421 Revised Statutes, concerning appointment, status, rank, title, precedence, pay, retirement, etc., of chiefs of bureaus.

Sec. 424. [Bureau of Steam Engineering.] The Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering shall be appointed from the line of officers of the Navy not below the grade of lieutenant-commander, and shall be a skillful engineer.

This section was amended to read as above by act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 702).

As originally enacted, this section read as follows: "SEC. 424. The chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering shall be appointed from the chief engineers of the Navy, and shall be a skillful engineer."—(5 July, 1862, c. 134, s. 1, v. 12, p. 510.)

The Engineer Corps of the Navy was transferred to the line by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), and the grade of chief engineers on the active list thereupon ceased to exist.

By act of June 4, 1920, (41 Stat., 828), the Bureau of Steam Engineering was designated as the "Bureau of Engineering."

By section 1471, Revised Statutes, it was provided that the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering [now Engineering] shall have the relative rank of commodore [now the rank of rear admiral], while holding said position, and the title of engineer in chief. (See note to sec. 421, concerning the rank and titles of chiefs of bureaus.)

By section 1473, Revised Statutes, it was provided that officers retired from the position of Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, [now Engineering] by reason of age or length of service, shall have the relative rank of commodore [now the rank of rear admiral—see note to section 421, concerning retirement of chiefs of bureaus].

By act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1111), the detail of a line officer of the Navy was authorized as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering [now Engineering].

The retirement of the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering creates a vacancy in that office, unless the Secretary of the Navy order the incumbent, in accordance with law, to continue to perform the duties of said office after his retirement, which was not done in this case. The vacancy so created can not legally be filled by the assignment of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair to perform the duties of Chief of the Bureau of Engineering. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 337, 344; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 376, 382.)

The Bureau of Engineering has now become a line bureau. (See note to sec. 422, R. S.)

For other cases, see note to section 421, concerning appointment, status, rank, title, precedence, pay, retirement, etc., of chiefs of bureaus.

Sec. 425. [Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.] The chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing shall be appointed from the list of paymasters of the Navy of not less than ten years' standing.—(5 July, 1862, c. 134, s. 1, v. 12, p. 510.)

"Bureau of Provisions and Clothing" was changed to "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts" by act of July 19, 1892 (27 Stat., 243, 245).

Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts to have the relative rank of commodore [now the rank of rear admiral] while holding said position, and the title of paymaster general. (Sec. 1471, R. S. See note to sec. 421, concerning the rank and titles of chiefs of bureaus.)

Retirement of Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, by reason of age or length of service, with the relative rank of commodore [now the rank of rear admiral] was authorized by section 1473, Revised Statutes. (See note to sec. 421, concerning retirement of chiefs of bureaus.)

Detail of a pay officer of the Navy as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, was authorized by act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 132), and the pay of the officer so detailed was fixed by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1038).

Civilian assistant to Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, to perform also the duties of chief clerk, was provided for by act of February 25, 1903 (32 Stat., 890), and by appropriation acts for subsequent years.

Sec. 426. [Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.] The chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery shall be appointed from the list of the surgeons of the Navy.—(5 July, 1862, c. 134, s. 1, v. 12, p. 510.)

Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery to have the relative rank of commodore [now the rank of rear admiral] while holding said position, and the title of Surgeon General. (Sec. 1471, R. S. See note to sec. 421, concerning the rank and titles of chiefs of bureaus.)

Retirement of Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, by reason of age or length of service, with the relative rank of commo-

Duties of Bureau of Supplies and Accounts:

See note to section 419, Revised Statutes.

Appointment, status, rank, title, precedence, pay, retirement, etc., of chiefs of bureaus: See note to section 421, Revised Statutes.

The word "paymasters" in this section is construed in practice as meaning officers of the Supply Corps, and is not restricted to officers in the grade of paymaster. (See note to sec. 1376, R. S., as to organization of the Supply Corps.)

dore [now the rank of rear admiral], was authorized by section 1473, Revised Statutes. (See note to sec. 421 concerning retirement of chiefs of bureaus.)

Detail of a medical officer as assistant to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, was authorized by section 1375, Revised Statutes.

Appointment, status, rank, title, precedence, pay, retirement, etc., of chiefs of bureaus: See note to section 421, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 427. [Use of engraved plates of Wilkes's Expedition.] The Joint Committee on the Library shall grant to the Department of the Navy the use of such of the engraved plates of the United States Exploring Expedition under Captain Wilkes, in charge of the committee, as may be desired for the purpose of printing a supply of charts for the use of the Department.—(26 July, 1866, Res. No. 80, v. 14, p. 366.)

Historical note.—By act of May 14, 1836 (sec. 2, 5 Stat., 29), Congress authorized the President to send a surveying and exploring expedition to the Pacific Ocean and the South Seas, and made an appropriation of $150,000 for that purpose. On April 20, 1838, Lieut. Charles Wilkes was appointed to the command of the expedition, which sailed in the month of August, 1838. (See Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 91; see also, "The Wilkes Exploring Expedition," U. S. Naval Institute Proceedings, vol. 40, no. 5, p. 1323.)

The Wilkes Exploring Expedition "was a public enterprise * * * specially authorized by Congress * * * for purposes of commerce and science, very valuable to the country, and not entirely without interest to most of the civilized world." (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 122; see also Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How., 389.)

By act of August 26, 1842 (5 Stat., 534), Congress provided for publishing, under the supervision and direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, "an account of the discoveries made by the exploring expedition, under the command of Lieut. Wilkes, of the United States Navy," and by act of March 3, 1843 (5 Stat., 645), made an appropriation of $20,000 "for preparing and publishing charts, and otherwise carrying into effect" the act of August 26, 1842.

By act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat., 599), the plates and engravings, which were made at the expense of the United States, were to be delivered to the Smithsonian Institution, to enable that institution to publish a new edition of Wilkes' Narrative.

July 7, 1866 (Congress Letter Book, Navy Dept., vol. 14, p. 332), the Secretary of the Navy advised the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, United States Senate, that the charts published under the authority of the act of March 3, 1843, had been exhausted, and that the Navy Department desired to be put in possession of the plates to enable it to have additional charts printed therefrom for the use of the Navy and the Commercial Marine, and suggesting, in case the committee should not feel authorized to transfer the plates to the Navy Department, a joint resolution be submitted to Congress authorizing such transfer to be made. As a result, the joint resolution was adopted, which was afterwards embodied in section 427, Revised Statutes.

From the records of the Hydrographic Office it appears that there were originally 106 copper plates covering the above mentioned exploring expedition, which were apparently turned over to the Navy Department in compliance with the joint resolution now embodied in section 427, Revised Statutes. These copper plates were not returned to the Joint Committee on the Library, but were used in the Hydrographic Office for several years. Thirty-eight of them are still in use by that office for printing charts and 27 others are stored as record plates, but have not been used for some time. Of the remaining 41, some were turned over to the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in 1881 as covering areas coming within the jurisdiction of that office, and the balance were scoured off and the copper plates used for other purposes.

So far as known, the Joint Committee on the Library has never requested the return of any of these plates, and they are regarded by the Hydrographic Office as the property of that office and of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. (File 9386-14:18, Jan. 19, 1916.)

In the Commissioners' Draft of the Revised Statutes (vol. 1, p. 214), it was stated with reference to the joint resolution now embodied in the revision as section 427: "Very probably this provision may have become obsolete. It stands however, in the Statutes at Large un repealed." [However, inasmuch as it appears from the above that certain of these plates are still in use by the Hydrographic Office, it would seem that section 427, Revised Statutes, can not be regarded as obsolete unless it should be construed as having provided for an absolute transfer of said plates to the Navy Department. In this connection see United States Compiled Statutes 1917, in which section 427, Revised Statutes, is treated by the publishers as obsolete.]

September 4, 1908 (file 15567-6), the president of the Carnegie Institute of Washington was informed by the Navy Department that "certain unpublished magnetic data obtained on the Wilkes expedition," comprising several hundred miscellaneous books and sheets, forming part of the archives of the Hydrographic Office, were not arranged for access to the public, and could not be spared for publication, as suggested, by the said institute; but that "later, the results obtained from them will be made generally available, if their scientific value is clear; it is in times placed in question by certain gaps in the continuity of observation. To fill these, much search for further material, has so far, proven unavailing."

Sec. 428. [Collection of enemies' flags.] The Secretary of the Navy shall from time to time cause to be collected and transmitted to him at the seat of Government all flags, standards, and colors taken by the Navy from the enemies of the United States.—(18 Apr., 1814, c. 78, s. 1, v. 3, p. 133.)

A similar provision to this is contained in section 1554, Revised Statutes.
Preservation and public display of captured flags, under the direction of the President, is provided for by section 1555, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 429. [Reports to be made by Secretary of the Navy.] The Secretary of the Navy shall make annual reports to Congress upon the following subjects: [See §§ 195, 196.]

First. A statement of the appropriations of the preceding fiscal year for the Department of the Navy, showing the amount appropriated under each specific head of appropriation, the amount expended under each head, and the balance which, on the thirtieth day of June preceding such report, remained unexpended. Such report shall be accompanied by estimates of the probable demands which may remain on each appropriation.

Second. A statement of all offers for contracts for supplies and services made during the preceding year, by classes, indicating such as have been accepted.

Third. A statement showing the amounts expended during the preceding fiscal year for wages of mechanics and laborers employed in building, repairing, or equipping vessels of the Navy, or in receiving and securing stores and materials for those purposes, and for the purchase of material and stores for the same purpose; and showing the cost or estimated value of the stores on hand, under this appropriation, in the navy-yards, at the commencement of the next preceding fiscal year; and the cost or estimated value of articles received and expended during the year; and the cost or estimated value of the articles belonging to this appropriation which may be on hand in the navy-yards at the close of the next preceding fiscal year.

Fourth. A statement of all acts done by him in making sale of any vessel or materials of the Navy; specifying all vessels and materials sold, the parties buying the same, and the amount realized therefrom, together with such other facts as may be necessary to a full understanding of his acts.—(1 May, 1820, c. 52, s. 2, v. 3, p. 567; 3 Mar., 1843, c. 83, v. 5, p. 617; 27 July, 1866, c. 287, s. 3, v. 14, p. 305.)

Amendment to this section was made by the act of June 22, 1910 (36 Stat., 591), which repealed the second clause of the section as quoted above with reference to contracts, and at the same time repealed a similar provision of section 3720, Revised Statutes.

OTHER REPORTS REQUIRED TO BE MADE.

Accounts: Bureau of Supplies and Accounts shall keep money accounts of the Naval Establishment so as to show direct and indirect charges in the cost of work and shall report same annually for the information of Congress (act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1267); shall also report annually to Secretary of the Navy all receipts and expenditures (act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 153).

Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is required to submit annual report to Congress through the President, including itemized statement of expenditures. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 930.)

Buildings rented: Heads of departments are required to report to Congress in annual estimates buildings rented for their departments, and the purpose and cost thereof. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 552.) The Secretary of the Treasury is required to report annually to Congress, in Book of Estimates, buildings rented by the Government in the District of Columbia, and the purpose and cost thereof. (Act July 16, 1892 (27 Stat., 199); amended by act May 1, 1913, sec. 3, 38 Stat., 3.)

Claims: Secretary of the Navy is required to report annually to Congress for payment, through the Secretary of the Treasury, amounts found to be due claimants for damages by collisions for which vessels of the Navy are considered responsible, where amount of claim does not exceed $500. (Act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 607.) Also shall report annually to Congress amount of claims adjusted by him for damage to privately owned property not occasioned by vessels of the Navy. (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 132.)

Condition of business: Heads of departments are required to make annual report to Congress, in the Book of Estimates, as to the condition of business in the department, and whether in arrears. (Act Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 7, 28 Stat., 808.) Monthly reports are to be made to head of department as to condition of business in the bureaus and offices of the department at Washington (act Mar. 15, 1898, sec. 7, 30 Stat., 317); and quarterly reports are to be made to the President by the heads of departments as to the condition of the public business and whether any branch thereof is in arrears (act Mar. 15, 1898, sec. 7, 30 Stat., 317).

Contingent funds: Heads of departments are required to make annual report to Congress of detailed expenditures from contingent funds of the department and of the bureaus and offices thereof. (Sec. 193, R. S.; act Mar. 3, 1877, 19 Stat., 306.)

Disbursing officers are required to make annual reports to heads of departments of disbursements by them, and heads of departments are required to communicate result of such reports to Congress. (Sec. 193, R. S.)

Employees: Annual report by Secretary of the Navy to Congress is required, of amount expended for civilians employed on clerical duty, or in any other capacity than ordinary mechanics and workmen, from "Pay of the Navy," and other naval appropriations (act Jan. 30, 1885, sec. 3, 23 Stat., 295); a similar report is required to be made by the Secretary of the Navy in the annual Book of Estimates of the number and compensation of persons employed from "Increase of the Navy," and other general appropriations (act Apr. 17, 1900, 31 Stat., 117); report is also to be made in the annual estimates of persons employed for technical services from appropriations, "Engineering," "Construction and repair," "Ordnance and ordnance stores," and from appropriations and allotments under the Bureau of Yards and Docks (see annual legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation acts—e. g., act Mar. 3, 1917, 39 Stat., 1100, 1101).

Employees at navy yards: Secretary of the Navy shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons employed from lump sum appropriations for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service at navy yards and stations and offices under the Navy Department, their duties, and the amount paid to each. (Act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 755.)

Employees detailed: Heads of departments are required to report to Congress, in the annual Book of Estimates, employees detailed to other offices, in accordance with section 166, Revised Statutes, as amended. (Act Mar. 2, 1895, sec. 7, 28 Stat., 808.)

Employees inefficient: Heads of departments are required to report, in the annual Book of Estimates, number of employees in each bureau and office below a fair standard of efficiency, and the salary of each. (Act July 11, 1890, sec. 2, 26 Stat., 268.)

Estimates: Extracts from annual reports of heads of departments and bureaus relating to estimates for appropriations and the necessity therefor, are to be included in the Book of Estimates by the Secretary of the Treasury. (Act Mar. 3, 1875, sec. 3, 18 Stat., 370.) Report to accompany estimates showing amount of outstanding appropriation, if any, which will probably be required for each particular item of expenditure. (Sec. 3665, R. S.) [Compare laws cited under section 430, Revised Statutes, as to restriction upon "notes" following estimates.]

Exchanges of typewriters and labor-saving devices in part payment for new machines shall be reported annually to Congress, with details relating thereto. (Act Mar. 4, 1915, sec. 5, 38 Stat., 1161.)

Pay of naval personnel: Secretary of the Navy is required to report annually to Congress amount of pay and allowances for all officers and enlisted men. (See annual naval appropriation acts, e. g., act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 928.)

Public printing: Quarterly report of work done in departmental branches of Government Printing Office is to be made to the head of each department by the person designated to approve requisitions for the department, and such reports are to be transmitted to the Public Printer for his annual report to Congress. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 31, 28 Stat., 605.) Public Printer to report annually to Congress the cost of operating each departmental branch of the Government Printing Office (act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 31, 28 Stat., 605); a detailed statement of each account with the departments for printing and binding (act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 22, 28 Stat., 604); and number of copies of each department report and document printed upon requisition by the department, and titles and numbers of books bound for officers (act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 19, 28 Stat., 603.)

Publications received and distributed: Detailed report thereof is to be made annually to Congress by the head of department. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 92, 28 Stat., 623.)

Register of officers of the Navy: By Senate resolution of December 13, 1815 (Annals of Congress, 14 Cong., 1st sess., 1815-1816, pp. 21, 22), it was "Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be requested to furnish annually, on the first of January, each member of the Senate with a copy of the Register of the Officers of the Army and Navy of the United States." [From 1840 to 1861, inclusive, the annual Navy Register bore on its title page "Printed by order of the Secretary of the Navy, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States of December 13, 1815." A House resolution of January 23, 1812 (Annals of Congress, 12 Cong., 1st sess., pt. 1, p. 929), and another of March 3, 1813, required registers to be submitted for those years only. Provision is made by act of January 12, 1895, section 73 (28 Stat., 616), for the printing of 1,500 copies of the Navy Register for the use of the Senate and House. See file 27231-8, Feb. 7, 1911, and note to section 1457, R. S.]

Repairs or changes proposed upon vessels amounting to more than $300,000 in any case: Annual report thereof is to be made to Congress by Secretary of the Navy. (Act Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1195, as amended by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 605.) Annual report also to be made to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy, in detail, of amount expended for repairs to vessels, where such amounts exceed $200,000, for any one ship in any one fiscal year. (Act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 769.)

Sales of unserviceable vessels and materials are to be reported annually to Congress by Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1541, R. S.; act Aug. 5, 1882, sec. 2, 22 Stat., 296.) A detailed statement of the proceeds of all sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other public property of any kind, shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, as a separate communication and not in the Book of Estimates. (Sec. 3672, R. S., amended by act Feb. 27, 1877, 19 Stat., 249, and act June 25, 1910, sec. 6, 36 Stat., 773.) Heads of departments must furnish Secretary of the Treasury, within 30 days after close of each fiscal year, statement of money arising from proceeds of public property or other source, which was not paid into the General Treasury, and detailed expenditures, if any, from such fund, which statement shall be transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress at beginning of each regular session. (Act June 30, 1906, sec. 5, 34 Stat., 763.)

Secretary of Treasury is to report to Congress annually application of money appropriated for the Navy Department (sec. 260, R. S.); also, to report annually to Congress detailed receipts and expenditures in the naval service, balances on hand, and amounts lost or unaccounted for (act June 19, 1878, 20 Stat., 167); and to report annually to Congress officers who have been delinquent in rendering their accounts and officers indebted to the United States (act May 28, 1896, sec. 4, 29 Stat., 179, amending act July 31, 1894, 28 Stat., 209).

Supplies: Bureau of Supplies and Accounts is required to report annually to Congress the money value of supplies on hand, supplies purchased and expended during year, and balances remaining (act Mar. 2, 1889, 25 Stat., 817); also, to report annually to the Secretary of the Navy all receipts and expenditures (act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 153).

Travel: Annual report is required to be made to Congress in detail by heads of departments of travel performed on official business, from Washington to points outside of District of Columbia, by officers or employees of such departments other than special agents, inspectors, or employees who are required to constantly travel. (Act May 22, 1908, sec. 4, 35 Stat., 244.)

Useless papers: Report to Congress by head of department is required whenever useless papers accumulated in files of department should be disposed of. (Act Feb. 16, 1889, 25 Stat., 672; act Mar. 2, 1895, 28 Stat., 933.) Commanders in chief of fleets are to make report to the Secretary of the Navy of useless papers accumulated in files of vessels of the Navy (act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329); and Secretary of the Navy is required to make detailed report to Congress of useless papers destroyed at navy yards (act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 929).

DISTRIBUTION, PRINTING, ETC., OF REPORTS.

Distribution: No report, document, or publication of any kind distributed from an executive department shall contain any notice that the same is sent with "the compliments" of an officer of the Government, or with any special notice that it is so sent, except that notice that it has been sent, with a request for an acknowledgment of its receipt, may be given. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat. 620; see also acts

Mar. 3, 1893, 27 Stat., 612; and Aug. 5, 1892, 27 Stat., 388.)

Distribution of publications for any executive department, except maps, weather reports, weather cards, orders, instructions, directions, notices, or circulars of information, shall be made by the Public Printer, including addressing, wrapping, mailing, etc., in accordance with mailing lists or franked slips furnished by the department. (Act Aug. 23, 1912, sec. 8, 37 Stat., 411.) All reports or documents to be distributed for Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall be folded and distributed from the folding rooms of the Senate and House of Representatives. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 71, 28 Stat., 612.)

Ownership of publications: Government publications furnished officers for official use shall be delivered to their successors on the expiration of their official term. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 74, 28 Stat., 620.)

Printing authorized: Heads of executive departments shall direct whether reports made to them by bureau chiefs and chiefs of divisions shall be printed or not. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 89, 28 Stat., 622.) No book or document not having to do with the ordinary business transactions of the executive departments shall be printed on the requisition of any executive department unless expressly authorized by Congress. (Act Mar. 3, 1905, 33 Stat., 1249.) No document or matter shall be printed except that which is authorized by law, and necessary to the public business; and executive officers before transmitting their annual reports shall carefully examine same and all accompanying documents and exclude therefrom all matter, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports are necessary and relate entirely to the transaction of the public business. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 94, 28 Stat., 623.) Illustrations, maps, etc., are to be excluded from annual reports except as necessary (act Aug. 30, 1890, 26 Stat., 411); appropriation for printing and binding shall not be used for any illustration, engraving, or photograph in any document or report ordered printed by Congress unless the order to print expressly authorizes the same, nor in any document or report of any executive department until the head of the department shall certify in a letter transmitting such report that the illustration is necessary and relates entirely to the transaction of public business (act Mar. 3, 1905, 33 Stat., 1213).

Printing, cost of: Printing and binding of documents and reports emanating from the executive departments shall be charged in part to allotment of appropriation for printing and binding of the department, and in part to the allotment for printing and binding for Congress. (Act Mar. 30, 1906, 34 Stat., 825.) Any executive departments submitting reports or documents in response to inquiries from Congress shall submit therewith estimate of the probable cost of printing the usual number, where such reports or documents exceed 50 pages. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 2, 28 Stat., 601, as amended by Act Mar. 1, 1907, 34 Stat., 1012.)

Printing, number of copies: No report, publication, or document shall be printed in excess of 1,000 of each in any one fiscal year, without authorization therefor by Congress, except that of the annual report of the head of the department, without appendices, there may be printed not to exceed 5,000 copies bound in pamphlet form; and of the reports of chiefs of bureaus without appendices there may be printed not to exceed 2,500 copies bound in pamphlet form; etc. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 89, 28 Stat., 622.)

Printing, by Government Printing Office: All printing, binding, and blank books for the executive department of the Government shall be done at the Government Printing Office, unless otherwise provided by law. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 87, 28 Stat., 622.)

Printing ordered by Congress: Publications ordered printed by Congress, other than reports of committees, shall be known as Senate and House documents, and numbered consecutively. (Res. Jan. 15, 1908, sec. 1, 35 Stat., 565.) "Usual number" of reports and documents, prescribed by statute, shall be printed when ordered by Congress and distributed as specifically provided for to libraries and other designated depositories, etc. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 54, amended by act June 25, 1910, 36 Stat., 868.) Of the annual reports of the departments to Congress, there shall be printed, in addition to the "usual number," 1,000 copies for the Senate, and 2,000 for the House. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 73, 28 Stat., 612, 615.) The departmental edition, if any, of publications originating in or prepared by an executive department, shall be printed concurrently with the "usual number." (Res. Jan. 15, 1908, sec. 1, 35 Stat., 565.) Public documents and reports may be printed for Congress or executive departments in two or more editions, not to exceed the total number of copies authorized. (Res. Mar. 30, 1906, 34 Stat., 826.) Title of publications printed by order of Congress for distribution by the Superintendent of Documents to State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories shall be the title suggested by the subject of the volume. (Res. Jan. 15, 1908, sec. 2, 35 Stat., 566.)

Printing requisition: No printing shall be done for the executive departments without a special requisition, signed by the chief of the department, and filed with the Public Printer. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, secs. 89 and 93, 28 Stat., 622 and 623.)

Sale authorized: Copies of reports are to be furnished by Public Printer to all applicants, upon payment in advance of printing, not to exceed 250 to any one applicant. (Act Jan. 12, 1895, sec. 42, 28 Stat., 607.) Public documents may be reprinted for sale by order of the Superintendent of Documents, approved by the department from which they originated. (Res. Mar. 28, 1904, 33 Stat. 584.)

Time of making annual reports: Where not otherwise specified, annual reports to Congress are to be made at commencement of each regular session. (Sec. 195, R. S.) Neglect or refusal of any officer to make any report within the time prescribed by law is punishable by fine of not more than $1,000. (Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 101, 35 Stat., 1107.)
